The people scarcely ever come in to our Sunday evening meetings; but last Sunday evening five came through the rain, and we had a blessed meeting, and some testimonies from the Greeks also. One of the women, who has been driven from her house because of the dripping, said she praised the Lord for the rain anyhow, because it was needed for the crops; and her face looked so bright when she said it that I thought it was a pretty good testimony from a person that we do not consider a Christian, and I wondered if many Christians at home would praise him so heartily under the circumstances. She and her sister-in-law, who was with her, have been to our meetings a number of times, and seem much interested. Her brother-in-law came also this night and paid good attention. We are praying that both families may be saved. They seem better than most of the Greek families, and though poor they are honest and upright. Mr. Z.'s mother praised the Lord for keeping her for many years, and for taking care of her and so much a good son. Mr. Z. also told them some of his own experience, how the Lord had delivered him from strong drink and from the use of tobacco. All the men here drink and smoke, without a single exception that we know of. He also told them that he took the Lord as his healer and that for the past two years he had not taken any medicine, and related a number of instances of answers to prayer both in his own case and that of others. He told them that Sister Hayden also took the Lord as her healer. He said this was the first testimony meeting that he had ever had among the Greeks. We have had three services on Sunday ever since we have been here, and we also have two services during the week on Monday and Friday evenings, and of course we have family worship every morning and evening, and quite often some of the Greeks happen in, about that time and we manage to keep them, and at such a time Mr. Z. generally preaches a little sermon to them besides. In this way we manage to reach a good many who could not be persuaded to come on Sunday. When they come to make a call or for medicine or on any errand and wish to hear us play, as they generally do, we play and sing some Gospel pieces to them, and by explaining them they often become interested and thus the way is opened to talk with them on things pertaining to their salvation.

Mr. Sakellarios, the Baptist missionary, at whose house we were so hospitably entertained while in Athens, was here with us a number of weeks during the summer, and his niece, Anastasia, a young lady, came with him. While here she was baptized, and we gave a little history of the outcome of it. More than three weeks ago there was an article in one of the Athens papers to the effect that poor Anastasia is in the hands of the authorities in Athens for refusing to return home with her mother and embrace the Greek religion again. About three months ago her mother, hearing that she had embraced the Christian religion, and that she expected to go to America before long, came to see her and tried in every way in her power to persuade her to return home with her, without, however, making the least impression upon her daughter. Then when the mother found that she could do nothing with her herself she went to the Greek authorities about it and had Anastasia brought before the court. The superintendent of the police in Athens not being able to decide the matter himself delivered her over to the higher authorities; but even they could do nothing, because Anastasia stoutly refused to go. Then they sent word to her father to come on, and the case is before the court, and she is kept in the house of one of the congressmen in some way as a prisoner. Notice has been given to the authorities at Piræus, the sea-port of Athens, that every steamer shall be searched before leaving port in order to prevent her escape in that way. They are afraid that these dreadful American missionaries and the American society may send her away to America and they will lose her forever. If she stands firm in this her first great trial the name of the Lord will be much glorified. We have been led to pray much for her.

I suppose that this will be a surprise to you, that after Mr. S. has spent so much money for her education she should be treated thus by her parents. She has been with Mr. S. nine years and she is now 17 years old. But I suppose that everything would have gone along smoothly if she had not embraced Christianity. Music, French, English and the Greek studies were all very nice, her parents thought, and they looked upon it as a grand thing for their daughter to have such an education; but when the mother heard that her daughter had been baptized into another faith she expressed her feelings as follows: "They have turned her brains; they have changed her religion." She repeated this to the superintendent of the police with tears running down her cheeks. Again in another place she said, "They will send my daughter to America." The paper states that she cried this out hopelessly before the court. I hope you will pray for Mr. Sakellarios. He is a very dear spiritual brother, and we think a great deal of him.

We had not had any word directly from Mr. S. when I wrote the above, Jan. 26th. We have received a letter from him saying that Anastasia ran away to England with the young Englishman to whom she was engaged to be married, so that when her father came to find her she had gone, and Mr. S. was put in prison; but he was not allowed by his friends to stay there very long; or perhaps we should say the Lord did not let him stay there very long. As soon as they learned that he was an American citizen, they wanted to get rid of him; and when Trecoupes, the prime minister, heard of it, he was quite indignant and said: "Why did they arrest a man for nothing without the authority of the government?" and he was released at once. Trecoupes, though not a Christian, is a friend to Mr. S., and we are praying that he and his sister Sophia, who assists him in his duties, may be converted.

Since this trouble began several weeks ago the different houses of worship of the missionaries in Athens are full of people. We are praying that many of them may be saved.

LITERATURE.

THE TESTIMONY OF HISTORY TO THE TRUTH OF SCRIPTURE: HISTORICAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Gathered from Ancient Records, Monuments and Inscriptions, by Rev. Geo. Rawlinson, M. A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, etc. With Additions by Prof. Horatio B. Hackett, D. D., LL. D.; and a Preface by H. L. Hastings, Editor of the Christian. One volume, pp. 237. Boston: H. L. Hastings—Scriptural Tract Society, 47 Cornhill.

George Rawlinson ranks high as an English Orientalist and historian, through his several publications, the most important of which was "The Seven Great Monarchies of the Eastern World, (1862-1875)." His "Historical Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Records," of which the volume before us is a partial reproduction, was given to the world in 1860, and has justly gained an enviable reputation as an unanswerable testimony to the truth of the Bible. Every fact, every circumstance, that tends to confirm the truth of the Scriptural history paves the way for the admission of its religious teachings. Therefore, the value of this volume is at once established as a medium of intelligence that should make the Bible more precious, from day to day, as God's great revelation of his wisdom, power, grace, mercy and peace to sinful man.

The additions to the original work by Prof.

Hackett, editor of the American edition of Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and one of the Revisers of the New Testament, in the form of explanatory notes and appendices, serve also to increase the interest and value of Dr. Rawlinson's researches.

The volume is eminently practical, and its range of topics extends over a great variety of information gathered from the highest standard authorities. Carefully read, and candidly considered, it cannot fail to impress the most skeptical with the fact that God's Word has imperative claims upon our belief and obedience.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Scribner's for April contains much to attract the attention, please the eye and interest the reader; but these are features common to most issues of this favorite magazine. The illustrations, as usual, are numerous and excellent. Among articles of particular prominence are the following: Unpublished Letters of Carlyle, characteristic and entertaining; The Restoration House, a relic of English history at Rochester in Kent, by Stephen T. Aveling; The Cities that Were Forgotten—"the bones of the three chief cities of the Saline: Abo, Cuara, and Tabira," by Chas. F. Lummis; Anne of Brittany's Chateaux in the Valley of the Loire, by Theodore Andrea Cook; An Artist in Japan, by Robert Blum; The Arts Relating to Women, and their exhibition at Paris, by Octave Uzanne; The Crisis of the Schipka Pass (Historic Moments), by Archibald Forbes. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett continues her "The One I Knew the Best of All"—that choice bit of human nature. A New England Farm, and In Rented Rooms, are pleasant pictures of rural and metropolitan life. One or two stories and several poems will please the younger reader. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons.

Home and Country for March possesses many undeniable marks of popularity, both in letter and spirit, and in its numerous embellishments. It is probably, by far, the best number of this magazine ever issued. Four Art Supplements, copies of paintings—Sisters, The Happy Family, Innocence, and Thinking of Him—are presented. Of the more solid material, we may mention the following: From the Depths, by Commander and Mrs. Ballington Booth, an illustrated exposition of the "slum work" performed in New York and elsewhere by the Salvation Army (with portraits); A Trip to California in 1854, illustrated with pioneer incidents, by Joseph H. Nunez; Dress and Its Science, illustrated, by Mrs. S. S. Wood; A Castle of Legends, illustrated, and The Tricks of "Lightning Calculators," by Samuel Jaros. The story department includes: The Adventures of a Poor Aristocrat, from the French of Octave Feuillet, illustrated; Dr. Patterson's Strategem, and A Confession—the Story of Montezuma, the Last Emperor of Mexico, illustrated, by Jay Ross. There are, in addition, several poems, of more or less interest, by various writers. New York: Joseph W. Kay, publisher, 96-98 Maiden Lane.

The Preachers' Magazine (April issue), for preachers, teachers and Bible students, is rich in homiletics, hints, suggestions, outline studies and methods, especially adapted for the engendering of thought and application of Scriptural truths. The English editors are Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory; but American editors and contributors make monthly additions to its contents and thus increase its value and interest. This magazine is published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York City.

PAMPHLETS.

Those who are interested in the remnant of the American Indian tribes, their welfare, education and conversion, will find the publications of "The Indian Rights Association," at 1305 Arch street, Philadelphia, excellent reading. Among the recent pamphlets issued by this Association are: (1) "Report of Hon. Theodore Roosevelt made to the United States civil service commission, upon a visit to certain Indian reservations and Indian schools in South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas." (2) "Cheyennes and Arapahoes Revisited, a statement of their agreement and contract with attorneys," by C. C. Painter, Washington agent of the Indian Rights Association. In these pamphlets, which may be obtained by application to the Association, the reader will find exhibited what we believe to be the true relations existing between our government and our Indian wards. If we have wronged them, let it be known, and let us right them; and, under all circumstances, we should understand our duty as a nation towards them, and perform it in a Christian spirit.

If any reader of the Cynosure is personally interested in the promotion of social purity, and believes that every safeguard should be thrown about our young people to save them from the snare of the seducer, he will find a little pamphlet containing the constitution and by-laws of the Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity (at 33 East Twenty-second street, New York City), particularly enlightening and encouraging. The pamphlet includes, also, the address of the president of the League and the secretary and treasurer's annual reports for 1891-92. It is a wholesome reform.

IN BRIEF.

During 1892 from California the total export of fruits was 409,917,216 pounds, requiring 20,495 freight cars to transport it, an increase of 16 per cent over 1890.

Doctor F. L. Oswald figures it out that the population of this country a century hence will be 300,000,000. He thinks it likely the great city of the future will be in the Piedmont region.

Since 1867, when the diamond fields of South Africa were first discovered, there have been exported from Cape Colony more than 50,000,000 carats of diamonds, the value of which amounts to £70,000,000.

The dairy and food commissioner of Ohio, F. B. McNeal, has been actively attending to the duties of his office during the past nine months, and reports an appalling state of affairs. More than 80 per cent, he says, of the 500 samples analyzed by his office have been found to be adulterated. The adulterations have covered almost every article of food, and the adulterants used have included every conceivable article possible to incorporate with a food product.

It was a rule with ex-President Hayes when he had anything particularly disagreeable on hand, to do it the first thing in the morning. There was a great deal of philosophy in this plan. In the morning the mind is calm and fresh, and can undertake and achieve; still more, if one resolutely performs the difficult task the first thing in the morning, then it is done; but if it is put off until a later hour, and a later and a later, finally it is put off till the next day.

The present year has seen inaugurated a number of humanitarian measures in Europe. Among the most noteworthy are the arming of the Irish constabulary with ordinary police truncheons in lieu of the bayonets which they have hitherto worn and used, and a decree issued by the Russian government exempting female convicts from corporeal punishment. Solitary confinement and a bread-and-water diet are henceforth to take the place of the practice of flogging and of loading refractory women prisoners with chains.

New ideas in paving have lately attracted attention. Among these is the paving of a bridge by a German engineer with India rubber, the result having been so satisfactory as to induce its application on a much larger scale, a point in its favor being that it is much more durable than asphalt and not slippery. In London a section of roadway under the gate leading to the departure platform of the St. Pancras terminus has for some time past been paved with this material, with the effect of deadening the sound made when being passed over on wheels, besides the comfortable elasticity afforded to foot passengers.

Along Grisly Bear river, in the Rockies, there are many bear haunts or wintering dens, which the Indian guides point out to travelers. According to Indian stories, a bear will lie in a dark and secluded retreat all winter without food or nourishment, sucking its paws. The bear does not burrow in the ground, but covers himself with fallen leaves. Over the den the snow is often many feet deep, and the bear's hiding place is only discovered by an air hole so small that nothing but the keen eye of a savage could find it. The Indians say that the Rocky Mountain bear lies thus in a torpid state from December until March.

By a treaty signed at Geneva, Switzerland, forty nations agreed to hold as sacred from attack all material, stores, or persons protected by the badge of the Red Cross, and now this society has some 700 acres of land near Bedford, Indiana, that will never be disturbed by the carnage of war, no matter what may come. It was tendered to the society by Dr. Jos. Gardner, to be used as a depot of supplies whenever occasion may arise, and is the only piece of ground on the western continent where armies may not go. Miss Clara Barton has accepted the gift for the society, and promises that it shall be marked by appropriate insignia as a notice to all the world. It is well that even so much of the earth is preserved against the tramp of armies. May the territory increase.

The three oldest known pieces of wrought iron in existence are the sickle blade that was found by Belzoni under the base of a sphinx in Karnac, near Thebes; the blade found by Col. Vyse imbedded in the mortar of one of the pyramids, and a portion of a cross-cut saw which Mr. Layard exhumed at Nimrud—all of which are now in the British Museum. Another piece of iron, an account of which might not be inappropriate in this connection, is the wrought bar of Damascus steel which King Porus presented to Alexander the Great. This bar, which is of unknown antiquity, is still carefully preserved in the National Turkish Museum at Constantinople.

The Arrival of Spring.

When Spring arrives, the importance of taking some good blood-purifying, strengthening medicine, is recognized by nearly everybody. For at no other season is the system so much in need of, or so susceptible to, the benefit imparted by that reliable medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. It expels from the blood all the impurities which have accumulated in the winter, cures sick headache and dyspepsia, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and drives away THAT TIRED FEELING which may be the consequence or forerunner of disease.

"In the spring my whole system was completely run down. Two months ago I began to use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using two bottles I find my appetite restored, my nervous system toned up, and my general health greatly improved. I therefore take pleasure in telling about Hood's Sarsaparilla, and several persons to whom I have recommended it all speak of it in glowing terms. I consider Hood's Sarsaparilla has no equal." GEORGE BRATT, Gallipolis, Ohio.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers can be applied when at home, and is uniformly successful in coloring a brown or black. Hence its great popularity.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1893

The fear of the Lord is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding.—Job 28: 28.

SELF-SACRIFICE IN RELIGION.

That there are some faithful Christian men who have drifted into Freemasonry, and who did not at once discover the iniquitous character of the institution, cannot be doubted. Our opposition to the unholy system ought not to blind us to the moral excellence of some who may be involved in it.

But the main reason why men are entrapped in the secret lodge system is, that they have not sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. They have forgotten that the Lord has said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." In other words, the great element of self-sacrifice has dropped out of their religion. Like Demas, they "have loved this present world;" and, while they have meant to be religious, they have, perhaps unconsciously, undertaken to serve both God and Mammon.

The success of our anti secrecy reform depends, more than anything else, on our getting a better conception of what is involved in real Christian character. Especially ought we to remember that Jesus said: "He that loveth father or mother (or his own life) more than me is not worthy of me," and "if any man come unto me, and forsake not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." We need a religion like Paul's, that shall "count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ."

THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

Since the issue of last week's Cynosure, in which some of the regulations relating to the comfort of visitors at the Columbian Exposition were criticized, President Higinbotham has authorized the publication of the following, with the request that it be given the widest circulation:

The Exposition will be opened for visitors on May 1. An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that Hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at 1 cent a glass.

Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of 5 cents will be made.

The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitors to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimaux village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these, as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance, a small fee will be charged.

Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms, in various parts of the grounds.

Before the article in the Cynosure was written, a letter was addressed to Director Bryan, giving him an opportunity to refute the charges of extortion that were then currently reported; but no answer was received. The proclamation of President Higinbotham is evidently the result of a modification of the offensive regulations.

MORAL BOOMERANGS.

The pretended "bull" of Pope Leo XIII., said to have been issued December 26, 1891, absolving all citizens of the United States from their oaths of allegiance to our government, and commanding that on or about September 5, 1893, there shall commence, at Chicago, a general massacre of Protestants, ought not to have deceived anyone. Surely no one of fair intelligence would for a moment believe that such a document could have been put forth by so intelligent a man as the Pope, or that, if he had even dared to publish it, it would have been suffered by his counselors to go out before the world. Yet it is to be feared that many simple-minded persons have been deceived by it, as this pretended "bull" has had an extensive circulation in the American press.

A similar story comes from Bay City, Mich., of a drunken Roman Catholic priest going to a house, burning a Bible, and insulting the inmates. A legal investigation showed that the priest was entirely innocent, and that the whole performance had been planned by anti-Catholics, to bring Romanism into disrepute.

Surely no Protestant Christian would be guilty of either of these schemes of falsehood and fraud. They doubtless are specimens of secret lodge morality, and but serve to illustrate the character of those organizations that are based on the principle that "the end justifies the means". Jesuitism has the prior claim to this sort of wickedness; but it seems likely to be outtrivalled by the secret anti-Catholic organizations.

Especially, ought Protestant Christians to earnestly denounce and oppose all such schemes, not only because of their intrinsic wickedness, but because these things are moral boomerangs, that will surely come down with dreadful force upon the heads of those who use them.

Romanism is to be met and opposed by the principles of the Gospel of Christ. The Roman church is to be held to responsibility for her current teachings and her present practices—not for those of three hundred years ago. Truth is the antidote for error. The remedy for false religion is true religion; and any departure from correct Christian principles by the opposers of Romanism will inevitably bring on a conflict, in which Rome will have the decided advantage.

A NON-UNION PRINTER.

The following appeared in the Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel of March 23:

A committee of non-union employing printers of this city, headed by T. Edward Clark, called on Mr. Cleveland and presented a petition signed by non-union printers of Washington, asking him to recognize non-union men in his selection of the public printer and protesting against the efforts made by a delegation of union printers, headed by Congressman Amos C. W. Edwards, to induce Mr. Cleveland not to appoint C. W. Cummings of Delaware to the office, on the ground that he is not a union man. The petition closes thus: "We pray that in exercising your presidential prerogative in appointing a public printer you will impartially consider the rights of that immensely larger, less noisy, less guilty, body of your industrial fellow-citizens who are members of no unions, no boycotting labor organizations, and that the public printer whom you shall select will be a man who will remember that non-union printers have rights to be respected equal to those of union printers, and that as good common citizens of a common country they have as much right to labor at the case in the Government Printing Office as have members of any printers' union."

For a number of years a most arrogant despotism has been maintained at Washington by the Typographical Unions. Even the United States Congress has had to bow to their behests. In appointments they have had, heretofore, their own way, and no one could get a place in the Government Printing Office who did not become a member. It remains to be seen what so independent a man as Mr. Cleveland will do in this matter.

Never was there better opportunity to show himself the President of the people rather than of a class. It would rejoice many hearts to see, for once, the ring rule broken down.

THE WORLD'S FAIR SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Plans for the model Sunday-school building, to be erected in connection with the Columbian Exposition, have been adopted. Thirty-eight competing designs were offered for the prizes to be awarded for the best four.

The jury awarded the first prize of $500 to H. Curtis Hoffman and Frank Upham of Chicago, who presented a joint design. The second prize of $250 went to Weary & Kramer of Akron, O. The third prize of $150 was taken by Jackson & Rivinus of Denver, Col. The fourth prize fell to E. O. Fallis & Co. of Toledo, O.

The design of Hoffman and Upham will, after a few slight alterations, be erected with all necessary speed, on the site selected on Stony Island avenue, just south of Fifty-seventh street, and facing the Exposition grounds.

The building is to be a combination of a large intermediate department room, lighted from above, and surrounding this on three sides the other department rooms, with galleries above, and all so arranged as to be thrown entirely open and free as desired, with every space in full view of the platform. In the particular design the surrounding department rooms have been made polygonal, so as to give the best possible light and air. The library is large enough for a reading-room also. Toilets are provided for visitors as well as pupils. The halls and staircases are to be broad, to afford ample exit in case of fire. The sliding partitions will contain the blackboards, and the partitions will be made with portieres hung on brass rods suspended from the ceiling.

This building is designed to be constructed of wood, with staff exterior and plain plastered interior, with frescoed ornaments. The roof may be of imitation red Spanish tile. The cost is based on a calculation of nine cents a cubic foot, and will amount to about $18,000.

The Cook County Sunday-school Association has pledged the sum of $10,000 for the furtherance of this enterprise, and has already raised about one-half of the amount. Schools that have not already contributed are requested to do so at once. Many of the States are making generous contributions. City schools that may desire it will be supplied with a speaker, familiar with all the details, to present the subject, if application is made to W. B. Jacobs, 132 LaSalle street, city.

THE DREAD OF WAR.

One of the results of the immense armies and the vastly improved methods of destruction that have been adopted by the European nations, is a dread of war. Whatever may be the hostility which one nation feels to another, and whatever may be the hopes of righting past wrongs, or securing greater advantages, there is something in the dreadful problem that confronts them that makes them fearful, and leads them "rather to bear the ills they have than fly to others that they know not of."

There is, too, the increased expensiveness of war. The great Krupp gun, to be exhibited at the Columbian Exhibition, not only cost an immense sum, and another immense sum for the cost of its handling, but each shot, to be thrown twelve miles, would cost over $1,200.

It would almost seem that Satan had overreached himself in stimulating these enormous and expensive war preparations. At least, it is quite obvious that they are means in the providence of God for preventing rather than promoting war. Surely there is a marked contrast between the first and the latter half of the present century. The last twenty years have been eminently peaceful. The repeated prophecies of war have had no fulfillment, and a great European conflict now seems farther off than ever.

But it does not follow that great armies and navies and immense war preparations are good in themselves. On the other hand, the danger now is that there will be a general revolt against oppressive taxation, and that when kings and princes shall "say peace and safety, then shall sudden destruction come upon them, and they shall not escape." The security for international peace is in justice towards all men, and in the dread of war because of its intrinsic wrongfulness, rather than because of its physical consequences.

As a nation we are drifting quite rapidly into the path of European countries, and coming to trust in our navy and coast defences, rather than in God, as our means of defence.

GOVERNMENT AND THE PROTECTION OF CITIZENS.

In the able address of Rev. J. M. Foster, in Tremont Temple, Boston, March 6, 1893, there is the remarkable statement that during Mr. Harrison's administration thirteen Negroes were burned alive, and over five hundred tortured by mobs in the South, and with no national protest.

It seems scarcely possible that this could have taken place in the last decade of the nineteenth century. But what especially astonishes us is, that 65,000,000 of people should not only have been powerless to either prevent or to punish such enormities, but could not even make as much protest against them as we have repeatedly done against the persecutions of the Jews in Russia, the exiles in Siberia, or the slave-traffic in Central Africa.

We cannot but reflect on the marked contrast between the course of our government towards those nations that have permitted wrongs done to American citizens, and its course towards far greater wrongs done at home.

In the early history of our nation, when but just recovering from the throes of our national birth, we went to war with Algiers to protect the rights of Americans. Somewhat later, our second war with Great Britain was, ostensibly, for "free trade and sailors' rights".

In repeated instances an earnest protest, together with a display of naval force, has secured the protection of a single citizen; and during this same administration there was no lack of energy in behalf of missionaries, in China and Turkey, of sailors in Chili, and even of seals in the Behring's Sea.

All this was wise and timely, but it is a monstrous anomaly, in the structure of our government, that when eleven Italians, who had been legally acquitted, were brutally murdered at New Orleans, the national government had no right of protest, and had to appease the just wrath of Italy with a present of $25,000. But when American citizens who have had no legal trial, and (in some instances) have been proved to be innocent of all crime, are shot, hung, and burned at the stake, with a complication of tortures that would shame an Apache Indian, our national executive has nothing to say. Even Mr. Cleveland but faintly alludes, in his Inaugural, to "the equal rights of all before the law, regardless of race or color".

It is doubtless an intricate problem to properly adjust the respective duties of the State and national governments. Doubtless the greater wrong is on the part of those States that have winked at these terrible crimes; nevertheless, a great nation that can protect its citizens in Chili and China ought to be able to protect them in Texas and Tennessee.

If the system of American slavery was such a gross dishonor to our republican government that it called for national and divine intervention, not less is this helplessness to enforce law, and protect the natural rights of our citizens, an abomination in the sight of man and God.

—In the poem "Appeal to Mothers," by Mrs. Daniel Powers, printed on the fifth page of the Cynosure for March 23, the first line of the last stanza should read: "Go, plead with your wandering boy, mother." By an oversight the word "wandering" was omitted, disarranging the tune and the sentiment of the song.

—In the principal cities of Kansas—Topeka, Leavenworth, Emporia, Fort Scott, Lawrence, Atchison and Wichita—12,356 women have registered prior to voting at the spring elections. The local contests will gather increased interest from this circumstance, if the women avail themselves properly of their privileges at the polls.

—The Annual District Anti-Secrecy Convention of Oregon and Washington will meet at Canby, Oregon, on the THIRD TUESDAY IN AUGUST, which is August 15, 1893. Arrangements are being made to secure the services of Bishop H. J. Becker, D.D. We desire as thorough an advertisement of the meeting as possible, and therefore request all papers, ministers and assemblies who are friendly to the cause to copy and announce.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the college agent, writes from Frenchtown, N. J., March 30, that he is about starting for Chicago, with a possible visit to friends in Ohio before reaching here. In the enjoyment of reasonably good health, he has had a pleasant sojourn among old friends in one of his former pastorates, preaching twice on Sundays, most of the time, and circulating anti-secrecy literature. He reports that our reform progresses but slowly in New Jersey, where the corrupt Legislature has aroused considerable feeling among the people by legalizing gambling race-tracks.

—It is better always, when encumbered with institutions of doubtful or evil character, to obey the divine injunction: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord; . . . and I will receive you." (2 Cor. 6:7.) This promise has had a faithful fulfillment, recently, in the case of the son of our old friend Rev. W. O. Dinius, of Harvey, Ill., who, while at work upon buildings adjacent to the Columbian Exposition, gave such satisfaction to his employers that he was promoted to the superintendence of a number of workmen. With the usual audacity of union laborers, they insisted that he should become as one of themselves by uniting with their secret organization. This he stoutly refused to do; and, rather than engage in a fruitless controversy, he resigned his position and retired from the work. Only a short time later he was rewarded by obtaining a more lucrative engagement. It pays to be courageous when enticed.

—The corresponding secretary has been much engaged for two or three weeks in preparations for the World's Fair and the special meetings which will mark the Quarter-centennial of the National Christian Association. He has lately addressed a Students' Volunteer Missionary meeting attended by delegates from a number of the seminaries and colleges in the vicinity of Chicago; also an opportunity was given to present the N. C. A. work briefly at the Presbyterian ministers' meeting, and secure the appointment of two delegates to our Annual Meeting Conference, June 20th. Last week he held a parlor meeting at the residence of Mr. E. A. Cook, of the N. C. A. Board. Dr. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, announced this meeting from his pulpit and invited Sunday-school teachers and members of the Christian Endeavor society to be present. Sixty persons were assembled, and a number expressed much satisfaction. During the next few weeks several church assemblies will be visited, and the work pressed, so far as possible.

—Dwight L. Moody has completed arrangements for a series of evangelical meetings to be conducted by himself in Chicago during the six months of the Columbian Exposition. For this purpose he has gathered a select staff of Christian workers from various parts of Europe and America, by whom Gospel meetings are to be led each night throughout the city, beginning May 1. The services will be divided into two sections, those held in churches and those held in tents. Meetings will be conducted in three churches, one in each division of the city. On the North Side the Chicago Avenue church will be used. On the West Side the Rev. Dr. Goodwin's church has been engaged, and the largest church on the South Side will be thrown open to the public. Among those who will assist in the work are: Professor R. A. Torrey, head of the Bible Institute; Thomas B. Hyde, pastor of the Chicago Avenue church; Major D. W. Little, Henry J. Openshaw, Frank Pierson, George D. McKay, Dr. W. G. Moorhouse, the Rev. Hubert Brook, Martou Smith, and the Rev. John McNeil. This is cheering information for this sin-cursed city.

OUR ANNIVERSARY YEAR.

Special work for the Quarter-centennial of the National Christian Association:

1. The World's Fair Exhibit of the history and work of the Association.
2. The special Conference connected with the annual meeting.
3. The Congress in the Art Palace, on the Lake Front, Chicago, provided by the World's Fair Congress Auxiliary, on or about Oct. 5th.

NOTES.

—The Chief of the Liberal Arts Department has given the N. C. A. a larger and better place for its exhibit. We have now 105, instead of 85, square feet in the northwest corner of the main building. This is a great convenience. The grant was made on Friday, after our plans had been fully described to the managers. It is an evidence that our exhibit is considered worthy of some respect by men who are able to judge. Let our friends everywhere mark this and show equal confidence by a hearty sympathy and strong financial support.

—Note the paragraph in Bro. W. B. Stoddard's letter this week, that the original model of the Morgau monument can be obtained through the kindness of Mrs. Bishop of Chambersburg, Pa. This will be a fine addition to our exhibit.

—Several prominent ministers have given their consent that their testimonies and portraits may be placed in the N. C. A. alcove. We hope to get others as eminent to give us the same privilege.

—The N. C. A. Board voted, on Friday, to hold the annual meeting June 20th. The Conference of Churches will be held in connection. Pray for this meeting. God may use it greatly for the promotion of his kingdom.

—To promote all these anniversary efforts we need special funds. Friends who have been giving regularly to the lecture work should not remit their effort; but, if God permits, let them add this year a quarter-centennial gift to make this anniversary a notable year for our reform. Whatever of this special fund is not needed for the special work of the year can aid the general work of the Association. Let the gifts come in for this fund, and let everyone who is able make the year and the sum correspond. A $25 share in this good work will be a good investment.

may know. Let us keep the homes free from these contaminations!

I spoke, according to Bro. Burkholder's arrangement, in the Salem U. B. church, four miles in the country, from where I write. Notwithstanding the farmers were engaged all day in hard work, there was a large attendance both evenings. The collections were good, and the new Cynosure subscriptions many.

Bro. Bishop, of blessed memory, residing at this place, secured the model from which the statue on the Morgan monument was made. Since his departure it has been treasured among the special relics; but Sister Bishop consents to loan it for the exhibition of the N. C. A. at the Columbian Exposition. It is in a good state of preservation, and will doubtless attract much interest.

April is my New York City month.

REFORM ORGANIZATIONS.

PRINCETON, Ind., March 28, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—At Oakdale, Ill., where I preached four times recently, there is a strong reform sentiment. The Covenanters have a large brick church here which cost about $15,000. Rev. Wm. Sloane, their first pastor, died during the war. He was the father of Dr. J. R. W. Sloane, and the only surviving member of the family is John M. Sloane, his oldest son, who resides here, and is known as an intelligent radical reformer, but is now in feeble health. His wife is a teacher of large experience, and is president of the W. C. T. U.

There is a Young People's Reform Society at Oakdale, with whom I met twice. They are led by Miss Berdella Hunter and Miss Sadie Anderson. I have hopes that they will carry out the idea suggested in the last Cynosure, to push the agitation of reform questions. There is also a similar organization at Princeton, Ind., whose meetings are held every other week in Mrs. Duncan's parlor, and whose members are in full sympathy with the anti-secret reform, and desirous of doing something for the cause. Miss Eliza Davis and Miss Margaret B. Stott are leaders in the organization at Princeton. They have been doing important work in sending out reform literature.

To the friends of reform all along the line we wish to say you cannot invest your time and means to better advantage than to do all you can to encourage the young people to organize and maintain effective societies for reform work. Such societies would interest them in the work of reform, and would train them for Christian work. There is temptation to substitute a mere prayer-meeting for reform organizations. Let these be combined, and let young and old be trained to ring out faithful testimony against the popular evils of our times.

At Princeton the Covenanter church is the only one in town that will open its doors for the discussion of the anti-secret question. It is the only one that Bro. Hinman could get when he spoke here, several years ago. They are without a pastor at present, but have a nice church building, only two blocks from the public square, and they have an earnest and working membership. Princeton is one of the best county seats, and is surrounded by the finest country in Southern Indiana.

I lectured last Monday evening in the Enon Baptist church, near Princeton, and on Tuesday evening in the Greenwood schoolhouse, near town, and met good audiences at both points.

I preached twice at Princeton on Sabbath.

Last week I lectured in the court house at Nashville, Ill.; and was entertained at the home of an old-time fellow-reformer, Mrs. N. Gregory.

THE HOME.

A MAN.

Before a boy has doffed his kilt
He wants a sword with a flashing hilt;
He must manage a train, though it be of chairs;
He must beat a drum; he must hunt for bears;
In fact, his highest ambition and plan,
His dearest wish is to be a man.

But many a boy is unmanly to-day
Because there were so many "ifs" in the way;
He scorns this "if" and he frowns at that;
He shirks his lesson to wield a bat;
And so he will go, as best he can,
From youth to old age without being a man.

Oh, there are so many "ifs" in the road
That leads to manhood's highest abode!
Kindness, purity, courage and truth,
Stumbling blocks these to many a youth:
For he who will not make these his own,
Can never reach manhood's glorious throne!

So who would be manly should keep in mind,
He must ever be gentle and brave and kind;
Obedient always to right's fair laws;
A brother to every noble cause;
Thus shall he serve God's cherished plan,
And come to the stature of a man.

SHOW YOUR COLORS.

I was riding on the train through the eastern section of North Carolina. Nothing can be flatter than that portion of the country, unless it be the religious experience of some people. The rain was pouring down fast, and for a person so inclined, not a better day and place for the blues could be found. Looking out of the car window I thought nothing more interesting to view than the trees, bony mules, and razor-back hogs. Groups of men, white and black, gathered at each station to see the train arrive and depart. Each passenger that entered brought in more damp, moisture, and blues.

Two men at last came in and took the seat in front of me. Shortly after, one of them took a bottle from his pocket, pulled the cork, and handed the bottle to his companion. He took a drink, and the smell of liquor filled the car. Then the first one took a drink, and back and forth the bottle passed, until at last it was empty and they were full. Then one of them commenced swearing, and such blasphemy I never heard in all my life. It made the very air blue—women shrank back, while the heads of men were uplifted to see where the stream of profanity came from. It went on for some time, until I began talking to myself. I always did like to talk to a sensible man.

"Henry, that man belongs to the devil."
"There is no doubt about that," I replied.
"He is not ashamed of it."
"Not a bit ashamed."
"Whom do you belong to?"
"I belong to the Lord Jesus Christ."
"Are you glad or sorry?"
"I am glad—very glad."
"Who in the car knows that man belongs to the devil?"

"Everybody knows that, for he has not kept it secret."

"Who in the car knows you belong to the Lord Jesus?"

"Why, no one knows it, for you see I am a stranger around here."

"Are you willing they should know whom you belong to?"

"Yes; I am willing."

"Very well, will you let them know it?"

I thought a moment, and then said: "By the help of my Master, I will."

Then straightening up and taking a good breath, I began singing in a voice that could be heard by all in the car:

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

Before I had finished the first verse and chorus the passengers had crowded down around me, and the blasphemer had turned round and looked at me with a face resembling a thunder cloud. As I finished the chorus, he said: "What are you doing?"

"I am singing," I replied.

"Well," said he, "any fool can understand that."

"I am glad you understood it."

"What are you singing?"

"I am singing the religion of the Lord Jesus."

"Well, you quit."

"Quit what?"

"Quit singing your religion on the cars."

"I guess not," I replied, "I don't belong to the Quit family; my name is Mead. For the last half hour you have been standing by your master; now for the next half hour I am going to stand up for my Master."

"Who is my master?"

"The devil is your master—while Christ is mine. I am as proud of my Master as you are of yours. Now I am going to have my turn, if the passengers don't object."

A chorus of voices cried out: "Sing on, stranger, we like that."

I sang on, and as the next verse was finished the blasphemer turned his face away, and I saw nothing of him after that but the back of his head, and that was the handsomest part of him. He left the train soon after, and I'm glad to say I've never seen him since. Song after song followed, and I soon had other voices to help me. When the song service ended, an old man came to me, put out his hand, and said: "Sir, I owe you thanks and a confession."

"Thanks for what?"

"Thanks for rebuking that blasphemer."

"Don't thank me for that, but give thanks to my Master. I try to stand up for him wherever I am. What about the confession?"

"I am in my eighty-third year. I have been a preacher of the Gospel for over sixty years. When I heard that man swearing so, I wanted to rebuke him. I rose from my seat two or three times to do so, but my courage failed. I have not much longer to live, but never again will I refuse to show my colors anywhere."—Rev. C. H. Mead.

TRUSTING MAN AND CHRIST.

The foreman in a factory became anxious about his soul. He was directed to Christ as the sinner's only refuge; but seemed to be without result. At last his master wrote a note, asking him to come to him at his office. When he came into the room, his master inquired, "Do you want to see me, James?" James was confounded, and holding up the note, said: "The letter! the letter!" "Oh," said his master, "you believed that I wanted to see you, and when I sent you the message, you came at once." "Surely, sir; surely, sir," replied James. "Well, see, here is another letter sending for you by One equally in earnest," said his master, holding up a slip of paper with some texts of Scripture written on it. James took the paper and began to read slowly: "Come—unto—me—all—ye—that—labor," etc. His lips quivered, his eyes filled with tears, and, like to choke with emotion, he grasped his large red handkerchief, with which he covered his face, and there he stood for a few moments, not knowing what to do. At length he inquired: "Am I just to believe that in the same way I believed your letter?" "Just in the same way," rejoined the master. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is still greater." This expedient was owned of God in setting James at liberty. He was a happy believer that very night.—Exchange.

THE BEST AND THE WORST.

A philosopher named Xanthus desired to have a feast for some of his friends, and he ordered his chief servant to provide the best things in the market. The servant thereupon bought a great number of tongues and instructed the cook to serve them up with different sauces. When the feast was ready, the first, second and third courses, and the side dishes and the desserts were all tongue. Xanthus was greatly enraged. "Did I not order you," said he, "to buy the best things the market afforded?" "And," replied the servant, "have I not obeyed your orders, Master Xanthus? Is there anything better than tongue? Is not the tongue the bond of civil society, the key of sciences, and the organ of truth and reason? By means of the tongue cities are built, governments established and instructed; with the tongue men persuade, instruct and preside in as-semblies." "Well, then," said Xanthus, thinking to catch him, "this same company will dine with me to-morrow; and as I wish to diversify my entertainment, go to market again and buy the worst things you can find." The next day his servant provided nothing but tongues. Xanthus, in a violent passion, demanded an explanation. "Master," said the servant, "is there anything worse than tongue? Is not the tongue the instrument of all strife and contention, the fomentor of lawsuits, and the source of divisions and wars? Is it not the organ of error, of lies, of calumny and blasphemy?" Xanthus said no more! The servant had convinced him that the tongue, when used aright, could be truthfully considered the best thing in the world, and the worst of all things when put to a wrong use.—Harper's Young People.

CANNOT TAKE AWAY.

However beautiful the rose upon the breast of the bride, no art has taught us how to make its fragrance and loveliness perpetual. However perfect a day in June, it is followed by its sure December. Bright as are the skies above the head of the laughing boy, there comes a time when the voice of the brook no longer sings to him the old-time invitation to the forest. However fair the place, time will stain its beauty with tears and crumble its strength with decay. However mighty the empire, the day will come when upon its broken heaps the fox will play unscared, and the adder, sunning itself undisturbed, be the sole occupant of the royal court. To-day the curious traveler thrusts his sharp spade into the mounds of Assyrian kings, drags the funeral trophies of Rameses to the unaccustomed light, and thrusts his fingers into the sepulchral urns of the Cæsars.

But there is one thing of which even time cannot rob the soul, one thing which in the history of the race never grows old; it is the consciousness of God's redeeming love revealed in Jesus Christ. That which was the boy's song is still the old man's staff. The lad who joined his infant voice with others in the praises of Jesus in the Sunday-school, as an old man goes down into the valley of the shadow of death with the same joy upon his now trembling lips. The world may take away fortune, youth, fame; but it is powerless to rob the believing heart of that peace which comes from its reconciliation with God in Christ Jesus.—New York Evangelist.

EXTERNAL FORMS.

The hand of the Lord does come upon men when they are alone with God in prayer. It was so with Elijah on Carmel; with Hezekiah in his sickness; with Daniel when in danger; and with the great and good of all ages, churches and nations. We often hear a plausible statement that prayer is elevation of soul and communion with God, and not external forms. But it is, and always has been, a fact that those souls most effectually retain their elevation and communion with God who most regularly observe the outward forms of religion, that is, of course, if they do it understandingly. A condition of spiritual deadness is more likely to disappear when a person habitually devotes himself to secret interviews with God, than if he trusts to chances to find amid social and business duties spare moments of reflection. The grandest pictures have a frame. The picture is worth a thousand dollars, the frame only a few dollars; and yet no artist would exhibit a picture without a frame. So it is with the forms of religion. They are worth little compared to the true and fervent spirit, yet they are necessary to that spirit. And our souls will become empty, withered and dead if we neglect them.—The Pulpit.

A REMARKABLE PROVIDENCE.

A poor woman who had been washing for us said: "Seems as if the Lord took very direct ways of reaching people's feelings sometimes. Now, I was astonished once in my life. I lived away out West, on the prairie, me and my four children, and couldn't get much work to do, and our little stock of provisions kept getting lower and lower. One night we sat hovering over our fire, and I was gloomy enough. There was about a pint of corn meal in the house, and that was all. I said, 'Well, children, may be the Lord will provide something.' 'I do hope it will be a good mess of potatoes,' said cheery little Nell; 'seems to me I never was so hungry for 'taters before.' After they were asleep I lay there tossing over my hard bed, and wondering what I would do next. All at once the sweetest peace and rest came over me, and I sank into such a good sleep. Next morning I was planning that I would make the tinfal of meal into mush and fry it in a greasy fry-pan. As I opened the door to go down to the brook to wash, I saw something new. There on the bench, beside the door, stood two wooden pails and a sack. One pail was full of meat, the other full of potatoes, and the sack filled with flour. I brought my hands together in my joy, and just hurraed for the children to come. Little dears! They didn't think of trousers and frocks then, but came out all of a flutter, like a flock of quails. Their joy was supreme. They knew the Lord had sent some of his angels with the sack and pails. Oh, it was such a precious gift! I washed the empty pails, and put the empty sack in one of them, and at night I stood them on the bench where I found them, and the next morning they were gone. I tried and tried to find out who had befriended us, but I never could. The Lord never seemed so far after that time," said the poor woman looking down with tearful eyes.

STEP BY STEP.

A hundred years ago there lived a little boy in Oxford, whose business it was to clean the boots of the famous university there. He was poor, but bright and smart. This lad, whose name was George, grew rapidly in favor with the students. His prompt and hearty way of doing things, and his industrial habits and faithful deeds, won their admiration. They saw in him the promise of a noble man, and they proposed to teach him a little every day. Eager to learn, George accepted their proposal, and he soon surpassed his teachers by his rapid progress. "A boy who can blacken boots well can study well," said one of the students. "Keen as a briar," said another. He went on, step by step, just as the song goes:

"One step, and then another," until he became a man—a learned and eloquent man—who preached the Gospel to admiring thousands. The little bootblack became the renowned pulpit orator, George Whitefield.

A POET'S REMONSTRANCE.

Quite a hundred years ago William Cowper wrote these lines:

O Italy! Thy Sabbaths will be soon
Our Sabbaths, closed with mum'ry and buffoon.
Preaching and pranks will share the motley scene,
Ours, parcelled out, as thine have ever been,
God's worship and the mountebank between.

What says the prophet? Let that day be blest
With holiness and consecrated rest.
Pastime and business both it should exclude,
And bar the door the moment they intrude,
Nobly distinguished above all the six
By deeds in which the world should never mix.

Hear him again. He calls it a delight,
A day of luxury observed aright,
When the glad soul is made heaven's welcome guest,
Sits banqueting, and God provides the feast.
But triflers are engaged and cannot come;
Their answer to the call is, "Not at home."

TEMPERANCE.

"PROHIBITION DOESN'T PROHIBIT."

[Letter from Gen. NEAL DOW (now eighty-nine years old), to the New York Witness.]

I know a prominent D. D. who delights in saying that prohibition doesn't prohibit and chuckles over any report or fact that seems to justify his position on the liquor question. He came to Portland not long ago, and from the station went directly to a low, dirty part of the town, to which he was guided by a man like himself whom he met on the train. His object was to find out, if he could, some den where liquors were unlawfully sold, so as to fortify himself in his faith that prohibition is a failure.

From Centre street and Gorham's corner he went to the editorial office of an old friend, and gleefully exclaimed: "Now I know, because I have seen, that the Maine law is a failure and a farce."

"What is it that you have seen, and where is it, that seems to please you so much?"

"It's down on Central street and Gorham's corner, where they sell liquor in violation of your boasted Maine law, and I'm delighted to find that I'm right in declaring that prohibition is a farce and can never suppress the liquor traffic."

"Did you buy any liquor there?"

"No, but they sell it all the same, for I saw, all about, unmistakable signs of the grog-shop."

"Did you try to buy any liquor as a proof positive that the law is violated there?"

"Yes, but they wouldn't sell any to me nor to the young man, my guide; they were afraid, no doubt, that we would denounce them to the police, though we assured them that we would not do so."

"Did they acknowledge to you that they sold liquors?"

"No, they denied that they did so; but we could see from the look of their shops and their surroundings that they lied to us."

"Did you see any liquor casks or jugs or bottles that indicated without mistake the presence of liquors?"

"No, of course they were not so simple as to betray themselves to the police in that way; but for all that it was plain to us that the liquor law was a farce."

"Did you go to more than one shop?"

"Yes, we went to seven of them; they all denied that they sold liquors, but it was evident to me that they lied; everything about the shops suggested the presence of liquor. I was very desirous of buying some whisky, as proof positive against prohibition, and in the last shop I said to the keeper: 'I'm in good faith, I won't betray you; I really want a glass of whisky.' In reply the man said he didn't keep a drop of it, and added: 'Come here to the door. Do you see that corner shop across the street? That's Jim Cady's. Go there and tell him that Jack Sullivan sent you there for a glass of whisky.'"

"Well, did you get it?"

"I was going to tell you. We went in and asked Cady for a glass of whisky. He said he didn't keep it. I then said that Jack Sullivan told me that I could get it here; he replied, 'Why didn't Jack Sullivan let you have it himself?'"

"Did you try anywhere else to see if you could procure proof positive that the law is a failure?"

"No, we did not try any other shop—nor indeed did I need any better proof positive than what I saw and heard that prohibition is a failure."

"Now, doctor," said the journalist, "this is what you have accomplished: Instead of trying to find out and to see the multitude of good and of beautiful things in and about Portland—our churches, our many noble public school buildings, our white marble postoffice and United States court house and our white granite custom house, both of them very noble structures well worth seeing; our fine streets adorned with charming houses and large, well-kept grounds and lawns; our noble public library, our pretty Lincoln Park, and the magnificent views from our eastern and western promenades, the equals of which are not to be found in this country; you think only of low and dirty places about town and eagerly search for conscienceless men who are violators of the law of God and the laws of the land; traitors they are to God and man."

"You are eager to find out, if you can, that the efforts of the people of Maine to protect themselves from the infinite mischiefs of the liquor traffic have utterly failed, and if a failure here, of course a failure everywhere, so that in your view, and with your wish, the horrors of the drink traffic must go on to the end of time. And all this, it seems to me by your manner, is to you a very great delight. You have done your best, it seems, at seven shops to obtain a glass of whisky and have failed; yet you are sure, you say, beyond possibility of mistake or doubt that prohibition is a failure. It would have been easy for you to have made a far more thorough and extensive search for the facts in the case, though not such facts as you like. I would gladly have taken my phaeton and driven you about town and shown you the spots where hundreds of grog-shops used to be, but where they are no longer; where we had seven great distilleries and two large breweries—all gone now; and perhaps all this might have suggested to you the painful conviction that after all there's something good in prohibition, and that the universal triumph of alcohol and all that comes from it are not to go on forever."

This D. D. is really a prominent man in his profession, though by no means a representative (but of a small minority only), though in full communion and hearty fellowship with all of those of his own denomination. The first I ever heard of this famous D. D. was through an article of his, in one of our most influential religious papers, on what he called "compulsory self-denial." It commenced in this way:

"We have among us a large class of men who have armed themselves with bludgeons and other like weapons with the view of compelling people to practice self-denial; of course I allude to the radical wing of the temperance party."

Through the columns of the same paper I challenged his statement as false. I employed plain words to give expression to my indignation. I challenged him to mention even one instance where temperance men had resorted to violent or to any improper measure to propagate their faith in total abstinence from intoxicants and in the expediency and efficacy of prohibition, while at the same time I could refer to hundreds of cases in which his party had resorted to the most violent measures, including personal assaults, house-burning and murder, to suppress the temperance agitation. I charged him with deliberate and willful falsification, being justified in such a method of reply, because there had never been even one case of violence on the part of temperance men to compel or influence others to practice self-denial. This famous D. D. made no attempt at justifying his assertion, offensive and false as it was in every part to the last degree. In his case I do not think either of the D.'s in his title stands for Dei, but for the character so prominent in Job.

I have had letters lately (postage not paid for reply) from different and distant parts of the country, asking earnestly that I would say what is my religious faith? Perhaps I am winning for myself the reputation of an infidel because I deal so plainly with things in professed Christians which seem to me so little in accord with the plainest teachings of the Gospel, so much at discord with the life of Christ and of those of his disciples. Garrison and Wendell Phillips were stigmatized as infidels for a similar reason. If anybody cares to know, here it is: I was born and bred a Quaker, with whom religion is a matter of the heart and life, of the love and fear of God, an earnest faith in him and in Christ; not of creeds, bowings, scrapings and genuflections; of pomp of temples and personal display and adornments. With the Friends it is a matter of conviction and conscience that personal example and influence in every respect should be always and everywhere in accord with their profession; that without fear or favor they should be always on the side of right and always against the wrong.

If all men were Quakers we should need no jails or prisons of any kind; no officials to preserve the peace and maintain good order; no handcuffs to repress violence. We should have no black-marias to pick up drunkards and disorderly persons and carry them away to places of seclusion; no distilleries and breweries to destroy the people, body and soul; no grog-shops to tempt the young to evil ways, and lead all to wretchedness and ruin. More than all, we should have no professed Christians hesitating to show themselves to be brave and loyal soldiers in the armies of the Lord, bearing no banner but that of the cross and no arms but those needed to defend the weak against the strong, the right against the wrong.

To-day the saloons—the mightiest agencies for evil known to our time—"exist by permission of the church membership; they are masters of the situation." The Christian at Work said that when the church membership, honestly, bravely, in good faith, say Go, the saloon will vanish and leave our country delivered from its accursed influence, more potent for evil than all other sources of mischief of whatever name. I believe that to be true; I believe that the responsibility for the continuance of this great sin, shame, and crime rests upon the church.

es, as the Christian at Work affirms. Will the church ever recognize its duty to God and the country? Where is the indication of its right doing?

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG

1. Job's desire.—vs. 1-5. If Job had not felt in himself a consciousness of innocence, he would not have dared utter the wish that he might meet God and plead his case with him in person. His friends look upon his complaint as rebellious, and his assertions of innocence, in the face of such vast and overwhelming calamities, as nothing short of blasphemy; but he is sure that could he only find his Creator and tell him the whole story, he would be judged more tenderly, more wisely, more fairly, than by erring man. When the world, or, what is worse, our friends, misjudge us, holding us guilty when we know we are innocent, impugning our motives when we know they are pure, there is but one tribunal to which we can appeal, sure of a just judgment; but one Being to whom we can safely commit our cause, He who always judgeth righteously. To do this requires a great deal of faith; indeed, it may be said to be faith's supreme test, for it is "enduring, as seeing him who is invisible." "Oh, that I knew where I might find him." Job had but the dimmest starlight of revealed truth to guide his searchings. He may have been born in the days of Abraham, before any of the Scripture canon was written. In these days of Gospel light, a new and living way has been opened through Christ, so that everywhere, and at all times, we can have free access to God, and "come even to his seat." Nor do we have to plead our own case. We have an Advocate, Jesus Christ the righteous. "I would know the words which he would answer me." In spite of all the terrible and mysterious calamities which had befallen him, Job clings fast to his conception of God as a being strictly and infinitely just, which shows the wonderful strength of his faith.

2. God as a just Judge.—vs. 6, 7. "Would he contend against me in the greatness of his power?" The God whom his three friends described might use his great power to crush a poor worm of the dust; but Job revolted against such a misrepresentation of Jehovah. "But he would give heed unto me." The more distressed our circumstances, the more sure we can be that God will hear us when we call upon him, and will make more allowance for what is unfavorable in our lot, or our infirmities of flesh and spirit, than the tenderest earthly friend.

3. The vanity of searching to find out God.—vs. 7-9. God is a spirit, to whom all places and times are alike. His presence pervades all things; but we, in our finite humanity, bound down to one little corner of earth, often feel the same longing with Job. We want to localize him; and in this natural desire, which of course is strongest where there is no light of revelation, we find the root of idol-worship. We see his works in nature; we see his providential dealings with nations and individuals; but God himself we cannot see. We must walk by faith and not by sight, looking forward to another life where we shall see him as he is, because we have been so disciplined and purified by our earthly trials that we can bear the transcendent vision.

4. The true end of sorrow.—v. 10. "He knoweth the way that I take." From the cradle to the grave, every turn in our varied path is known unto the Lord. But the expression here has a higher and deeper meaning. Job had walked in the way of righteousness, and he still held fast his integrity. Under the weight of such terrible calamities, many would have committed suicide, or sought to drown their grief in the intoxicating cup. But Job took no such way to escape from trouble. He went bravely forward into the clouds and darkness, sure that though his earthly friends could not see that he walked in his integrity, God knew the way that he took. "When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." Here we have the true end of sorrow summed up in less than a dozen words. When God sees that there is true gold in us, however much it may be alloyed, he sends affliction to act like the refiner's fire. Could we go through the world without sorrow, it would only show that we were not worth the trouble of the Refiner's crucible. All through the New Testament we are taught to "rejoice in tribulation," because of the results that are to follow; and by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, Job, stripped of his children and riches in one day, and a prey to the most loathsome disease, realizes the same blessed truth. Suggestion (1) We cannot enter into full sympathy with the afflicted without putting ourselves in their places; that is, having the true Christ-like spirit which feels for those "who are in bonds as bound with them." (2) We cannot expect to see clearly the reasons for all God's mysterious dispensations of sorrow until the light of another world falls on them; but, meanwhile, let our Golden Text, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter" be as a hand in ours, guiding us safely through every step of life's darkest ways.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—A correspondent of the Standard, writing from New Orleans, says that in that city the white Baptists have only three churches, and only one of these is self-sustaining, while the Negroes have fifty-six churches. With these, Baptist churches are more numerous than Catholic churches there, and number more than the churches of any other Protestant denomination. In the State of Louisiana, among the whites are only 26,928 members. This is the smallest proportionate membership of any Southern State except Maryland. There are 482 churches, with 242 ordained ministers. The value of church property is reported at $122,915, which must be much below even a conservative estimate. The colored Baptists report 888 churches, with 614 ministers, and 54,455 members. The property of the colored churches is valued at $255,320. In this matter they are decidedly on top. The figures put the Baptists at the head of the various denominations in the State, numerically at least. The Roman Catholics report 206 churches and 211,763 "communicants". The white Methodists report 24,874 members in 316 churches.

—The twenty-second annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the West will be held in the First Baptist church at Minneapolis, Minn., April 19, 20.

—March 23, 1831, Rev. James Delaney, the oldest minister in Wisconsin, now in his ninetieth year, was baptized at Maulmain, Burma. He was connected with the British army, and was a strong Roman Catholic. Under the preaching of the hero missionary, Rev. Eugene Kincaid, D.D., he was converted, and by him baptized in the Salween river. The sixty-second anniversary of this event was commemorated with appropriate services in the Baptist church at Whitewater on Thursday evening, March 23.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Five Congregational clergymen of California in the past few weeks have gone over to the Unitarian faith, four of them to take pastorates in that denomination. One of them took his entire congregation with him into the new fold.

—Rev. Dr. Henry A. Stimson has resigned the pastorate of Pilgrim Congregational church, St. Louis, Mo., to accept a call to the Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

—The Rev. W. F. Blackman, formerly pastor of the Congregational church at Naugatuck, has been appointed to the new chair of Social Science in the Yale Divinity School, and will spend a year in Europe before entering on his new office.

—There is a colored Congregational church in Washington with a membership of 535.

FREE BAPTIST.

—Rev. Isaac Hyatt has moved into the parsonage built by the Free Baptist church at Poland, N. Y., the last year. It is a comfortable and convenient house, costing about $2,000. The ladies of the missionary society are doing considerable towards furnishing it. Since Mr. Hyatt's pastorate commenced, two years ago, there have been a goodly number of additions to the church by letter and baptism.

MENNONITES.

—A veteran editor, in speaking of the proposed emigration of about 2,000 Waldenses from Europe to America, says: "The proposed immigration of the Waldenses, from the Cottian Alps to North Carolina, is an interesting announcement from every point of view. They form the earliest body of mediæval dissenters that has come intact down to our time. Like the followers of Menno Simon, the disciples of Waldo were mostly cloth-makers, and it is not unlikely the Waldenses will bring their industry to their new settlement in North Carolina just as the Mennonites brought theirs to Germantown.

Indeed, the early Mennonites were almost certainly Waldenses, their early teachings as well as their early occupations being identical."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of Centenary M. E. church, this city, was observed Thursday evening, March 30.

—Rev. Samuel H. Swarts, D.D., delivered a very fine lecture on "Home and its Influence," in Moreland Methodist church, March 21, to a good house. The speaker was warmly applauded, and the audience went away with a clearer conception of a real home.

—Rev. Dr. Samuel Wakefield, of the Pittsburgh conference, completed his ninety-fourth year on March 5. His wife is in her ninety-first year, and they have lived together for seventy years. They now reside at West Newton, Pa., in comfortable health.

—During the last thirty years the Wesleyan connection has spent $45,000,000 on buildings.

—Steps have been taken toward calling a Nebraska State Methodist assembly or conference.

—Bishop Foss expects to leave, by way of San Francisco, May 23, for his episcopal visit to Japan, Korea, and China.

—The Epworth League will celebrate its fourth birthday May 14.

—The General Minutes, containing the statistics of both the spring and fall conferences, have just been issued by the Book Concern. They show the number of effective ministers to be 11,158—an increase of 283; supernumerary, 1,123—an increase of 35; superannuated, 1,863—an increase of 27; on trial, 1,880—an increase of 48; making the total number of ministers, 14,144—an increase of 345. There are, besides these, 14,567 local preachers—an increase of 376. The membership of the church numbers 2,442,627—an increase of 62,940. There are 23,896 churches—an increase of 501; valued at $102,144,825—an increase of $4,010,712; and 9,061 parsonages—an increase of 309. For building and improving church property $5,125,452 were expended, and $1,658,088 were paid on church debts. The present indebtedness of churches is $9,130,552. For the support of pastors, presiding elders and bishops, $10,063,795 were contributed, and $251,003 for conference claimants. There are 28,039 Sunday-schools, with 310,379 officers and teachers, and 2,368,949 scholars—an increase of 53,275.

MORMONS.

—Property to the amount of $400,000 declared forfeited and directed by the United States Supreme Court to be distributed for charitable purposes by the Utah Supreme Court has by that body been applied to the support and aid of the poor members of the Mormon church, and for the building and repairing of houses of worship for them. The United States has appealed this decree, asserting that it would practically permit the property to be devoted to the same purposes for which it was formerly held.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—A canvass of the opinions of Presbyterian ministers in all parts of the Union made by the Cincinnati Post, indicates that three quarters of them are radically and unalterably opposed to the views of the Bible held and taught by Professors Briggs and Smith.

—The ill health of Prof. Philip Schaff continuing, the directors of Union Theological Seminary have made him professor emeritus. No successor has yet been appointed.

—A majority of the new cabinet are Presbyterians, as are President Cleveland and Vice President Stevenson.

—The Rev. Dr. Daniel W. Poor, of Philadelphia, has resigned the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Board of Education, which he held for a dozen years. This action is due to his advanced age.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The present strength of the Salvation Army in the United States is given as 464 corps, 68 outposts, 1,456 officers, six slum posts, three rescue homes, and one food and shelter depot. The Army's paper, the War Cry, has a circulation of seventy thousand in this country.

The Salvation Army has secured a site for its new headquarters in New York. It cost $200,000, and covers an area of about 12,000 square feet. A four-story, fireproof, iron building will be erected. On the ground floor there will be an auditorium, which will seat 3,000 people; and the other three floors will be used for offices for the army. Mr. Ballington Booth has been offered a large farm on Staten Island, upon which to establish a colony for those rescued from the slums who are willing to do farm work.

—The Salvation Army maintains three slum corps in Finland.

—Twenty-four persons sought religion at the wedding of two Salvation Army officers in Sweden.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Evangelical Alliance has made a public protest against the persecution of the Stundists of Russia.

—San Francisco has a population of 300,000, and church sittings for only 55,000, and these are not all occupied.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Mrs. Mary Ann Rice, widow of the late John B. Rice, ex-mayor of Chicago, died suddenly Wednesday night, of paralysis of the heart, at Coronada Beach, Cal., where she was spending the winter.

Wung Aloy, janitor of the Evanston High School, and one of its pupils, served as an interpreter in a case of disorderly conduct in which two other Chinese were implicated. That same day he reported that he had been enticed into a hallway and brutally beaten with an iron bar, and asked for a warrant to issue against the two disorderly Chinese, named Lee and Nye, for assaulting him. Aloy asserts that these men are High-binders and intended to kill him.

Delegates representing fifty tents of the Knights of the Maccabees of Illinois met on Thursday at Aldine Hall, and organized the Grand Camp of Illinois. This is the first State convention held. The Maccabees now number 30,000 members in the State.

Bishop Esher has gone on an episcopal trip to Japan and Corea to inspect the mission work of the Evangelical Association in those countries, and to organize an annual conference in Japan. He will be absent about five months. This is the bishop's second trip to heathen lands.

One feature of the American Bible Society's part in the Exposition will be a free distribution of the New Testament, and to meet the probable demand 250,000 copies of the 5-cent edition have already been printed.

During the Exposition it will not be difficult to secure rooms in good localities for $1 to $2 per day, and the boarding-houses and restaurants at which meals may be had at usual prices will be numbered by the thousand. There will be no secret about prices. On the contrary, price lists and bills of fare will be displayed conspicuously to invite custom.

From present indications it seems probable that there will be no trouble between the government and the Chinese laborers in Chicago on account of the Geary law. Reports from San Francisco speak of a probable disturbance when the time for registration expires, May 5.

The last of the 5,000,000 Columbian half-dollars were coined March 30. The mint has delivered 2,585,000. Hundreds of thousands of them are now treasured among the people as the first of the World's Fair souvenirs.

Evanston was the scene of a shocking murder and suicide. Because Effie Clark, aged nineteen, the daughter of an invalid Methodist minister, refused to marry E. Ross Smith, a young man from Chicago, he shot her dead and then killed himself. She was a student at Northwestern University, and her parents were in Florida.

COUNTRY.

The last monthly bulletin of the Weather Bureau, in its summary for the season, says: "The entire winter has been colder than usual over the principal agricultural districts, the only month showing an excess of temperature since October over an extensive portion of the country being the month of January, during which it was warmer than usual in the Rocky Mountain districts, but it was unusually cold in the eastern half of the United States. The records, therefore, show the principal farming districts have experienced four consecutive months of unusually cold weather." Referring to the monthly weather reports of a number of stations in the central Mississippi valley, between the 41st and 43d parallels of latitude, we note a temperature record below zero on 15 days in December, 26 days in January and 18 days in February, making 59 days of zero weather for the three winter months. That is a record worthy of note.

Kansas has given up all the space secured by her in the Columbian Exposition, except sufficient for an agricultural exhibit. This is said to be due to the political complications in that State.

Murderer Latimer, who escaped from the Michigan State prison by poisoning the guards, has been captured. He is a monster in crime.

The outbreak in the Choctaw country between the opposing factions of Duke and Locke is becoming serious, and bloodshed is feared.

President Cleveland has appointed Thos. F. Bayard, of Maryland, as Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Great Britain, in place of Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, of Chicago.

The new Gregory Seed Catalogue for 1893 is the most valuable ever issued. It is greatly enlarged and contains new departments, as well as new varieties of seeds and plants. No more reliable catalogue is ever published than this, as every seed sold from it carries the guarantee of a dealer who has always received and merited the confidence of his customers. Mr. Gregory raises the large majority of his seeds on his own farms, and has been very successful in the new varieties he has introduced. A card to J. J. H. Gregory & Son, Marblehead, Mass., will bring a copy of this handsome catalogue FREE to any applicant.

SECRET SOCIETIES CON-DEMNEED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

REV. WM. M. BROOKS, Pres. Tabor College.—Our faculty is a unit in opposition to secret societies, not excepting those formed for literary culture.

• PRES. L. H. HAMMOND, Lebanon Valley College.—My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a stumbling block; and that, socially and politically, the benefaction it offers to one is a robbery of others.

PRES. E. K. HILL, Washington University.—I have long regarded the secret conclaves as unnecessary to any good cause, and dangerous from their irresponsibility. Especially do I think that Freemasonry, from its nature, record and prevalence, is an enemy to the political purity and social morality of our country.

PRES. H. H. GEORGE, D. D., Geneva College.—No man can, at the same time, be a lover of Christ or a Christian, and a sworn member of a Christ-dishonoring and disowning fraternity, provided he know the true character of that fraternity. No man can be innocent in going into such a fraternity without knowing its true character.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD, Oberlin.—The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization.

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829.—Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named "Speculative Freemasonry"? Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy.

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.—One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XIII, pp. 9-26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Mollie Maguires, for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania.

LEONARD WOODS, D. D., Professor in Andover, 1829.—Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence; it would be very proper to inquire, whether it can be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles and practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing.

PRES. TIMOTHY DWIGHT, D. D., in a Fast Day Sermon, Yale College.—These [the doctrines of Illuminism] were: that God is nothing; that government is a curse, and authority an usurpation; that civil society is the only apostasy of man; that the possession of property is robbery; that chastity and natural affection are mere prejudices, and that adultery, assassination, poisoning and other crimes of a similar nature are lawful and even virtuous. A large branch of the Masonic Societies in Germany and France had already adopted the same objects, as the great and controlling ones of all their personal and united labors. Here secrecy furnished the most advantageous opportunities for the formation of every design and the most advantageous opportunities for its successful execution.

HOME AND HEALTH.

BONE STARVING.

The darker portions of the grain of wheat, lying next to the bran, are the most nutritious. They contain the qualities that support the bones and muscles. That which millers commonly call the "middlings" is to a certain extent eliminated in producing the finest grades of flour. Those who use the "Extra XXXX" brands of flour feed mostly upon starch. The brain and the bones are starved by it. The whole system becomes constipated, fevered and famished in the degree that we are confined to such an artificial diet. A dog dies in thirty days, it is said, if fed exclusively upon such bread.

The prevalence of such food accounts for the failure of health to a great extent and especially for the decay of the teeth. The bone-making portions are expelled, being "bolted" out in the milling process. The laboring classes, who consume this darker grade for economy, and cattle, get the heart of the wheat. The dentists are being enriched by this process of starving the bones and the teeth, which has been going on for generations. As a people, our physical powers deteriorate. Laborers landed upon our shores from Europe, who have subsisted upon brown bread, as a class, have sound teeth and are superiors in strength and endurance. The statement was made before the Dental Association of Michigan, that there are no dentists in Scotland as a profession. The people have lived upon plain foods, and especially upon oatmeal, so long, that decayed teeth are almost unknown. The habitual use of good graham flour in different forms would arrest the general decay of the teeth and be very profitable to health in every way.

COOKING WITHOUT LARD.

Many who realize that lard is unwholesome want to know how it can be dispensed with entirely in cooking, and yet have the food palatable. This has to be learned, and it must also be understood that the taste for unwholesome food is a perverted one, coming from bad living. Correct the living and the taste will be corrected.

But to the honest inquirer after a better way to live comes the question, What can take the place of lard? and how can food be prepared without it? This very practical question is not difficult to settle where one will receive the light. Life-long habits and prejudices must give way to what proves to be best.

Very few housewives have not used lard in their cooking. Thank God for the many that have discarded it altogether. The results of this in the health of their families is so satisfactory that nothing would induce them to again use it. They also find it better to use that kind of food which does not need such an ingredient, such as grains and fruits, which can be prepared with less trouble and really do us good.

Lard, like pork, is disease-producing. Being all grease it is even worse than pork. Where it is much used there is demand for blood purifiers, as scrofula and diseases of the skin are common. Pork and pork gravy were a large part of our diet in early life. Not till we discarded them altogether did we have pure blood and no tendency to sickness.

The need of grease in healthful cooking is very little. What is needed can be supplied in beef suet, butter, or what is better—sweet cream. Now some may exclaim, "What extravagance!" or, "How can tallow be made palatable?" As for extravagance, lard is very expensive, as those find who buy and use much. The small amount really required of these others makes them much more economical. We will give some recipes in the column of notes for preparing these. For pie-crust, suet or butter answers as well as lard; but cream is better, as it is more wholesome.

The main thing is a purpose to cook hygienically as far as possible; to receive light from good authorities and make the best use of it. It will be a surprise how easily the change can be made, and how soon the lard taste becomes distasteful, and what good food can be made without it.—Vanguard, St. Louis

FARM NOTES

A WORD FOR THE ANNUALS.

After all that may be said in favor of the perennials and the roses, the garden is incomplete without the beds of beautiful annuals. We want them for their profusion of bloom, their variety, and the fine effects possible to assume by growing in masses. Annuals are the flowers for the million. Everybody that has a yard square of soil to spare, can afford a bed of annuals; for the price of a single pot from the green-house you can get seeds enough to cover several beds.

For showy beds all summer what can surpass the phloxes, petunias, portulaca and verbenas? These can be purchased in mixed seeds, or the varieties of color and markings in separate papers. These are very showy and seldom fail to flower abundantly from June until frost.

The balsams, dianthus, salpiglossis and scabiosa are not quite so showy, but are beautiful in their individuality of form, color and variety.

Then we want a row of poppies. The best double strains produce immense flowers of nearly a dozen colors, many new and quite distinct.

And this leads me to say that the sweet peas should be planted very early; no one ever regrets all the pains taken to grow these beautiful flowers. After many others have lost their beauty and the glory of summer is past, the sweet peas delight the eye and regale the senses with their regal beauty and fragrance.

And then there are the asters, the zinnias, candytuft, calliopsis, and others that vie with the rainbow in colors. Seeds of most of these flowers I have named can be purchased for a few cents a packet. The pleasure to be enjoyed and the satisfaction gained in planting and tending the plants through the summer, and seeing them grow and unfold their beauty, is rich remuneration for outlay and trouble.—Vick's Magazine.

PRUNING TOMATO PLANTS.

Experiments for testing the effects of pruning and training tomato plants, made by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, show that the crop matures earlier and the fruits are larger than by the ordinary method. The following is the substance of a bulletin on the subject lately issued:

In order to secure the best results the seed should be sown in hot-beds or green-houses in February or March. The seed is sown in shallow boxes, called flats, and when large enough the young plants are transplanted into similar boxes, two inches apart each way. When transplanted the second time the plants are set four inches apart each way. Boxes may be used the same as before, or the plants may be set in beds, or in four-inch flower pots. The latter plan may appear to have advantages over the others, but in practice it is no better, even though the roots are injured less than when the plants are set in a bed.

height, and just coming in bloom, early in May, when they are to be transplanted into the open ground. If they are growing too freely root-pruning will check them, and if making a slow growth a little nitrate of soda will help them. If grown in flats the plants may be transferred to cold frames, or even kept out of doors, during the greater part of April. By this means they can be hardened off, which is a very necessary operation. It is not a good plan to set the plants in green-house benches, as they cannot be properly hardened before planting.

When pruned and staked, tomato plants will bear much closer planting in the field than if left to themselves. Two feet by four is about the proper distance. As soon as the plants are set in the field they ought to be tied. In order to provide for this the following plan has been found to be satisfactory: Set strong stakes at each end of each row and brace carefully. Smaller stakes may be set at intervals of two rods along the rows. These stakes should be about three and one-half feet in height. Next, stretch two wires, of about the size used in baling hay, along the tops of the stakes in each row. Take ordinary lath, or sticks of any kind, of the same length as lath, and stick one just at the side of the place that each plant is to occupy. The upper ends of the stakes are held in place by crossing the two wires back and forth, that is, by weaving the wires around the tops of the stakes, or laths. This makes a neat little trellis, sufficiently substantial for one season, but the material can be used several years in succession.

The plants are trained to single stems and tied to the lath supports. Of course tying must be done at successive intervals as the plants increase in height, until the top of the trellis is reached, after which nothing further need be done in the way of training. All side shoots near the ground, and suckers, must be kept pinched off, as the object to be gained in staking would be lost otherwise. None of the blossoms are to be removed, but simply the leafy shoots and suckers, which bear no blossoms and come out near the ground, and at intervals along the main stock. Pruning away these surplus shoots and tying the plants to supports exposes the fruit to the sunlight and favors early development in a marked degree. Tomatoes thus trained ripen about two weeks in advance of those which are allowed to lie on the ground, are free from rot and larger. The crop per plant is less than by the ordinary method, but because of the higher prices obtained for the fruit the profits are larger.

HORRORS OF DYSPEPSIA

Mr. J. L. MONTGOMERY,

Ex-Clerk Circuit Court, and Editor "Democrat," Marshall, Ill.

Suffered as only a Dyspeptic can Suffer.

Had given up all Hope of ever being Cured.

NOW EATS THREE MEALS A DAY,
THE RESULT OF TAKING

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

The strongest recommendation this wonderful medicine has, comes from those who have been cured by taking it. Read what Mr. MONTGOMERY says:—

"I was raised on a farm, and was, up to six years ago, always used to manual labor, and plenty of fresh air. At that time, however, I changed my occupation, went into an office, and it was but a little while after that when my appetite almost wholly disappeared. My digestion was not good, and I had given up hope of ever being cured. For two years I suffered untold pain and agony, such as only a dyspeptic can suffer. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla for this complaint, and by the time I had used six bottles I was as well as ever. The cure was most effectual. I can now eat my three meals a day, sleep soundly, and am never bothered with symptoms of dyspepsia. Ayer's Sarsaparilla indeed cures. It cured me, and if anyone will take it according to directions, it will cure him. I believe that this medicine will cure the most aggravated or chronic case of dyspepsia or indigestion on record, and I can recommend it most heartily and confidently to all who will use it."

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking Powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

The eighty-second birthday of the venerable Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, was gracefully celebrated.

Joseph Jefferson's summer resort at Buzzard's Bay was destroyed by fire. A servant perished in the flames.

Fifteen miners met death in a coal-mine explosion at Shamokin, Pa.

Five persons were killed and twenty-five injured in a fire in Bradford, Pa.

Four lives were lost in an accident on the Canadian Pacific.

A startling discovery has been made by H. F. Chipman, in relation to the title to the lands of a large part, if not the whole, of the upper peninsula of Michigan. If Mr. Chipman's conclusions are borne out by more minute investigation and sustained by the courts, every acre of land in the peninsula west of the Sault and Mackinac to the Montreal and Menominee rivers, and from Lake Superior to Lake Michigan and the straits, inclusive of city and village lots, will be handed over to its rightful owners, the descendants of the Chippewa Indian nation of the Lake Superior region.

March 27 the great strike of the Monongahela Valley coal miners practically ended. Fully 3,000 strikers returned to the mines. The strike lasted seven months, and, it is estimated, cost the operators and miners $4,000,000. Of this amount the strikers lost $2,100,000 in wages.

At Caney, Kan., the Valley Bank was robbed of $4,000 by armed bandits on Monday afternoon, after intimidating the bank employees.

A party of Burlington railroad surveyors, under the direction of Chief Engineer Jones, has left Sheridan, the line terminus in Wyoming, to pick out a route to Great Falls, Mont. They will run lines across the Crow Reservation, and close to the Yellowstone Park. It is the intention to carry passengers to the great Yellowstone Park in the summer.

No more free transportation will be granted by the Western roads during the current year. This is one of the results of the recent meeting of the presidents held in this city. The order is very general and sweeping in its effects, including passes of almost every description.

Now that by the will of the late James H. Carleton the Whittier Homestead Association of Haverhill is assured of $10,000 with which to purchase and improve the property, the trustees will immediately set to work to carry out the project. It had long been the desire of many of the poet's admirers to preserve the birthplace of Whittier as a shrine for literary pilgrims.

In Osage City, Kansas, during a temperance rally, a car-load of liquor was seized and destroyed in the presence of a great throng. The liquors were hauled out of town to an abandoned coal-shaft, where the bottles and demijohns were broken by the hundred and the contents poured into the "rum hole" in the ground. Beer kegs and whisky barrels were piled on a bonfire and thousands of gallons of red liquor were burned. At Fort Scott, where city authorities had illegally licensed numerous saloons, a deputy attorney-general, sent by the Governor, suddenly arrested 30 saloonists, some of them "leading citizens," and locked them up forthwith. There are from ten to thirty-five counts against each one.

"Mother" Toquin, one of the oldest Pottawatamie squaws in Southern Michigan, is dead in Van Buren county. She was over 100 years of age.

A well attended State convention of colored citizens has been in session in Iowa, A. G. Clark, of Washington, chairman. The program set forth the following subjects of discussion: The education of our boys and girls, and the impossibility of obtaining employment according to their merit, with few exceptions; the closing of the doors against children in the various professions; the inequality of our recognition in public office in proportion to our numbers and the amount of taxes we pay. These and other important questions as to the prosperity of the race were discussed, and plans matured to organize for better work. Some of the ablest Afro-Americans of the State were in attendance.

Mrs. Anna Potter is a candidate for Mayor in Kansas City, Kan., and expects to be elected.

At Aurora, Illinois, Attorney W. E. Galvin was awarded $5,000 damages by a jury against Attorney Cassem for slander. Some months ago in a justice court suit Randell Cassem, one of the attorneys in the case, brought in six men, who swore that they would not believe the opposing attorney, W. E. Galvin, under oath. Hence the suit.

The United States Supreme Court has decided that when a foreign patent lapses by reason of non-payment of taxes an American patent granted thereafter for the same invention is void. This action, it is said at the patent office, destroys Edison's quadruplex telegraph patent, and also his three microphone patents.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Germany, March 29, says: "The mining town of Kaernten, near Bleiberg, is burning. Two churches and sixty-five houses have been destroyed, and the fire still spreads. Fifteen persons are known to have died in the flames and several others are missing."

Cholera has appeared at Zalosse, a market town of Galicia. Every attempt was made by the town authorities to check the disease, but despite their efforts it was spreading.

A St. Petersburg (Russia) dispatch, March 29, says: "It is stated in an official report issued to-day that on an average 150 new cases of cholera and fifty deaths from the disease are reported every week in the government of Podolia."

Cholera has appeared in numerous sections of Russia. District assemblies throughout the empire are organizing special corps of doctors, of hospital attendants, and of women known as "nursing sisters," in the various districts and provinces to care for the victims of cholera in the event of the pestilence becoming prevalent. Orders have also been issued for the medical men of the different provinces to hold meetings at regular intervals and keep watch against the spread of cholera.

On the eve of going to press with this issue, we learn of a formidable strike at the World's Fair grounds, artisans of all kinds participating to the number of thousands, delaying important work, and creating confusion and distrust. Particulars next week.

Rev. M. A. Gault addressed a large audience on the 2nd inst. at Bloomington, Ind., on Sabbath reform, at a W. C. T. U. service. He again preached at Princeton, Ind., on the 9th, and on the 11th attended a meeting of the Illinois Presbytery at Coulterville, Ill.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard, the Eastern agent, writes that he has established himself until further notice at No. 228 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City. Any friends of the anti-secrecy reform who may desire to have lectures in their vicinity can address him there, as he expects to remain in New York for a few weeks. He purposes to arrange for a local convention before leaving; and as he has achieved a growing reputation as an organizer of good conventions, we have strong hopes of his success.

Edward M. L. Ehlers, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the State of New York, in the Washington (D. C.) Evening News of April 6, prints nearly two columns defining the relations between Roman Catholic priests and the Freemasons. It is a calm review of the subject, showing that many of the Roman priests are now in the Masonic fraternity, and revives the story that Pope Pius IX. was a Freemason, but admits that the evidence on this point is not conclusive. He also repeats the allegation of a brother Mason from a lodge in New Granada that during his membership there a Catholic priest presided as its Master. The entire article is full of interest, and we hope to transfer portions of it to future numbers of the Cynosure.

Masonic blasphemy has a new phase in a paper on the Fellow Craft degree in the Voice of Masonry for April, by William E. Ginther, who distributes the attributes of Almighty God among the officers of the lodge as follows: The Senior Grand Warden represents His omniscience; the Grand Master, His omnipresence (in the subordinate lodge the Worshipful Master represents this divine attribute, "ruling by his goodness"); and the Junior Grand Warden, His omnipotence. Thus it is the Worshipful Master ("who rules every one by his goodness"), who leads the incipient Fellow Craft to swear to have his breast torn open, his heart plucked out and placed on the highest pinnacle of the temple, to be devoured by vultures, if he ever violates his obligation of secrecy! There's goodness!

The "memorial" issue of the Earnest Christian (April, 1893) is a loving tribute from many friends to the memory of the late Benjamin T. Roberts, the founder of that magazine and one of the earliest promoters of the Free Methodist church. It contains a magnificent plate portrait of the lamented divine, who departed this life February 27. On February 13 he preached his last sermon, from Hebrews 4: 7. This characteristic discourse is appropriately printed in this memorial, with kind expressions of love and veneration by Rev. E. P. Hart, Rev. James Matthews, Rev. W. Gould, Rev. M. N. Downing, Rev. J. G. Terrill, Rev. A. C. Leonard, Rev. W. G. Hanmer, Rev. M. V. Clute, Rev. J. B. Freeland, Rev. J. T. Logan and Rev. C. B. Ebey. A description of the funeral, with letters of sympathy received by the family, is also included. But the most touching tribute to the departed is that contributed by his devoted widow.

In a recent letter to the Cynosure, Rev. W. B. Stoddard related his visit to Fayetteville, Penn., and mentioned his lecture there against the secret lodge power. He has since learned that he, by that effort, made a convert and turned his feet from the paths of darkness and secrecy. This gentleman, whose name is Miller, is a member of "the Church of God" (Winnebrarian). As he was leaving the lecture hall (writes a personal friend to Bro. Stoddard) "he said to Mr. Roth: 'How does that suit you?' Mr. R. replied: 'It suits me exactly; how does it suit you?' 'First rate,' answered Mr. Miller; 'I had been thinking of joining a lodge, but now will have nothing to do with them.' It was furthermore noticed that he contributed to defray the expense of the lecture." "I think," adds Bro. Stoddard's friend, "your calm presentation of the facts did good all around. So let us thank God and take courage!" This is very encouraging. Ours is, indeed, the Lord's work, and he will prosper it.

The Voice of Masonry for April prints in full Pope Leo's Letter of Dec. 8, 1892, to the Italian people, declaring war against all that is anti-Roman Catholic, especially Freemasonry, with the comments of the London Freemason thereon. The Pope was rather severe upon the fraternity, of which he says: "I accuse Freemasonry of being a foe to God, the church and our fatherland." "Remember that Christianity and Freemasonry are opposed to each other on principles." Candidly, the great objection of His Holiness to the Masonic fraternity is the lodge's utter indifference to the will of the Roman Catholic church, which would (if it could) represent "God, the church and our fatherland," both temporary and spiritually. Not finding the requisite amount of compatibility between the lodge and the church, the latter seeks to suppress the former, just as it would wipe out Protestantism for exactly the same reasons—not because Masonry itself is Scripturally wrong (as we believe), but because it defies the church and won't go to confession.

The Midland (United Presbyterian), of Omaha, Neb., in its issue for April 6, prints a protest, nearly two columns in length, against the city school board allowing the Grand Lodge of Freemasons to lay the corner-stone of the new Central School building, and asks by whom was the invitation to do so sent to the lodge. The answer is pertinent; for, says the Midland, "Masons in the board have asked their own private" (secret) "society to lay the corner-stone of a public building!" We cannot now publish the reasons which the Midland presents in detail for making this earnest protest, but shall try to find room for them at an early day. This much we may copy with advantage to the cause of our reform: After denouncing the organization and practices of Freemasonry as un-American, it adds: "Masonry in many respects is like Jesuitism. They are so near akin and have so nearly the same end that they fight with each other. So neither of these orders or any other secret order or private society should control our schools or be given public endorsement or advertised before our children and the American youth." Certainly the Midland is right.

The Chinese question is assuming the form of a conflict. The Chinese Six Companies, of San Francisco has decided to test the constitutionality of the Chinese exclusion and registry law, and has sent circulars to Chinese laborers, advising them not to register. Judge Nelson, of the United States court at Duluth, Minn., has declared the law unconstitutional, in the case of a Chinese who had been a resident of the United States for seven years. The attorney for the defence based the motion for the release of his client on the ground that the provision of the law for an imprisonment for thirty days, and the returning to his native country of the Chinaman, after no proceeding other than a hearing before a United States Court Commissioner, was unconstitutional, being in violation of the fundamental right of a person to a trial by jury when accused of any crime. This view of the case was supported by Judge Nelson and the prisoner was released. The Chinese Six Companies have arranged, it is reported, to have a Chinaman arrested, and when the immediate deportation of the offender against the law shall have been ordered by the courts a writ of habeas corpus will be obtained and the case carried to the Supreme court of the United States. The law is a disgrace to our nation.

TRUE PATRIOTISM.

[At a meeting in Englewood, Cook county, Ill., on the last anniversary of Washington's birthday, held under the auspices of the Union League Club of Chicago, the following address was delivered by Mr. Geo. H. Croker, of Wheaton College.]

Written upon the scroll of fame is a name that the world delights to honor. It is a name that is a star in the firmament of renown which a great nation has followed, and by its brilliancy has been led through many a dark and difficult pathway; a name which is as fragrant as the flowers that bloom along the hillsides of his native State; a name around which cluster all things that are lovely and of good report; the name of George Washington, the father and founder of our nation.

In the brief time allotted me this morning, it would be impossible to point out all the influences that surrounded our hero in his early life, and that helped to mould and fashion him for the great work unto which he was called.

History gives an interesting picture of his mother, with her children gathered around her, reading to them from the sacred Word; correcting wrong tendencies, and encouraging the right. Such was the mother to whom God entrusted the early training of one whom he had ordained to be the father of a great nation. We have reason to think that in early life she laid the foundations of that character, which afterwards proved to be so grand, so sublime. This morning I lay a tribute of love on the altar of American motherhood, for the noble work which it has done in training men for the service of God and the uplifting of mankind.

He attained his majority when the seeds of a free government, which had been sown in the hearts of the colonists, were beginning to burst into flower and ripen into fruitage. The hand of the tyrannical, bigoted and perverse George the Third of England was the hand that watered and nurtured them. Each blow by Britain at their freedom, each attack upon their rights as men, helped to usher in the war which was to cost England thirteen colonies, to add a million pounds to her debt, and indelibly to stain her national character. In April, 1775, the long-threatened contest began with the battle of Lexington. On the 17th of June the battle of Bunker Hill was fought; and after this there came into prominence that greatest of American generals, that most beloved and honored of American citizens, that moving genius and inspiration of American liberty—George Washington. From this time he moves before us like some grand embodiment of virtue and power.

"The history, so sad and yet so glorious, which chronicles the struggles in which our rights and liberties were won, is eloquent with the deeds of many patriots, warriors and statesmen." Towering above them all, in unapproachable majesty, stands this hero, this patriot.

Whipple says: "He was the soul of the Revolution: felt at its center and throughout all its parts, as a uniting, organizing, animating power. He was security in defeat, cheer in despondency, light in darkness, hope in despair."

As we view him in that long seven-years' struggle with untrained troops, with perilous difficulties, inspiring faltering patriotism; his fortitude sustaining through scarcity of food and winter severities, full of the loftiest patriotism and trust in God; as we thus view him we have to exclaim, in the words of Fox, "Illustrious man, before whom all borrowed greatness sinks into insignificance!"

Who has not read, with mingled awe and wonder, the achievements of Napoleon Bonaparte sweeping over Europe like an avalanche; casting down empires, dethroning kings and absorbing kingdoms? Yet the motive that lay behind Napoleon's career was selfishness. Along his bloody track, till Waterloo restored the map of Europe, can be written in plain, bold letters, "Self, self, self". But how different was the motive that ruled in the heart of Washington! Love of country and love of liberty were the guiding stars of his career. The struggle in which he engaged was a battle between truth and error—right and wrong engaged in deadly combat. The contest was between heaven-born liberty and hell-born oppression. The principles which he advocated were righteousness and justice. These principles he sustained until victory perched upon his banners.

Self-sacrificing, self-denying, brave, fearless and heroic, he stands foremost in the galaxy of the world's heroes.

After the war was over, and the victory won, it was Washington's desire to retire to private life, and let some one else take the helm of the "new ship of state," which he had so successfully launched. But to no other mortal were the colonists willing to entrust an authority so enormous, an interest so vital. He alone was able to superintend the complicated machinery of a new government. Here, again, his patriotism was beautifully exemplified. Again he bids adieu to private life, and answers "Here" to his country's call. No one ever answered to the true definition of a statesman better than he. In his civil career, as well as his military life, he was governed by that pure patriotism that knows no self-aggrandizement, and that is not moved by any personal ambition.

A Christian without bigotry, a statesman without narrowness, a patriot without sectionalism, a politician without partisanship, he was the right man for the right place: "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

"Our botanists can show us a little black seed out of which a marvelous cluster of flowers will come in a brief summer-time, whose vines and blossoms will decorate a whole garden wall." The history of the United States furnishes a more wonderful example than that. The germ of freedom planted by Washington has spread over a continent, covering a mighty galaxy of States with its spreading leaves. Four million farms have been added to the few thousands of Washington's republic. Chauncey Depew says that "the infant industries which the first act of Washington's administration sought to encourage, now give remunerative employment to more people than at that time existed in the States. The grand total of their annual output is seven billion dollars, placing the United States first among the manufacturing countries of the globe. One-half of the total mileage of all the railroads, and one-quarter of all the telegraphs of the world, are within our borders." Our commercial development of a hundred years has eclipsed the development of a thousand years of the mother-land.

We have twelve million children in our common schools. We have three hundred and forty-five universities and colleges for higher education. We have four hundred and fifty institutions of science, law, medicine, and theology. Two hundred thousand schools open their doors to all classes and nationalities. We have no hereditary descent of titled names or honors; no heraldry or coat of arms; no peerages or thrones to assure promotion to stations of honor.

During the late war a man called upon President Lincoln to obtain a captaincy in the army. It was granted. The man, turning to Lincoln, said: "Sir, do you know that you have conferred a favor upon one in whose veins flows royal blood?" Mr. Lincoln very simply replied: "That, sir, will be no hindrance to your promotion, provided you behave yourself."

Nobility of mind and heart, unswerving fidelity to trust, patriotism that knows no limits, were the rich heritage which we received from Washington.

Young men, young women, boys and girls of the public schools of Chicago, Washington's birthday should have for us a higher significance than the recalling of past events and the enumeration of our blessings.

The sails of our commerce may whiten every sea; our wharves and warehouses may groan beneath their burdens; the capacity of our railroads may not be sufficient to move our products; manufacturers may work their forces night and day to keep up their orders; our gold, silver, iron, lead and coal mines may yield their abundance; all the internal resources of the country may more than equal every demand; but these are not the highest standards of national prosperity. There are forces more powerful, though silent, than these.

Moral principles are the soul of a nation. They are the powers that mold its various elements, and that bind them together with bands stronger than steel. They are the pillars of the republic; they are the bulwarks of the state.

Righteousness and purity are the fundamental principles that must regulate individual and national life. Write these principles indelibly on the chart of the nation, and the "ship of state" sails smoothly on; neglect this precaution, and the noble vessel goes to pieces on the rocks.

Rome advanced her conquests until she embraced the civilized world. Her victorious banners swelled in the breeze over the finest cities of the globe. She fell, not because of any fatal necessity compelling the rise and fall of empires, but because of her crimes. "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee, saith God, shall perish; yea, those nations and kingdoms shall be utterly wasted."

I would not listen to the croakings of those who delight to augur ill of the future, who see nothing but the shaded side of events. But, with the wrecks of former governments strewn on the sea we navigate, and the want of real godliness that is everywhere visible around us; with the fierce and discordant elements of the old world pouring in upon us; with these things before me, I wonder what our future will be. When I see so many startling indications that our country is fast forgetting God; when I find Sabbath-breaking becoming a popular sin of the day; when I see the laws ruthlessly trampled under foot, and a craven-hearted municipality conniving at the trespass; when I see our politics dictated by a corrupt ring, and under the rule of the party lash; when I see these things I tremble for the future.

There is another evil in our midst that is preying like a deadly viper upon our constitutional liberty; that is undermining the foundations and storming at the battlements of the republic. I refer to the licensed rum power. Homes meant by God to be the paradises of earthly rest, are turned into the fiery ante-rooms of hell. Young men formed by their Creator for knowledge, virtue and power, are transformed by this demon into the furious, savage human beast. Young women, fair as the lily, pure as the driven snow, are blasted and blighted for two worlds by its terrible influence. Where does not its fetid breath shed upon society the odor of the grave, and the corruption of the charnel house? We have read of hell afar off, and have trembled, but it is here in our midst, in the form of the "American saloon," spreading a lurid glare over the scene of its deadly work.

Do you see yonder beautiful ship, with every white sail unfurled, moving with wind and tide? How proudly and grandly she passes from wave to wave! There are brave men, beautiful women and innocent children on board. But look! She is tending toward a rock-bound coast. A voice of warning cries, "Danger ahead! There are rocks beneath the waves." They laugh the voice of warning to scorn. Suddenly there is a crash. They see the danger now, and pierce the sky with one last despairing wail: "O save us! We perish!" The rock-bound coast echoes back, above their last resting-place,—"Perished!"

Ladies and gentlemen, is this picture not illustrative of the trend of our nation? Are we not drifting toward the rocks? Are there not voices of warning all around us? It devolves upon us, as young men and young women, to put forth an effort to save the nation from such a fate.

While I believe in memorial days; while I believe in eulogies over our departed heroes, yet the best honor we can give them is by being as true to our country as they were; by fighting the battles of our day as faithfully as they fought the battles of theirs.

The best citizen, the best patriot, the best son of his country is he who labors for its best and highest good.

The battles of America did not end with the surrender of King George to Washington, or of Lee to Grant. Moral battles are raging all around us, and "true patriotism" is needed to-day just as much as it was a century ago. Life the present is all about us, thick with its perils and vocal with the cry for stalwart deeds and moral heroism. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" just as truly to-day as it was when it fell from the lips of the immortal Henry. To-day the nation calls for men,—not men who stand on a political pivot, and are swayed about with every "wind of doctrine". We need men who love our institutions, who prize our God-given liberties, and are willing to die, if need be, for their preservation. Our nation is in need of men and women of character; of leaders who will stand for right.

Where are such men and women to be found? Where are such leaders to be obtained? In our schools, from among you boys and girls, there are to come our Washingtons, our Grants, our Lincolns. Thank God for the public schools of America—the "palladium of our liberties!"

We, as young people, hold in our hands the destiny of the future of the United States. We are soon to touch the springs that give tone to the public sentiments, and that enter into the civilization and institutions of our country. Over the wastes of the past, prophetic voices come to us, bidding us to "arise and shine". To every generation there comes its appointed task.

You remember the story of the ancient general reviewing his troops. When the scarred veterans of fifty fights came under review they cried, "General, we have been brave." "True," said the general; "but, alas for my country!" Then regiments of younger men came along shouting: "General, we are brave." "Still quite true," returned the officer; "but, alas for my country!" Then came along some regiments of cadets, with their flags gleaming and banners waving; and they shouted, "General, we will be brave." Then the heart of the old soldier was reassured, and he cried: "Thank God, my country is safe!"

Young men, young women, the battle is yours. Our country is safe if you are alert, if you are active, if you are valiant. As to-day we look back over a hundred years, and see that intrepid form of Washington, standing erect and glowing in the wild whirl of battle, animating and cheering his countrymen, let that vision serve to inspire and exalt us for the struggles of to-day.

"New occasions teach new duties;
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth;
Lo! before us gleams our campfire;
We ourselves must pilgrims be;
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly
Through the desperate wintry sea;
Nor attempt the Future's portal
With the Past's blood-rusted key."

A PROTEST—THE KANSAS AFFAIR.

BY REV. T. C. MOFFATT.

One of the unfortunate things connected with Christian and reform work is the disposition of some to throw the blame for all existing evils upon the church, and especially its ministry. We are continually being regaled with descriptions of what a perfect state of society there would be if only the churches and ministers would get up and exert themselves and do their duty. If this attack were only from the enemy it would seem natural; but very often the cause is wounded in the house of its friends. Especially do we find good but unthinking temperance people berating the church because it does not rise up and vote out the saloon; or, in States where there is prohibition, because it does not secure a perfect enforcement of the law. It is a kind of talk that the enemies of Christ rejoice in and give the widest possible circulation.

I am not saying that some ministers and churches may not be delinquent in their duty, but a very different light is thrown upon this matter by the cold, hard figures of statistics. To hear many people talk one would think that the ministers and churches fully control the politics of this nation; that, as it is "a Christian nation," the Christians are to blame for all the evils that are rife. But the figures tell us that less than one-third of the voters are Christians of any denomination. How now are they to control the other two-thirds? Do not majorities rule? In any of the States of the Union, probably, if all the even nominally Christian voters, Roman Catholics and all, should vote against the saloon, they would effect nothing, unless a large number of outsiders went with them, a vote which the church sometimes influences but cannot always or reliably control. Why so much against the church when it has only one vote out of three?

The same thing is true in other reform movements. I know perfectly well that if the Christian voters of Kansas could make the laws and enforce them, not only would the liquor business be completely wiped out but other things would be different from what they are. Our crime is that of being in the minority. True, this ought not to deter us from exerting every energy to present and sustain our cause; but this is all we can do, and we ought not to be blamed for what we have not the numbers to accomplish. The sooner we get over the delusion that this is a Christian nation the better for the progress of Christ's kingdom.

A still more unfortunate thing it is that every time any one springs a new social or political idea, and the church does not at once accept it, however wild it may be, the air is filled with complaints against the ministers and churches as indifferent to the welfare of the masses. The present time seems to be fertile in all sorts of schemes, many of them grotesque, contradictory and chaotic; but if the promoter of any one of them cannot at once secure the adherence and co-operation of the churches and ministry, he raises a cry that the churches are run in the interest of plutocracy. Especially in Kansas, just now, is the "plutocrat" the great bug-a-boo and ghost. But if we do not endorse the vagaries and machinations of a certain political party whose nucleus is a powerful secret order, we are "plutocrats" and not in sympathy with "the people" in their attempt to free themselves from the galling chains of slavery.

I have been in Kansas all the time that things were working themselves up into their present condition. I tell the truth and lie not, when I say that all the special woes of our State are due to two causes, one a small one and the other a great one. The former is the lack of domestic industries, and the latter is financial folly. Financial folly is the great cause, but people do not like to own it. It is pleasanter to rant about parties, and trusts, and monopolies, and plutocrats, and curse the Santa Fe Railway!

All the socialistic ideas and shades of ideas ever invented seem to be in the air. What do you think of a district judge who teaches that the rights of a user are paramount to those of an owner? Yet this man, and another one or two like him, were behind the recent attempted revolution at Topeka. What do you think of the idea, presented in argument even before the Supreme Court, that because the Governor and Senate of a State recognize a certain body of men as a House of Representatives this makes that body of men a de facto and legal house? What do you think of the doctrine of "raising less corn and more hell?"

Is it not possible that there is such a thing as bogus reform, and that it is the duty of the ministers and churches not only to stand up for true reform, but against the false, though the latter as well as the former may sometimes be an unpopular thing to do? No advantage can be gained for the cause of right by blaming the church for what it has not numerical power to accomplish, nor because it will not join heart and soul in every movement that comes along claiming to be in the interest of the masses.

NEW YORK TO CHICAGO IN NINETEEN HOURS.

It is announced that a special train will make the daily run from New York City to Chicago, beginning April 30, in nineteen hours. By way of Detroit the distance is 976 miles, which compels a speed of over fifty-one and a-half miles an hour for the whole distance. The Detroit river passage costs some time, the sharp turns on the Hudson river consume more time, and the ascent from Albany to the table-lands of the State west of Albany require much time and power. There must be periods when the excessive speed needed to average the whirligig race will rush the passenger through the air between some stations at the rate of over seventy miles an hour. The average rate of the "accommodation train" for local day use is about twenty-five miles. The new United States armored cruiser "New York," tested at the mouth of the Delaware, last week, developed a speed of over twenty sea "knots," to which you must add about fifteen per cent to indicate land miles of 5,280 feet each. Bicycles have reached the speed of about twenty miles an hour. Presently we shall hear that railway trains have equaled the fleet carrier pigeon. Twenty years ago it required thirteen hours to go from Detroit to Chicago. Now, it seems, only six hours more will span the distance from New York to Chicago. At the rate of sixty miles an hour, a train darts through the air fourteen feet and eight inches in each second of time. At that rate, even a lazy man would suffer should he be compelled to stop instantly. Compounded condensing engines, perfected tracks, modern cars of perfect construction, and alert human care of railway lines to contribute to this physical rush through the air. Actual and literal flying through space, above the earth's surface, ought not to be thought impossible or far away in the distance.—Exchange.

THE LODGE AS A POLITICAL PROMOTER.

The Toronto (Can.) Daily Globe, one of the foremost of Dominion newspapers, wielding a powerful influence upon public opinion, gave publicity to the following in its editorial columns of a recent issue:

THE MEDICAL HEALTH VACANCY.

There is more in the contest for the post of medical health officer than appears on the surface. The fight that Mayor Fleming is waging is the old and often renewed one of clean civic government against secret society influence. If we were asked to name the greatest foe to efficient administration of the municipal affairs of the city we should say, without hesitation, the secret society.

We have long been afflicted with this unnatural development of the secret society movement in Toronto. It has become almost a by-word with us that a man must be an Orangeman, a Mason, a Son of England, or, still later, a member of the Protestant Protective Association, before he can successfully become a candidate for public office or obtain a position under the municipal government. There is nothing in the ritual of these associations pledging their members to support incompetent men for office, simply because they belong to the brotherhood, against competent men who have not the password. In practice this is done, however, to an extent that calls for energetic protest against such use of the machinery of secret societies. If we call the roll of the notable failures in the civic service during recent years it will be found that society influence put the incompetents into office, and kept them there to the public loss long after their uselessness was discovered.

Society influence fought hard against the dismissal of Dr. Allen, and is now fighting quite as determinedly to appoint him as his own successor. Dr. Barrick's name was rejected the other night simply because some of the members of council thought that by delay and a judicious use of society influence they could secure the office for themselves or their personal friends. If an appointment is not made at next meeting it will be because there is a private quarrel regarding the division of the spoils. The question of ability is the last one that will come up. The watchword will be the old query, "Is he one of us?" The rank and file of the societies, the members who are not looking for anything, should take active steps to end this condition of affairs. Their interests as citizens are far greater than as members of their particular society. They cannot afford to place men in office whose only qualification is that they dance to the music of the master's gavel. In the end such action will, if persisted in, reduce the city government to the low level of the majority of American cities. When the council meets again it is to be hoped that the members will give an honest vote to the best man, and not be led into appointing a "joiner," simply because he is a "joiner."

TELL THE TRUTH ABOUT THE LODGE.

We have an article clipped from the New Haven Register, entitled "The Church and Masonry" from a Mason's standpoint. It speaks of the recent Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII. against Masonry and makes it the text for quite an article in reference to the lodge. In it there is of course the usual glorification of the order. The statement that it teaches liberty is founded upon belief in God, has the Bible for a great law, is consistent with good citizenship, etc., etc. As is common there is a statement of the rapid extension of the order, the number of persons already members, etc. This is the regulation article. The charge against Freemasonry is not that the Roman church are opposed to it, nor that it does not have the Bible, nor that it is not numerically large, or financially prosperous. The charge is that it swears its members under penalty of having their throats cut, their tongues torn out, their bodies cut in two, and their heads smitten off. The charge respecting its ceremonies is that they are silly, ridiculous and indecent; that young men and old men, ministers of the Gospel and saloon-keepers, when being initiated are stripped almost to nudity and in this condition are made a sport for the brethren who conduct the initiations. It is alleged that the obligations of the organization bind men to partial honesty and truthfulness. It is alleged by those who are informed that Freemasonry is itself a pagan religion; that it boasts its lineal descent from the mysteries of Egypt, India and Greece, mysteries every scholar knows were so shockingly base and evil that a full description of them is impossible.

If, now, persons who think well of Freemasonry desire to secure the good opinion of those who are at present opposed to this organization, these are the points to which men should address themselves, and in place of general laudation, specific reply would be in order. Of course everybody knows that there are a great many worthy persons who have united with the Masonic lodge. There are also unworthy persons who are members of that lodge, and it is impossible for us to determine the character of the organization from the number of members which it enrolls, the amount of money which it commands, or even the character of certain persons who have become connected therewith. The whisky shops are numerous and, I am sorry, to say increasing. They control a vast amount of capital. They have a tremendous political influence, probably as much as the Masonic lodge; possibly no worse than that of the Masonic lodge. It is to be hoped that persons who undertake to enlighten the public respecting the order will address themselves to the real question at issue.—Wheaton College Record.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An honest man rewarded.—An inconsistency.—"Mental Influenza."—Easter.—A touching "make believe."—Legislative matters.—A Philanthropist.

With all respect to the old adage, "Virtue must be its own reward," that $15,000 recently given to ex-Senator Dawes, as a recognition of his thirty-six untarnished years of public service, ought to be an encouragement to every young man who finds a political career opening before him to keep his record clean and make a firm stand for principle, never stooping to any base or truckling methods. When Webster died, disgraced and heart-broken, having lost the coveted Presidential prize for which he had sold himself, a shrewd New England farmer remarked, "The South never pay their slaves." But poor human nature will continue to believe in the devil's fine promises, to discover when too late that he is much better at promising than performing; and if they will choose a slave's part they must expect in the end a slave's portion. But the late substantial honor received by the man who so bravely stood up for the rights of the Indian, and free education for the South of all her citizens, colored, or white, ought to have a grand moral effect, as it shows that there is a reverse side to the picture.

A convict, whose crime was dishonesty, says, according to the Shoe and Leather Reporter, that "he is compelled every day to die out pieces of paste-board which are put between the outer and inner soles of the shoes made there and sold as solid leather;" and he is naturally rather nonplussed at the inconsistency. I am not aware how much the contractors gain by the cheat on a single pair of shoes, but in the aggregate they must rob the public of thousands of dollars. They go scot-free, while the man who did the same thing, only in a different way, is behind prison-bars cutting out those bits of pasteboard, and chewing the cud of bitter reflection on society's unequal dealings. Will all the moral and religious instruction that he and his fellow-convicts receive from the chaplain on Sundays neutralize this bad object-lesson placed before their eyes every one of the six week-days? And who is responsible anyway?

"Mental influenza," that is what Rabbi de Sola Mendez calls "the higher criticism." It is a pretty good name for it, too, when you stop to think that, like that unpleasant disease, it seems to be epidemic, and, neglected, often runs into something worse. Perhaps in the mental world there are moral bacteria which answer to the grip microbes. If so, the advice that is good in the one case applies equally well to the other. Avoid breathing them in as far as possible, and keep spiritually so strong and healthy that if they do accidentally find entrance they will die of inanition.

March has overlapped into April, and so far the latter instead of the traditional "showers," has brought us only bright sunshine and bleak, chill winds. Our New England springs are calculated to teach a lesson in patience as much as our winters in hardy endurance. We sigh for that "ethereal mildness" of which the poet sings, but she makes us wait till the time is nearly ready for her to abdicate, and then what halcyon days she gives us!—dream-like, idyllic, faint with perfume of apple-blossoms, condensing as in most rare and precious essence all that was ever breathed in rhyme or said in plain prose of her witching charms.

Never were Boston's shop-windows so gaily decorated, or so filled to repletion with new millinery, gay dress-fabrics, and a kaleidoscopic display of Easter trifles. The more fashion invades religion the more popular the observance of such days will become. To what are we drifting? Rome smiles in her sleeve. She is a mighty fisher of men, though not at all in the apostolic way, and she knows well enough where she means to land us.

The poor women at the North End, who stitch overalls for two cents a pair, have no time to read the fashion-notes in the papers, but they must sometimes, if only by a glance at the shop-windows, come near enough to the gay, frivolous world of wealth and fashion to feel the awful contrast. What would the money spent by many a rich woman just for Easter flowers to adorn her breakfast-table mean to this poor slave of the needle. I was once both amused and touched by overhearing the talk of some little waifs who had been gathered from the streets and their wretched homes by the hand of public charity. One picked out a lady among the throng of passers-by, and said to the rest, "That is my mother." Her companions followed suit, and each picked out the lady whose face and dress took her fancy, as "her mother." Poor little creatures, sunning themselves in the ideal motherhood they had never known! Their make-believe was as real to them as that of happier children who make believe that their dolls are real live babies, but do not need to go any farther and create an illusion about them of imaginary motherhood, having never known, in all their lives of sunshine, what it is to miss the genuine thing.

Our Massachusetts Legislature has done nothing, so far, to cover itself with any particular glory. The much-needed bill to prevent indecent theatrical advertising has been killed in the House without debate. The bill to forbid the issue of grocers' liquor licenses was rejected by a large majority. The Liquor-Law Committee also reported adversely on the bill against open bars, though it is likely, if the law had been passed, Gov. Russel would have vetoed it, as he did a year ago. But the most outrageous of all their proceeding has been in reference to the "age of protection," which the W. C. T. U. desired to have raised from 14 to 18. The hearing was characterized by a most unchivalric lack of courtesy on the part of the committee; but bad as this was it was not the worst. The bill, amended to 16, passed the third reading in the House, but on a motion to reconsider it, the brave women who had worked so nobly to protect the girlhood of the State, found to their indignation and chagrin that it was so worded as to practically nullify the end sought for. These are the law-makers of enlightened Massachusetts which would doubtless resent being placed morally on the same level with France. Yet there the age of protection is 21!

However, it has done a few things which are creditable. It has rejected the bill allowing the fraternal orders to pay their members for bringing in recruits; and it has squelched Parson Brown's curious license bill, which proposed to make the clergy of the State a party in liquor-selling. To the honor of the ministerial profession, this would be nearly as impracticable a measure as the younger Murphy's plan, to make the man who was bound to drink, buy it by the gallon, and constitute his wife bar-tender. By this ingenious method she would have the big profits which now go into the rum-seller's till, so that by the time he had become a confirmed drunkard she and her family would be independent of public aid.

New Hampshire has passed an anti-Pinkerton law which prohibits the employment, as special police, of any persons not residents of the State.

It seems a rather mean and small thing in Boston's City Council to refuse Mrs. Alice Lincoln's gift of rocking-chairs for the comfort of the aged pauper-women at Rainsford Island. If half the commissioners of public institutions had been women, this deed of practical philanthropy would have been accepted with the appreciation it deserved.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 5, 1893.

It was generally supposed that the question of opening the World's Fair on Sunday was finally and definitely disposed of when the Fifty-second Congress expired without repealing the law against Sunday opening. I was therefore much surprised, a few days since, to learn that a Chicago lawyer, representing the board of control, was in Washington for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, what would be the probable action of the government if the Exposition officials defied the law and opened the gates on Sunday. It is not likely that the lawyer got the information, because no single official, not even the President, would undertake the responsibility of saying in advance what action would be taken by the government to enforce its laws and to punish its violators; but his coming after it indicates an intention on the part of those in charge of the Exposition to ignore the law against Sunday opening. The argument has been advanced that the government will be powerless to punish anybody or to compel the closing of the gates on Sunday, if the managers care to open them, because there is no penalty stated for the violation of the law, which is in effect merely a stipulation that the managers shall, in consideration of an appropriation of $2,500,000 in souvenir silver half-dollars, agree not to open the Exposition grounds on Sunday. Not being a lawyer, your correspondent will not venture an opinion as to the law; but he does not hesitate to predict that failure to keep this agreement made with Congress will be financially disastrous to the managers of the Exposition, if it does not make them liable to legal punishment.

St. John's Protestant Episcopal church received as an Easter offering a handsome communion set of solid gold, the only one in the city. The name of the donor was by request withheld from the public.

Information has been received at the Department of State of the presentation, by the American minister to Turkey, of the protest of this government against the abstraction from the mails of communications from American officials in Turkey to the United States government, by Turkish officials. Also that an official had been sent to investigate the petty persecution and annoyance of American missionaries in the province of Marsovan.

The United States Supreme Court this week handed down a number of important decisions, among them being one prepared by the newest member—Justice Jackson, of Tennessee—declaring the right of the State courts to try a prisoner who has been brought by requisition from another State upon any charge they may see fit, instead of having to confine themselves to the charge or charges set forth in the requisition papers, as was contended, and as is the law when a prisoner is extradited from a foreign country. The decision explains at length why, in the opinion of the court, the States in the Federal Union do not occupy the same relations toward each other as independent nations do, and affirms the decisions of the Georgia courts, previously made in the same case. The court, also, in an elaborate opinion prepared by Justice Field, refused the prayer of the State of Virginia in regard to changing the boundary line between Virginia and Tennessee, and declared the present boundary line, adopted in 1803, to be the true and legal boundary between the States.

Two gentlemen, business men of Washington, were discussing and congratulating each other upon the recent failure of the attempt to establish a permanent race-track in a suburb of Washington, and one of them said, I thought very pertinently: "I am a horse-lover, as you know, but I am teetotally opposed to the public race-tracks of the country as at present conducted, and rejoice at the failure to establish one here, with daily races all the year. The old argument that race-tracks are necessary to improve the breed of horses may once have been a good one, but the public race-track of to-day makes nothing but a breed of gamblers and drunkards; and I venture the positive assertion that not a single public race-track in the United States could pay expenses if gambling and the sale of liquor were prohibited at the tracks; and by prohibiting gambling, I mean that they shall not be allowed to telegraph the results of the races to the dens in all of our large cities where pools are sold on the races, to the ruination of thousands of young men."

President Cleveland has decided to attend the opening of the World's Fair, and it is probable that all or nearly all the members of his Cabinet will accompany him; but, according to present arrangements, Mrs. Cleveland will not go.

Government officials are taking an active interest in the preparations that are being made under the new quarantine law to keep the cholera from getting a foothold in this country this summer, and those directly in charge are confident that they will succeed, if it be within the bounds of human endeavor to do so.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., April 5, 1893.

The gullibility of average humanity has been demonstrated in the 77,468 patrons of thirty-three "fraternal beneficiary associations" in Massachusetts, while the remorseless cupidity of their "supremes" furnishes ample proof of the "total depravity" of those "vampires" who wax fat upon the blood and substance of human sacrifices. That such vultures should seek shelter under cover of secrecy is not strange, and that they strenuously resist every effort to expose their schemes is perfectly natural. Only the "recording angel," who "seeth in secret," knows all the deep-laid schemes, or has chronicled a full list of defaulters, bankruptcies, paupers, maniacs and broken-hearted suicides credited to the account of these rapacious wolves, lurking "privily for the innocent," saying, "Cast in your lot with us: let us have one purse; we shall find all precious substance; we shall fill our houses with spoil;" but judicial investigations have placed some of their deeds of darkness within reach of the public.

Insurance Commissioner Merrill, in his official report, May 2, 1892, "turns on the light," and publishes the result of investigations into the condition of these orders. After demonstrating the absurdity of the claims made by the advocates of these fanciful schemes, he fortifies his position with an array of facts that reveals a malicious perfidy of fathomless depth. It uncovers a merciless greed for gain that scorns the experience of youth, clutches the stored pittance and frugal savings of the aged and infirm, betrays the confidence of the fatherless and widow, and plunders whom it may lure by its tempting bait, regardless of sex or condition, and, apparently without remorse, appropriates to itself the spoils wrested from its victims by lying and intrigue.

"The Endowment Graveyard" is the significant heading of an instructive section in the commissioner's report. To account for the enormous deficit which is such a mystery to certificate-holders, the commissioner gives samples of the peculiar methods by which these corporations transact business. From the twenty-second, which he instances in more or less detail, I select the "Royal Ark" as a sample. For a time this was among the most popular "benefit" orders in New England. Speaking of this society, the commissioner said: "The principal business of the meetings of the executive board seems, from the records, to have been the voting by the officers to themselves of donations in addition to their fixed salaries." He gives a list of fourteen officers with specific amounts of salary and donations to each. The aggregate of salaries is $26,002; donations to the same officials, by their own votes, $55,083; total, $81,085.

The ingenuity of their methods is shown in the case of J. W. Hamilton, whose salary was $1,646, with donations amounting to $6,035. "Hamilton was also the printer who furnished the corporation most of its supplies. He was chairman of the Committee on Supplies, and, as such, ordered of himself, the printer, whatever blanks and printing the corporation needed. He was a member of the Auditing Committee, and, as such, approved the bills which Hamilton of the Supply Committee had ordered of Hamilton the printer. He was also a member of the Finance Committee, and, as such, Hamilton approved the bills which Hamilton had audited, and which Hamilton had ordered of himself." This little business combination gave Mr. Hamilton ample opportunity to eke out his $7,681 donations and salary with a comfortable income, which it is presumable he improved.

The commissioner says: "There is about $7,000 of assets, to be distributed among 3,100 members," who had contributed to the funds of the corporation $189,200, and who may receive, in the final settlement, from $1.54 to $2.64 each." Others make no better showing, and the whole scheme is evidently a swindle no less aggravated than that perpetrated by the Louisiana lottery.

The instance mentioned on page 50 of the report, where a scroll-sawyer, who received $15 per week before he was promoted to "Supreme Chaplain" of the "Golden Lion," at a salary of $7,500 per year, and who was actually paid $15,000 for a single prayer, has been widely circulated; but there is a paragraph on page 49, deserving of special note: "I wish," says the commissioner, "it could have been your privilege to sit during the months of autumn, day after day, week after week, month after month, as I have, and listen to the stories of the poor, duped, deluded, swindled and defrauded victims of these twenty corporations that have gone into their graves—ladies between seventy and eighty years of age, who had drawn out of the savings banks their little accumulations, under the promise, as in several cases they had it most solemnly, of these supreme officers, that they should receive about four-fold in return; little cash-girls, whose heads hardly reached my desk, from Houghton Dutton's and other stores, who receive $2.50 a week, and their mothers gave them the half-dollar for spending money. The officers assured them that the half-dollar per week would surely bring them $100 at the end of the year; they took their little half-dollar, denied themselves all the things they were accustomed to buy with it, and contributed two dollars a month, until, as I recall one instance, the assessments came more frequently, and the two little girls had paid in $40 each; then they came in and stood by my desk, exhibiting in a bunch assessments calling for $62 more. They were compelled of course to drop out, which meant the loss of all that they had paid."

I see by recent communications in the papers that efforts are being made to repeat this swindling scheme in different parts of the country, and I am prompted to send this word of warning, hoping that some tempted one may be saved from this unmitigated imposition upon the credulous.

J. P. STODDARD.

CHICAGO ADDRESSES.

Last Sabbath evening, the 9th inst., the Trinity Lutheran church, on Superior street, welcomed an address on the work of the National Christian Association, and its importance to the churches. This is a congregation of Danes. Most of the older people imperfectly understand our language, but the evening service is usually in English, and is therefore more popular with the young people, who formed a good audience.

Rev. A. S. Neilsen has long been pastor of this church. The Inter Ocean of Monday morning gives a very interesting account of his long and arduous labors among the Danes in America. He is a spiritual father to multitudes of them. The labors demanded by a metropolitan congregation, and also by the Danish Lutheran Synod, of which he has been president some twenty years, have been very severe; and, now when years begin to press, he has felt constrained to resign both charges and retire from city life and its exacting labors. He goes to Wisconsin, and will continue to serve the church in missionary and colonization work. He has always welcomed me as a representative of our reform, and the address of Sabbath evening was the fulfillment of an engagement long since made.

Rev. A. Shaap, son-in-law of Pastor Neilsen, and student under Prof. Weidner in Lake View Theological Seminary, has charge of the English services in Trinity church. He happily introduced my address and gave, as one reason why the Danish Lutherans were separated from the lodge, that nine-tenths of secret society men were un-Christian. This address closed a memorable day for the church. The services had been quite protracted. Pastor Neilsen preached a farewell sermon in the morning, and other services continued until after 7 p. m., the last being a communion for a number just received into the church.

The parlor meeting at the home of Mr. E. A. Cook, on the 28th ult., deserves further mention. It was, in respect to attendance and sociability at least, a very successful gathering; and this was due to the excellent management of Mrs. Cook. It was intended for the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Congregational church, but, when too late to change, it was found that the society had another meeting at the same time. The Sabbath-school teachers and workers were then invited by notice from the pulpit, and they filled the ample parlors and halls with an earnest, thoughtful and very agreeable company. Thanks to the forethought of our hosts, the entertainment was completed and the social hour prolonged by a simple collation. Thus if any were not well pleased with the lecture, the general effect of the meeting left an agreeable recollection, and I trust will help to enlist some friends for our cause in Chicago.

Word comes of several additional delegations to the Annual Meeting Conference, June 20. Several meetings must be reached this week of Congregational, Reformed and Evangelical bodies. Let prayer arise continually for God's blessing on this meeting.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

WICHITA, Kan., April 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am now in the metropolis of Southwestern Kansas. I came here on Tuesday morning, and am busy mapping out my work for the next five or seven weeks in Sedgwick and the three adjoining counties—Butler, Sumner and Cowley. I have already engagements arranged for three weeks, and soon expect to have more provided through my good helper and that earnest reformer, Mr. S. J. Peter, of Butler county.

My brother, Rev. R. A. Paden, will join me soon after the 20th of this month. We have it in our plan to do much work together. Doubtless we can help and encourage each other, and thus help forward the work. It is our earnest purpose to try this plan. I trust that the friends of the cause of Christian reform in these four counties, or near by, will let us know of any speaking they wish done among them in these coming weeks of April and May. Address us at Wichita.

We purpose closing our series of meetings with a Christian Reform Convention in Wichita, dealing with temperance, the Sabbath question, Romanism and secretism. By considerable correspondence I am endeavoring to enlist the friends of all these reforms in our meetings, and especially in our convention. Our prayer to our Master is that he will enlarge hearts, and that many will be persuaded to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty". Time, and hard work, and the Lord's favor will tell. We trust the friends of reform will remember us.

I am now enjoying the kind hospitality of Mr. Samuel Johnson and Rev. Jos. A. Lawrence, pastor of the United Presbyterian church here.

In the Lord's work, WM. C. PADEN.

The Populist movement in Kansas appears to be losing its strength and influence. This statement finds attestation in the recent municipal elections. In forty cities, thirty-five elected Republican officers. Even at Wichita, the home of the Populist Governor, where every means was used to insure success for the "third party," the Republican candidate was elected; "foreshadowing," as Banker Levy, of that city, expresses it, "the disintegration of the Populist movement". The Populist party, it will be remembered, embraces the secret clans of the "Farmers' Alliance" and the newer "Industrial Union". Honest voters prefer a free and open ballot to an underhanded, disguised franchise.

Do you take the Cynosure? Why not? Do you pay for it? Why don't you?

CORRESPONDENCE.

MINISTERIAL INDIFFERENCE CONCERNING THE LODGE.

FULLERTON, Neb., March 25, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your paper bears glad tidings of great joy to me, as it comes each week.

I do not see or understand how so many of our Christians, and especially ministers who know, or should know, the Word of God, can join any secret society. God's Word tells us to "come out from among them, and be separate". How they reconcile the lodge with such Scripture as Ephesians 5:11-13; James 5:12; 2 Corinthians 6:14, and Matthew 5:33, 39, and many other passages, is more than I can tell; but a great many of our pastors have heard an uncertain sound when they come to the conclusion that they were called to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I do not think men ought to stand behind the sacred desk unless they are willing to preach against all evils. Very many dare not open their mouths against the saloon, and there is a much less number who dare say anything against secret societies.

I am glad to learn of the grand work that is being done over the Union in the way of enlightening the people to this Baal-worship. May God bless the leaders of this grand and glorious work, and may the time soon come when secret societies shall be a thing of the past. I am with you on this question, as well as on every question of reform.

I have talked two men out of the Masonic order. One is a minister and the other a lawyer. They do not take a bold stand against secret societies, but they say they will not have anything more to do with them.

Let us, one and all, who are working for the upbuilding of God's kingdom, hold fast in prayer, and we shall have just what we ask for. "Where two or three agree as touching any one thing, it shall be done."

There are two pastors in Fullerton. One is a "way-up" Mason; but the other does not belong to any order at all.

May God bless and save his people.

D. W. CROMER.

A LETTER FROM REV. R. N. COUNTEE.

DALLAS, Texas, March 28, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am, as you have been informed, arranging to move out of Memphis to the State of Kansas.

In my last communication to the Cynosure I intimated that fact. The late lynchings in and around Memphis, the most atrocious of which occurred March 9, 1892, were wholly uncalled for, for no crime had been alleged against those who were then wantonly and maliciously slaughtered, except the defending of their own property. These three young men were of untarnished reputation, and had committed no offence even worthy of imprisonment. As a result, however, our best people became demoralized and hundreds left the city. Mr. Brinkley, my right-hand colleague, sold his entire church property, and, with eighty of his membership, went to and are now living in Stockton, Cal. Mr. John Morgan, of the Chelsea Baptist church, sold his church property, and he, with a number of his people, left for California. Mr. Copeland, pastor of the Macedonia Baptist, sold his church property, and he, with many of his people, found an asylum in Oklahoma Territory. Hundreds of our people, and many of my congregation, are in Chicago. Every member of my church who owned his or her own home, except about six, have left the city.

I had given most of my time, at home and abroad, to the work of building up our school, and when this catastrophe came, completely demoralizing the people, I found myself unable to get a living out of my membership, for not only were the people demoralized, but business, as well as the people, became demoralized, and it was a task for the people to eke out a respectable livelihood. I am now in the field, trying to accumulate something to meet pressing demands and obligations that will be due June 1, to the amount of $1,500, and then move myself and family to Wichita, Kan., whither some eighty of my church members are located; refusing to join any church there because of their lodge affiliations.

I find the entire country here honeycombed with lodge influence. The churches are nearly ruined because of this evil. I preached to quite an intelligent audience on Sunday, and gave them some pretty strong anti-lodge ideas; and I rejoice greatly in saving two young ladies, whose petition had gone to the lodge, from uniting therewith. I find, however, there is very little money in this kind of evangelistic work.

There is a great work to do in Kansas, and when I am located there, if in accord with His will, and I believe it is, I shall not rest day nor night until I have spoken in every association in the State concerning the evils of secret societies, from a religious, social and political standpoint.

The school at Memphis is very much in need of financial help. We are doing a good work there; but we have more empty seats than ever before since the work began. The Living Way has suspended, and we are waiting, watching and looking for what will come next. Our people are all restless; for when we are snatched up and massacred without judge or jury investigation, we are restless, not knowing when a charge may be alleged at any of our doors. Mothers, fathers, and children are alike uneasy; and if the people had money there would be no less than 10,000 who would leave Memphis and surrounding country in less than thirty days, just because of fear, in the absence of immediate danger, or even signs thereof. Pray for us. Yours for righteousness,

R. N. COUNTEE.

Present address, Memphis, Tenn.

THE LODGE SPIRIT ALWAYS THE SAME EVERYWHERE.

CONSTANTINE, Mich., March 20, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am still an Anti-mason, and would be glad to see all secret societies wiped off from the face of the earth; but I am now 87 years old, and I shall not live to see it done.

When Morgan was kidnapped and killed, in 1826, and I saw that no redress could be had, and no justice could be obtained, I saw and believed that Freemasonry was a vile enemy to a free people, and that the great design of the secret institutions was to usurp this government and set up one of their own. I now think that the time is near at hand when the legions of secret societies will all join and strike for such a government. If they do, it will be the downfall of these United States, the destruction of a free people, and the end of our free government, I fear, forever.

Sometime since I asked our Methodist elder in charge if he did not think it his duty to preach against Freemasonry. He said: "No; that is God's work, and I will not trouble my mind about it."

I called on a local elder of the Methodist church and asked him to take the Cynosure. He replied that "he thought he would not care to take it." "Well," said I, "what will you give toward the price of it for one year?" Looking me in the face, he stretched out his hand toward me, and remarked: "When I make up my mind to take that paper I will let you know!"

I also spoke to one of the official members of that church about taking the Cynosure, and he railed on me, saying that "about all there is in this affair is caused by a few soreheads going around and making their complaints." He then asked another man, who stands high in the estimation of the people, if he would like to take the Anti-masonic paper. "No," he replied, "I do not care anything about secret societies, one way or the other." He seemed to me like a feather floating in the air, riding easily along according to the current, and injuring no one.

Another gentleman, when I asked him to take the Cynosure, said: "The secret institution could not be so bad, because there are so many good men belonging to it," and declined to subscribe.

Nearly all the business men in Constantine belong to secret orders, and seem to be bound for the great sanctum sanctorum. O. C. M. BATES.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The April Arena opens with a striking full page portrait of James G. Clark, the poet, and then presents the following well-spread table of contents. The variety is ample for the most desultory reader, but some of the papers are less wholesome than is desirable. The Future of Fiction, by Hamlin Garland; The Social Quagmire, and the Way Out—Wage-workers, by Alfred R. Wallace, D. C. L.; Authority in Christianity, by Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D.; The Initiative in Switzerland, by W. D. McCrackan, A. M.; The Modern Expression of the Oldest Philosophy, by Katherine Coolidge; Automatic Writing, by B. F. Underwood; The Tenement House Problem in New York, by Eva M. Valesh; Compulsory Arbitration—a reply to Dr. Abbott, by Chester A. Reed; Anarchism—What it is, and What it is not, by Victor Yarros; Masters, a poem, by Mabel Hayden; The So-called "Fad" in the Public Schools, by Helen E. Starrett; A Poet of the People, by B. O. Flower; Celestial Gotham, by Allan Forman; The Voice of the Mountain, a poem, by James G. Clark. The best article in this issue of the Arena is that by the editor, entitled: The Burning of Negroes in the South—A Protest and a Warning, which includes A Survey of the Past, The Story of the Tragedy at Paris, Texas, The Crime Viewed from the Standpoint of Simple Justice, From the Point of Expediency, and its Influence Upon the Minds of the Young. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co.

The opening article in the April Century is of unusual interest—The Chicago Anarchists of 1886; The Crime, the Trial and the Punishment, by Judge Joseph E. Gary, who presided at the trial, artistically illustrated—the whole forming a "historic moment" seldom surpassed in intensity. The recurrence of Arbor Day on the 22d of April gives occasion for several articles on different aspects of the subject, including A Tree Museum, by Miss M. C. Robbins, being a description of that unique institution, the Harvard Arboretum; a poem, The Heart of the Tree (What does he plant who plants a tree?); and editorial articles on Arbor Day, The World's Fair and Landscape-Gardening, Parks in and near Large Cities, and A Memorable Advance in Forest Preservation, the last having reference to the reservations made during the closing days of the late administration. The last of The Letters of Two Brothers—General and Senator Sherman—are of striking interest, since they give an intimate account of the relations between General Grant and General Sherman after the war, including the trouble between President Johnson and General Grant, involving General Sherman, and Grant's candidacy for the presidency. In this number, also, is begun a series of articles on the time of Queen Anne, by Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant, the novelist, well known also as the author of historical studies of Florence and Venice. The first, entitled The Princess Anne, deals with the period preceding Anne's accession to the throne; the second, The Queen and the Duchess, describes the period following. The May number will begin a new volume of this excellent magazine.

The April issue of the Cottage Hearth presents an unusual number of bright stories, interesting articles, and special departments on the varied interests of home life. The opening story by Anne J. Edwards introduces an out-of-the-way corner of the world—an island twenty miles from the coast of Maine. An interesting period of revolutionary history is revived in Jerold Dean's estimate of Paul Revere's service in the cause of American freedom. Other articles and stories in this number are In the Sculptor's Studio, by L. B. Fletcher, Erastus Faulkner, by Matt Crim, and An Australian Adventure, by Lieut. H. B. Whitmarsh. A pleasant story, An Easter Rose, by Emma H. Nason, appears in the Young People's Department. The departments in the Cottage Hearth are directed by editors chosen for their peculiar ability for the special work under their charge. This number contains especially handsome illustrations. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.

The leading illustrated papers in American Gardening for April are: An Eastern Fruit Farm—Sketch of the New Agriculture of the New York Lakes; The Muskmelon Industry—Opinions and Experiences from North and South; Horticulture at the World's Fair; The Evolution of the Blackberry; The Carnation in America, with a full-page colored frontispiece; Tact and Taste in Arranging Ornamental Grounds—A Village Lot. The several regular departments are filled with timely information and suggestions, and embrace a great variety of topics. It is difficult to imagine a better periodical, devoted to gardening, than this, for a dollar a year. Published at the Times Building, New York City.

PAMPHLETS.

There is much matter for serious contemplation in the pamphlet of Rev. A. Sims (of Uxbridge, Ont.), "Is the World Morally Improving or Degenerating?" While he shows by actual statistics and trustworthy testimony that knowledge is increasing, according to Scriptural prophecy, he also shows conclusively, from varied and accumulated evidence of the most reliable character, that crime and wickedness are exhibiting augmented vigor and growth. In conclusion he says: "Many other quotations might be given, all showing the lamentable decline of vital piety. The very sins which characterized the time of Noah are rapidly developing at the present time. Truly there is abundant and growing need for every Christian to cry fervently, 'O Lord, revive thy work; in the midst of the years make known, in wrath remember mercy.'" Its price is 20 cents a dozen. Address as above.

The International Religious Liberty Association of Battle Creek, Mich., and 20 College Place Chicago, publish "Appeal and Remonstrance: Resolutions Adopted by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, February 24, 1893." The remonstrance is against the Supreme Court of the United States and Congress for "violating the Constitution, and invading the dearest rights of the people, by legislating upon the subject of religion, deciding a religious controversy and establishing a religious institution, in the matter of closing the World's Fair on Sunday." The appeal is made, as Christians, to the government and people of the United States, in behalf of letting the Seventh-day advocates worship God on Saturday and visit the World's Fair on Sunday. It is worded differently, but this is the meaning. In other words, it is a plea for religious liberty in its broadest sense.

The Eighth Annual Report of the Young Men's Institute of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of New York, 222, 224 Bowery, presents the condition and advantages of a worthy institution. The membership, December 31, 1892, numbered 643. Its advantages consist of a reading-room, library, social room, gymnasium, elevating entertainments, monthly meetings, outings, various religious meetings, evening schools, and various other helps. Address D. E. Yarnell, M. D., Secretary, 222 Bowery, New York City, for terms and other particulars.

A QUEER LAWSUIT.

In Jackson, Mich., lives Byron L. Lockwood, an attorney, who, several years ago, sought to join certain secret societies, but was blackballed on each occasion. He now brings suit in the Circuit Court against these societies for injuries to his character and reputation by their rejections, in the sum of $50,000. In his complaint he arraigns the fraternities for employing occult and supernatural means of discovering secrets and for other ghostly behavior.

A NEW WRINKLE.

One of the fraternal beneficial societies has lately adopted a new feature, as follows: Members joining between the ages of 16 and 33, by paying all assessments and dues for thirty years will receive a paid-up certificate, exempting them forever after from paying any dues or assessments. Those joining between the ages of 34 and 43, after a continuous payment of twenty-five years, will receive a paid-up certificate, and those over 43 will be required to pay for twenty years and no longer. We are not acquainted with the details of the plan adopted.

A DIFFERENCE.

A bill has passed the Pennsylvania Legislature that clearly defines the difference between societies that pay sick and death benefits only, and those that do an endowment business. Heretofore all kinds of speculative concerns have endeavored to build themselves up upon the reputation of legitimate fraternal beneficial societies, and their projectors have never tired of advertising that they were the same as the American Legion of Honor and similar societies.

SECTARIANISM AND THE LODGE.

The backbone of lodge organizations is made up of preachers, church officials and members of all Christian bodies. An infidel cannot be admitted unless he perjure himself. The writer has touched elbows and pressed hands in the lodge-room with a Universalist, a Catholic, a Methodist, a Lutheran, etc.—Henry S. Baker.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Gen. Jas. R. Carnahan has been in Washington, D. C., conferring with prominent members of the order as to the general program for the army during the conclave of '94; this includes prizes for competing commands, route of parade, encampment, etc. He claims there will be 25,000 uniformed knights in line on that grand thoroughfare, Pennsylvania avenue, and that at least 200,000 strangers will be in the city on that occasion. —The Knight.

BOGUS "ANTIQUITY."

"Antiquity" is what many of the fraternal orders of the present age are seeking for. One of recent origin, which includes insurance among its incidentals, dates its beginning back to the days of the Knights of St. John and Malta, in the early part of the eleventh century. [These are not the knights of Masonic renown.] Others have similar antiquated ideas which have lain buried many centuries but to be uncovered by the inventive genius of some enterprising Yankee. —The Knight.

Dandruff is an exudation from the pores of the scalp that spreads and dries, forming scurf and causing the hair to fall out. Hall's Hair Renewer cures it.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1893.

Put not forth thyself in the presence of the king, and stand not in the place of great men: for better it is that it be said unto thee, Come up hither; than that thou shouldest be put lower in the presence of the prince whom thine eyes have seen.—PROVERBS 25: 6, 7.

AN HONORABLE RECORD.

Bishop Milton Wright, of the Radical (or Loyal) Church of the United Brethren in Christ, has written a history of the early conferences of that denomination, in which there is much to interest our readers, as it relates to the position of the church from the first, upon the anti-secrecy question. We copy from his articles, as published in the Christian Conservator of April 5:

"In 1821, the General Conference took action on both slavery and intemperance," resolving that slavery should not henceforth be tolerated, nor any slaveholder be admitted to membership therein. It also resolved "that neither preacher nor lay member shall be allowed to carry on a distillery."

"In 1826, it was found that three preachers of Miami Annual Conference were Freemasons. The conference required them to cease their connection with the order; and on the 8th day of June, 1826, by a unanimous vote, it adopted the following paper:

WHEREAS, We have members in this conference who belong to the Masonic fraternity, therefore we feel a disposition to bear with them, and deal with them as brethren, so long as they do not attend Masonic lodges;...but if any of our brethren should hereafter join said fraternity, they shall not only be deprived of the privilege of taking charge of a circuit, or of holding any authority in an official capacity, but they shall thereby expel themselves from the connection. No preacher shall encourage any of our members in joining the Masonic fraternity, nor those who are Masons in joining our society.

"Thus the Miami conference, months before the abduction of William Morgan for exposing Freemasonry, resolved against Masonry, and provided against its toleration in the conference.

"In April, 1827, the annual conference in the East adopted the following paper on the subject of Freemasonry:

Resolved, That we, the members of this annual conference, do not approve of any of our preachers or members belonging to the order of Freemasons; and that, in the future, every preacher, and every member, who is connected with this order, or who may join it, shall lose membership in our church.

"Such action by the two chief conferences of the church, shows how early the position against Freemasonry (the only secret society that then beset the pathway of the church) was taken. The one conference acted before the Morgan abduction, and the other before the excitement growing out of that outrage had reached their territory; for it is a notorious fact, that the press of the country was under the Masonic thumb, and long suppressed the knowledge and discussion of the outrage.

"In May, 1829, the general conference, following the policy indicated by the action of those aforementioned annual conferences, adopted the following strong rule against Freemasonry:

Resolved, That in no way or manner, nor in any sense of the word, shall Freemasonry be approved or tolerated in our church; and that should any one of our church members who may now be a Freemason continue to attend their lodges, or as a Freemason attend and take part in their procession; or if he joins the Freemasons, such member by such an act excludes himself from membership in our church.

"This, in substance, continued to be the rule in Discipline in succeeding years. In improved form, it has been the rule down to the present time, except during the Liberal rule of 1885-1889, which was a mere pretense of a rule on the subject. As other secret orders arose, the rule was so shaped as to prohibit connection with them.

"Upon the adoption of the constitution in 1841, a clause was inserted in it which said:

There shall be no connection with secret combinations.

"This is still the constitutional law on the subject of secret societies. It was willfully and shamelessly violated by the sham rule of 1885, which its framers intended to be operative."

Accompanying the foregoing is the following note by the editor of the Conservator:

"Our law on secret combinations has given good satisfaction throughout the church during the present quadrennium. In our judgment, this law will need no improvement at the coming general conference. The definition of a secret combination in the Discipline is without any defect. It says: 'A secret combination is an organization whose members are pledged to conceal their initiatory ceremony, obligation, or their inside workings.' It does not say that these are absolute secrets; they may all be exposed; but that members are pledged to conceal them. The disjunction of the sentence by 'or' makes it a secret combination if any one of the three things named is found to inhere in the society. Then the mode of proceeding against offenders is very good. We think no revision will be needed on this law at the coming general conference."

This is a remarkable and most honorable record—an example that might be followed (and should be) by every Christian church in existence.

THE HEATHENISM OF MORMONISM.

The dedication of the great Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City began April 6 and will last until this issue of the Cynosure has reached a majority of our subscribers.

It would be difficult for us to furnish our readers with anything of more interest and undoubted trustworthiness in relation to this important event than is contained in a letter to the (Baptist) Standard, of this city, from Rev. S. G. Adams, the District Missionary for Utah. It reveals a system of worship from which every true Christian would turn with disgust mingled with horror for the paganism which it embodies, and which stamps, more indelibly than ever, the Mormon church as the propagator of ruinous false doctrines that disgrace the century and the civilization of our country:

ORIGIN OF THE TEMPLE.

"July 28, 1847, four days after the parched soil of the valley was touched by the weary feet of the saints, Brigham Young struck the ground with his cane, saying, 'Here will be the Temple of our God.' On this exact spot the work of excavation began Feb. 14, 1853. The corner-stones were laid April 6th of the same year. Temple block contains ten acres. The building is of white granite, taken from the quarries twenty miles south of the city. During all the early years the chief industry was the carting of these huge blocks of granite, swinging under carts drawn by six or eight yoke of cattle, four days often spent in getting one rock from the quarries. Finally a railroad was built.

TEMPLE DIMENSIONS.

"Length, 186½ feet; width 99 feet; height, 222½ feet to top of spires. There are six towers, three on the east and three on the west. The whole structure rests on a footing wall 16 feet thick and 16 feet deep, warranted not to crack for the one thousand millennial years. The area covered by the Temple is 21,850 feet. Each corner tower has a circular stairway from basement to top. The steps, over two hundred in number, are of solid marble cut by hand. There are four floors including the basement. Each floor is divided into rooms of various sizes except the top, which is all one room, called the assembly-room. Beautiful galleries with bronzed rails sweep around this room. The ceiling is 36 feet high. All that money can do has been done to beautify this room.

USES OF THE TEMPLE.

"Its specific use is to do work for the dead. Much of this work is secret and can never be known by a Gentile. In the basement, with its white marble floor, is the baptismal font, resting on twelve brazen oxen. This is where the living are to be baptized for dead relatives and friends who failed during life to accept the true Gospel. To do work for the dead only two facts are necessary, the date of birth and death of friends. My neighbor said he had been baptized and done work for 150 relatives who died out of the Mormon faith. To accomplish this work in their behalf he and his wife have made eleven trips to Logan, each time at a cost of $400,—$4,400. So you see it is expensive to get the dead into the sweep of the true Gospel. He took a trip to the old country and paid an expert to examine the records back for five hundred years. He traced four hundred more relatives, but with few exceptions was not able to get the date of birth and death; so the poor fellows must stay in purgatory. The expensive trip was largely lost, but he found a few persons whom he can save as soon as the Temple is ready. He said, 'Friends in the hot place were more likely to repent than on earth, but they could not be baptized or go through the Endowment House. This could be done only by proxy, and for this work the Temple was built.' He said, 'Our president Woodruff has been baptized for and done work for each of the dead presidents of the United States, and they are safe.

TEMPLE FURNISHING.

"The Temple has its own electric light plant, consisting of four engines and four dynamos, with a capacity of two thousand lights. Then it has pumps, boilers and motor power for two handsomely finished elevators. The vast edifice is heated with a system of hot water, while for ventilation the touch of electric buttons will throw open transoms in the various rooms and start sixteen fans of one-half horse power each.

"There seems to be no lack of money for furnishing.

DEDICATION CEREMONIES.

"No program is made public. No definite time for closing, as all depends on the number who want to take degrees and the rapidity with which the work is done. All we know is that these degrees and solemn oaths are taken somewhat after the order of other secret societies, each degree being acted as in a drama, each room being furnished with all the paraphernalia helpful to scenic effect.

"So here we have a heathen temple in the heart of our beloved America, the poison of which is blighting all this inter-mountain country. In self-sacrifice this deluded people put Baptists to shame. While carrying on missions in all lands they have erected this temple at a cost of $3,500,000. Then the Tabernacle, assembly hall and good brick churches in each ward of each city in the territory."

A LOCK-OUT AND A BOYCOTT.

The labor question has assumed a new phase in New York City. The facts in the case are these: A member of the Clothing Manufacturers' Association employed a non-union man as foreman. To this the union men objected, and, their objection being unheeded, abandoned their places. Following this, the firm that was a member of the Clothing Manufacturers' Association resolved thenceforth to employ no workman who was a member of the United Garment Workers, and in this resolution it was supported by the Clothing Manufacturers' Association. By this resolution of the manufacturers more than nine hundred union workmen were thrown out of employment.

The locked-out men then addressed circulars to customers of the Manufacturers' Association, asking them to abstain from purchasing from members of the association until the quarrel between it and the United Garment Workers should be adjusted. Whereon the Manufacturers' Association prayed the court to restrain the workmen from issuing such circulars. The court denied the prayer of the association, upon the technical ground of a misjoinder of plaintiffs, but intimated that it did not believe the prayer to have merit of itself.

In effect, the court held that here was a state of warfare between employer and employed, the circular being almost the only defensive weapon within reach of the employed. The employers were banded together to keep the workmen idle, which ultimately means hungry, until they should dissolve the union. In defense the members of the workmen's union sought to cut off trade from the Manufacturers' Association until it should recognize the union. The manufacturers relied on want of work to force the union men to terms. The union men relied on loss of trade to bring the manufacturers to terms. Neither side resorted to violence, or even to threats. There was war between them, but it was commercial war.

In this connection the recent decisions in the case of the Toledo and Ann Arbor Railroad cases are not without significance. Judge Ricks, in effect, decided that the locomotive engineers' Brotherhood had no right to take the workmen from the employment of the railroad company by ordering a strike, and he issued a mandamus to that effect. He also issued an order requiring the Grand Masters of the Brotherhood to suspend that part of its by-laws in regard to striking.

The decision of a later date, in the same case, by Judge Taft, at Toledo, inhibits the Brotherhood (which is a secret oath-bound labor-union) from using the boycott, and this inhibition is made perpetual as far as the railway on which the strike occurred is concerned.

Let this legal form of agitation be continued until the vexed labor question shall become regulated by wholesome statutes and decisions, until the moral and natural rights and duties of both employers and employed are fully defined and defended by the laws of the nation.

A CLERGYMAN STIRRED.

We need make no apology for printing the following, which we find in the Lutheran Standard:

"The Pittsburgh Post, dated March 13, 1893, contains a communication from Jesse E. Taylor, rector of St. Stephen's church, East Liverpool, O. This article is in reply to 'recent attacks of a Boston lecturer' on Masonry. The Boston lecturer is Mr. Stoddard, with whom we are personally acquainted. We have heard him lecture a number of times, and must say that he speaks like one who knows what he is talking about. We are convinced that he understands Masonry ten times better than two-thirds of the members of the lodge. His evidence is gathered from sources that have been endorsed over and over again. The only way in which Masons attempt to reply to those who have the courage to expose the true character of the mother of secretism is to revile them. The rector does not give anything from the lecture, does not attempt to meet its arguments. If he had been able to answer his opponent no doubt he would have done so. Although Mr. Taylor did not succeed in what he undertook, he did succeed in revealing the actual character of Masonry. He did not intend to reveal the secrets, but his reply brings out the secret workings of the lodge as perhaps only an initiated one could do. We quote from Mr. Taylor's reply: 'I am free to admit that sectarianism has good reason to despise and fear Masonry, for it is the sworn enemy of license, lawlessness and private judgment.' Further on he speaks of Masonry 'uniting men together, putting them under obligations to law, compelling them to perform instead of promising,' etc. Now, what do Masons understand by sectarianism? Every honest Mason, when pressed, will admit that they look upon the Christian church as a sect, and therefore whoever so tenaciously holds to Christianity as to believe and confess that the religion of Christ is the only saving religion, is a sectarian. And these, together with others who adhere to un-Masonic religions, have 'good reason to despise and fear Masonry,' Mr. Taylor declares. Does the Christian need any further admissions in order to know that Masonry and Christianity exclude each other? As citizens in the land of the free, what must we think of a sworn enemy of private judgment? Mr. Taylor tells us that such is Masonry. If this man has said the truth with regard to the institution he is attempting to defend, then in the name of Christianity, and in the name of civil liberty, we most solemnly warn against Masonry as dangerous to the soul and to true citizenship."

A BIBLE VIEW OF LABOR.

It is very evident that Providence designed us all to work, each in his peculiar sphere, with our hands or brains. "In the theatre of life," says an ancient writer, "it is reserved only for God and the angels to be lookers-on." There is so much to do—so much of error to tear down, so much of righteousness to build up, or strengthen, so much of necessity to meet, so much of waste to supply—that with each succeeding generation, in connection with the rapid growth of population, comes a proportionately increased demand for labor of both mind and muscle. The idler is the stumbling-block in the advancement of the age. The field of labor is no longer circumscribed. The improvements in machinery have opened up new avenues of industry, and skill and activity are in continual demand. Sober and intelligent mechanics, the young and the middle-aged, seldom need lack employment, if they are willing to lay aside any undue pride of social position and deny themselves the unprofitable pleasures of idleness. If one cannot perform manual labor, he may be able to sagaciously deviser plans whereby the laborer may enlarge his usefulness and reap more remunerative fruits of his industry. In the divine economy there is work enough for all, if our energies are rightly directed. Nor are we to believe that even the angels remain passive spectators of human industry, but perform their respective duties with fidelity and cheerfulness.

With the blessing of heaven upon honest industry, adding to it a true dignity and importance, it is to be regretted that the workman too often, through a lack of self-reliance and prudence, fails to properly appreciate his position, so that, quite frequently, he falls a victim to the wiles of designing men and yields his judgment and independence to subserve bad and ruinous ends. In this manner (let us hope that they do it ignorantly or inadvertently) they are led to contribute to the success of evil counsels and measures, and exert themselves to aggrandize the very individuals and principles which they should shun and oppose. Through these influences they are drawn into secret oath-bound labor unions, yielding up their personal liberty to the will of the lodge power, working or "striking" as it may decree, and suffering all the inconveniences and afflictions of self-imposed slavery, from which it is difficult to retreat. Thus the man becomes a mere machine, filled with erroneous views of life, and loses strength of mind and will, freedom of thought and action, and deteriorates in manliness. This is no fancy sketch. Chicago is filled with just such nonentities to-day.

Since labor is honorable and profitable, and in harmony with good citizenship and Christianity, we should advise no one to leave reputable employment, however limited its remuneration, for uncertain or visionary projects. We should also caution the workingman against becoming involved in "strikes"—which are one of the pernicious fruits of secret labor organizations—for, too often, they are an evidence of weakness rather than of independence of spirit; especially should we advise them not to interfere with the legal rights of employers, lest grief come to the offenders. While strikes last, the workman lives upon a pittance from his union, becomes reckless, and loses much more than he gains financially and morally. John the Baptist, the herald of the great Founder of Christianity, warned his hearers, among other good things, to be content with their wages, and do violence to no man. (Luke 3:14.) The same God who said: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay" (Romans 12:19) also said: "I will be a swift witness against those who oppress the hireling in his wages." (Malachi 3:5.) The oppressed workman, therefore, has an all-powerful Friend in his Creator, who will sustain him in his rights.

There is no reason why the laborer should not be a free man or woman in society,—free from all entangling alliances with all other men or tyrannical "brotherhoods"; nor is there any reason, also, why he or she should not be a warm-hearted, obedient Christian, enjoying the favor of God and his fellow-men. Many who labor industriously for their daily bread are the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the stone-carpenter of Nazareth, in whom was no guile, and who grew in favor with God and man from boyhood to manhood. And this same Jesus, perfectly knowing all our needs and infirmities, is not only the Saviour of sinners, but the wise and loving Advocate and Helper of those who put their trust in him. Will he turn away coldly from the oppressed, the poor, the suffering ones for whom he suffered and died? He never did, and until heaven and earth shall pass away, he never will. All he asks is our confidence, our love and entire submission to the will of his heavenly Father and ours, and then leave our way to him.

—Will not the tendency of the forthcoming World's Fair Parliament of Religions be to aggrandize the spurious religions of the age at the expense of Christianity?

—The American Tract Society's colporteurs last year found over 28,000 professedly Protestant families who never attended church. This is a terrible record for a Christian nation.

—There is a very fine piece of sarcasm in the statement of the clergyman that he had to resign from the ministry in order to earn his living, because he was never able to enunciate a doctrine that his brethren would call heretical!

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.
2. Annual Meeting Conference, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.
3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

NOTES.

—It would convince any doubter that the effort to reach multitudes with the principles and facts of our reform at the World's Fair will not be in vain, to take a half-day's stroll through Jackson Park. The preparations are on a most stupendous scale. Grounds and buildings are rapidly assuming a finished appearance. In size, proportions, number, beauty and variety they at first bewilder and amaze, and do not cease to call forth admiration continually. While from one point of view the Fair is for worldly aggrandizement and human glory, there are undoubtedly other considerations that we must not forget. If man made the Fair, God made man, and made him capable of greater possibilities than even this great display. Many departments will show God's work exclusively in plants, flowers, minerals, etc. But to a reform organization the central interest is the opportunity to reach, and affect, and convince men. The millions will be there to see and to hear. Their minds will be in a receptive state. If we do not our best to improve such an occasion we are unfaithful to our trust. The lodge claims to encircle the globe with its links and bands of grips, winks, oaths and altars. Can our protest against this enemy of the race be more quickly taken all around the world than by this means? Friends of the National Christian Association are realizing this fact, and they will not be long in manifesting their interest by helping to meet the enlarged expenses of the year.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, of the American Missionary Association, always a warm friend of the reform, is highly pleased with the openings for the N. C. A. this year. They seem to him, as to the N. C. A. Board, special providences—doors of opportunity which God is opening before us for a wider proclamation of the truth which honors his Son and destroys the power of Satan in the hearts of men.

—Brother J. P. Stoddard of Boston, and his agent at Washington, are taking a lively interest in our preparations for the year, consulting about speakers for the Congress and assisting to make the N. C. A. exhibit a success. The latter has secured the original model of the Morgan monument statue, and now writes from New York of a fine bust of John Quincy Adams, which we have been searching for long in vain. If arrangements can be made, let us have both these brethren to help us in June and July in the World's Fair.

—Do not forget that all these preparations require means as well as men. In future years it will be an agreeable reflection to have contributed generously to the N. C. A. Quarter-Centennial Fund. The sum named as one share in this fund is convenient. Let there be 100 of these $25 shares taken this year.

—Whatever of interest occurs relating to this Quarter-Centennial will be noted from week to week in this column.

THE HOME.

HER ATTRACTIONS.

She has no dazzling charms, no classic grace,
Nothing, you think, to win men's hearts about her;
Yet, looking at her sweet and gentle face,
I wonder what our lives would be without her.

She has no wish in the great world to shine;
For work outside a woman's sphere no yearning;
But on the altar of home's sacred shrine
She keeps the fire of pure affection burning.

We tell our griefs into her patient ear;
She whispers "Hope!" when ways are dark and dreary;
The little children like to have her near,
And run into her open arms when weary.

Her step falls lightly by the sufferer's bed;
Where poverty and care abound she lingers;
And many a weary heart and aching head
Find gifts of healing in her tender fingers.

She holds a helping hand to those who fall,
Which gently guides them back to paths of duty;
Her kindly eyes with kindly looks for all,
See in uncomeliest souls some hidden beauty.

Her charity would every need embrace;
The shy and timid fear not to address her;
With loving tact she rightly fills her place,
While all who know her pray that heaven may bless her!

CHRISTIANS "GIVING UP."

It is a pitiable thing to see a young disciple going about asking everybody how much he must "give up" in order to be a Christian. Unfortunately many of those who take it upon themselves to instruct him give him the same impression of Christian discipleship—that consists chiefly in giving up things one likes and finds pleasure in. But a man in solitary confinement might as well talk of what he must "give up" if he is pardoned out of prison; or a patient in consumption about what he must "give up" in order to get well. The prisoner must give up his fetters and the invalid his pain and weakness—these are the main things to be sacrificed.

It is true that the one has the privilege of living without work, and the other the privilege of lying abed all day; these are privileges that must be relinquished, no doubt. And so there are certain sacrifices to be made by him who enters upon the Christian life; but they are "not worthy to be compared" with the liberty and dignity and joy into which the Christian life introduces us; and to put the emphasis upon this negative side of the Christian experience, as so many are inclined to do, is a great mistake.—Selected.

SANG HIS SONG.

John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," once saved himself and friend from imprisonment by the singing of his famous song. This is the story, substantially, as it was related by John Ross, the Indian chief, and published recently in the Indian Arrow, printed at Tablequah, I. T.

When the Cherokee Indians were being removed from Georgia to their reservation west of the Mississippi river, Payne spent a few weeks at the home of John Ross, a life-long friend, head chief of the tribe. Several prominent Cherokees were in prison and that portion of Georgia was scourged by armed squads of militia. One day as Payne and Ross were sitting before the fire in a hut the door was opened suddenly and eight militia-men entered. Ross and his presumed accomplice, suspected of influencing the Indians to cause trouble, were summarily arrested and taken off on horseback. Rain was falling. The journey lasted all night. Just after midnight, in order to keep awake, one of the soldiers began singing "Home, Sweet Home".

"Ah!" said Payne, sadly, "I never expected to hear that song under such circumstances as these."

"I guess not," his escort answered indifferently, "but I wasn't singing that for you."

"Do you know who wrote that song?"

"No. Do you?"

"Yes," said Payne; "I did."

"Of course you did," laughed his companion with an oath. "I bet you don't even know the words."

Payne slowly repeated the words of the song, reciting the whole of it. Then he sang it. The surroundings naturally heightened effect. As the last words of the melody died away the soldier said kindly:

"If you didn't write it, you can sing it as the man that did write it."

"He really wrote the song," said the Indian chief. "That is John Howard Payne."

The soldier was skeptical, but had, at least, been touched by Payne's singing of the song.

"Whether you wrote it or not," he said, "you shall not go to prison if I can help it."

And much to the surprise of both Ross and Payne they were released at Milledgeville—then the capital of the State—next day after a brief examination. The soldier was subsequently treated with special respect and liberty.

"That song," the Indian chief declared, "subsequently saved both of us from insult and imprisonment, and, perhaps, even worse treatment. I had heard Payne sing it before, but never as he sang it that rainy night, on our way to prison at Milledgeville."

CROOKED JOE.

A great railroad depot may not be the best school for a boy, yet poor little Joe Bryan had scarcely known any other. He could not remember when the long waiting-rooms, with their tiled floors and dreary rows of stationary settees, and crowds of hurrying people, were not quite as familiar to him and more homelike than his mother's small, bare house, which he knew as little more than a place for eating and sleeping.

He had been only six months old when a dreadful accident happened which, at one fell stroke, made him fatherless and transformed him from a strong, well-developed infant to a pitiful creature, which even death refused to take.

"What a pity that it was not killed outright!" said everybody but the mother. She herself always insisted that her constant watching over the little flickering life kept her from going mad in the first dreadful months of her bereavement.

The officers of the railway company were kind to poor Mary Bryan. They paid the expenses of the burial, and, after little Joe had slowly mended, employed her about the depot to scrub floors and keep the glass and woodwork bright and neat.

When Joe was seven years old his mother sent him to school. He went patiently day after day, making no complaint; but she awoke suddenly one night to find him sobbing on the pillow beside her. Only by dint of long coaxing was she able to find out the cause of his grief. Some of the rougher boys—more thoughtless than cruel, let us hope—had called him "humpy," and asked if he carried a bag of meal on his back.

Mary flamed with the fierce anger of motherhood. "You shan't go another day," she declared. "The ruffians! I won't have my darling put upon by the likes of them."

So Joe's schooling had come to an untimely end. Yet, meager as was his stock of book-learning, the development of his mind far outstripped the growth of his stunted and deformed body. Everybody liked the patient little fellow, tugging manfully at his mother's heavy water buckets and running willingly at every call of the station men. At 12 years old he had picked up no small amount of information, especially on railroad topics. He knew every locomotive on the road, understood the intricacies of sidetracks and switches, and could tell the precise moment when any particular train might be expected, with the accuracy of a time-table.

Yet the very quickness and ardor of his nature deepened his sense of his infirmity. How wistfully his eyes followed boys of his own age—straight, handsome, happy—who sprang lightly up and down the steps of the coaches, or threaded their way along the crowded platforms. For one day of such perfect, untrammelled life he would have bartered all the possible years before him. Yet he never put his yearning into words—even to his mother.

Mr. Crump, the telegraph operator, was Joe's constant friend. It was he who, at odd moments, had taught the boy to read, and had initiated him into some of the mysteries of the clicking instrument, which to Joe's imaginative mind seemed some strange creature with a hidden life of its own.

It was growing towards dark one November afternoon. Joe—never an unwelcome visitor—sat curled up in a corner of Mr. Crump's office, waiting for his mother to finish her work. He was spelling out, by the fading light, the words upon a page of an illustrated newspaper, quite oblivious of the ticking, like that of a very jerky and rheumatic clock, which sounded in the room.

Mr. Crump, too, had a paper before him, but his ears were alive. Suddenly he sprang to his feet, repeating aloud the message which that moment flashed across the wire.

"Engine No. 110 running wild. Clear the track."

He rushed to the door shouting the news.

"Not a second to spare! She'll be down in seven minutes."

The words passed like lightning. In a moment the yard was in a wild commotion. Men flew hither and thither; yard engines steamed wildly away, the switches closing behind them.

The main track was barely clear when 110 came in sight, swaying from side to side, her wheels threatening to leave the track at each revolution. She passed the depot like a meteor, her bell clanging with every leap of her piston, the steam escaping from her whistle with the continuous shriek of a demon, and the occupants of the cab wrapped from view in a cloud of smoke.

Some hundred rods beyond the depot the track took a sharp upward grade, from which it descended again to strike the bridge across a narrow but deep and rocky gorge.

Men looked after the flying locomotive and then at each other with blanched faces.

"They're gone! A miracle can't save 'em," said one, voicing the wordless terror of the rest. "If they don't fly the track on the up-grade, they'll go down as soon as they strike the trestle."

The crowd began to run along the track, some with vain instinct of helpfulness, some moved by that morbid curiosity which seeks to be "in at the death."

But look! Midway the long rise the speed of the runaway engine suddenly slackens.

"What does it mean? She never could 'a' died out in that time!" shouted an old yard man.

Excitement winged their feet. When the foremost runners reached the place the smoking engine stood still on her track, quivering in every steel-clad nerve, her great wheels still whizzing round and round amid a flight of red sparks from beneath.

"Who did it? Who stopped her?"

The engineer, staggering from the cab, with the pallid face of the fireman behind him, pointed, without speaking, to where a little pale-faced, crooked-back boy had sunk down, panting with exertion, beside the track.

At his feet a huge oil-can lay over-turned and empty.

The crowd stared at one another, open-mouth. Then the truth flashed upon them.

"He oiled the track!"

"Hurrah for Crooked Joe!"

They caught the exhausted child, flinging him from shoulder to shoulder, striving with each other for the honor of bearing him, and so, in irregular, tumultuous, triumphal procession they brought him back to the depot and set him down among them.

"Pass the hat, pards!" cried one.

It had been pay day, and the saved engineer and fireman dropped in each their month's wages. Not a hand in all the throng that did not delve into a pocket. There was the crisp rustle of bills, the chink of gold and silver coins.

"Out with your handkerchief, Joe! Your hands won't hold it all! Why, young one, what's the matter?" for the boy, with scarlet cheeks and burning eyes, had clinched both small hands behind his back—the poor twisted back laden with its burden of deformity and pain.

"No, no," he cried, in a shrill, high voice. "Don't pay me! Can't you see what it's worth to me, once—just once in my life—to be a little use—like other folks?"

The superintendent had come from his office. He laid his hand on the boy's head. "Joe," he said, "we couldn't pay you if we wished. Money doesn't pay for lives! But you have saved us a great many dollars besides. Won't you let us do something for you?"

"You can't! you can't! nobody can!" The child's voice was almost a shriek. It seemed to rend the air with the pent-up agony of years. "There's only one thing in the world I want, and nobody can give me that. Nobody can make me anything but Crooked Joe!"

The superintendent lifted him and held him against his own breast.

"My boy," he said, in his firm, gentle tones, "you are right. None of us can do that for you. But you can do it yourself. Listen to me! Where is the quick brain God gave you and the brave heart? Not in that bent back of yours—that has nothing to do with them. Let us help you to a chance—only a chance to work and to learn—and it will rest with you yourself to say whether in twenty years from now, if you are alive, you are Crooked Joe or Mr. Joseph Bryan!"

Visiting in C—— not long ago, a friend said to me:

"Court is in session. You must go with me and hear Bryan."

The court-room was already crowded at our entrance with an expectant audience. When the brilliant young attorney rose to make his plea I noticed with a shock of surprise that his noble head surmounted an undersized and misshapen body. He had spoken but five minutes, however, when I had utterly forgotten the physical defect; in ten I was eagerly interested, and thereafter, during the two hours' speech, held spellbound by the marvelous eloquence which is fast raising him to the leadership of his profession in his native city.

"A wonderful man!" said my friend, as we walked slowly homeward. Then he told me the story of Crooked Joe.—Anonymous.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Free, yet in chains, the mountains stand,
The valleys linked run through the land;
In fellowship the forests thrive,
And streams from streams their strength derive.

The cattle graze in flocks and herds,
In choirs and concerts sing the birds,
Insects by millions ply the wing,
And flowers in peaceful armies spring.

All Nature is society,
All Nature's voice is harmony,
All colors blend to form pure light—
Why then should Christians not unite?

Thus to the Father prayed the Son:
"One may they be, as we are one,
That I in them, and thou in me,
They one with us may ever be."

Children of God, combine your plans;
Brethren in Christ, join hearts and hands
And pray—for so the Father willed
That the Son's prayers may be fulfilled;

Fulfilled in you—fulfilled in all
That on the name of Jesus call,
And every covenant of love
Ye bind on earth, be bound above.

TEMPERANCE.

CAUSES OF INEBRIETY.

Dr. F. R. Lees, now the oldest and best known of the leading English temperance writers, has lately been delivering an address on the true causes of inebriety, in which he stated:

The instruments of a national propaganda are the platform and the press. We have, nowadays, I fear, less of the old, solid kind of teaching which marked our advocacy at one time, and our literature is far too light and frivolous; though, owing to the spread of science, we have more light, and should have more leading at our command. But we want also the old, self-sacrificing earnestness which flowed from the more vivid perceptions of our fathers; for, after all, our work will be mainly measured by our clear knowledge of the importance of the question.

A great battle is before us, which demands more perfect organization in our army and a more determined and undaunted courage than ever before; we must learn better how to wield our weapons of speech and pen, and avail ourselves of every opportunity of using the printed tract and volume.

Above all, however, we must learn the essential lines on which temperance reformers can alone proceed with any rational hopes of tolerable success. We affirm this, as the logical conclusion of the first and last principle of philosophy, namely, that nothing can arrest effects that does not touch causes. Now—unless for sixty years we have been laboring under a delusion—the following are the chief factors concerned in the causation of alcoholic intemperance:—

1. The notion that intoxicating drink is a good beverage, or a good medicine. This is the principal factor, from which all the rest follows.

2. The example of decent people who drink it in the presence of people who believe in them.

3. The feeling of pleasure first excited by it. Pleasure is Satan's bait always.

4. The bringing people into contact with drinking—which is the law of hypnotic suggestion.

5. The continued and inevitable operation of the narcotic upon nerve and brain.

6. The pecuniary inducement of sale, giving rise to needless and increased temptation.

7. The desire to drown care and sorrow in the forgetfulness of wine.

8. The strong craving created by tipping, beginning with the "moderate glass"—so gradually and insensibly producing "thirsty souls".

9. The inherited predisposition to drink, consequent on the drinking of parents, which renders many people susceptible to the more rapid development of alcoholism.

So far as any scheme limits the operations of these causes, it is to be approved. So far as it enlarges them, it is to be condemned.

COLLEGES AND PROHIBITION.

The organizers of the Inter-Collegiate Prohibition Association continue to report unvarying success in their work among the colleges. Fletcher Dobyns has just completed his canvass of New York, having organized strong clubs in the University of Rochester, Syracuse University, Cornell University, Union College, and in a number of the normal schools and smaller institutions. In all these places the various lines of work recommended by the Association have been undertaken with enthusiasm, and it is safe to say that the students of the Empire State will be found not far from the front in this cause. Chairman Downing is much interested in the Students' Lecture Bureau, organized as one department of the State work, and is taking active measures to profitably employ all qualified students during the coming summer.

Charles L. Bingham has about finished his work in Nebraska, with the most gratifying results. Active clubs have been organized in twelve or fifteen of the principal institutions in the State, and the prospects for an unusually strong State organization are good. Wherever the plans of the National Association are presented they meet with an unexpected and most hearty reception. The work during the last week brings the number of clubs organized up to 115, with over 3,500 members.

It now seems certain that the National Convention of the Association at the World's Fair Temperance Headquarters at Harvey, June 28-30, will be one of the great events of the year in the history of our party. In addition to the papers and discussions by the college men themselves, addresses have been promised by Gov. St. John of Kansas, Chairman Dickie of Michigan, Col. Ritter of Indiana, E. J. Wheeler of New York, and Pres. J. W. Bashford of Ohio. It is also probable that Miss Willard will give an address, though this cannot be definitely promised till after her return from England. The Convention will be of great interest to all, whether students or not. It will pay all Prohibitionists who expect to visit Chicago this summer to plan their trip for the last of June.—The Patrol.

THE HIGHWAY TO HELL.

The Government of our nation issues one hundred and forty thousand licenses for the sale of liquor. These licenses cover probably one hundred thousand saloons in the land, while thousands of drug stores are worse than the average saloon, in some ways. The buildings where liquor is thus sold would make a street two hundred and sixty-five miles long. Turn the patrons of these drinking saloons into that one street, and the procession, five abreast, would be 575 miles long; and should they march twenty miles a day they would be twenty-eight days in passing. Half the sin, sorrow and want of the nation would be found in that street, and one-half of the other half. It is a veritable broad way to hell.

The Government opens the street, licenses the men who deal out intoxication and damnation, and is largely responsible for all the blood shed therein. Satan could not devise a scheme that would, for horrible physical and moral results, exceed or even equal this street of Rum and Ruin, opened and protected by the nation. A thousand Sodoms, built side by side, could be no worse. What woes of heart, what dreams of despair, what cries of anguish, what deeds of darkness, are born in the street we name! Yet in the doorway of each one of the liquor dens stands the bloated-faced proprietor, thrusting out his permit in law for the business he is engaged in. How sad the spectacle! The license is red with the blood of millions. The moral sense of the good in all parties should protest against a license to make men drunken.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

NUGGETS.

Democrats and Republicans in the Legislature of Massachusetts defeated the bill limiting the number of saloons.

At Redford, Iowa, the grand jury has found indictments against druggists for selling liquor. A crusade will be made against these places in other towns.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana has decided that Chief of Police Gaston cannot be prosecuted for misdemeanor in office for refusing to arrest liquor dealers who sell on Sundays, and incidentally declared the Sunday law a dead letter.

The criminal statistics of any locality give a pretty good indication of the quantity of liquors sold and drunk there. Here is a significant fact in regard to prohibition in Kansas, taken from the Kansas Christian Advocate, the leading Methodist journal of that State. It says: "However much there may be lacking in the enforcement of the prohibitory law in Kansas, there is an abundance of statistics to prove the great benefit of prohibition. One of these significant facts is that, notwithstanding the wonderful increase in the population of the State since the adoption of prohibition in 1880, our penitentiary population has fallen off sixty per cent.

The worst of all the wrongs of Ireland is the number of legalized drink shops that are continually pauperizing and demoralizing the people. Archbishop Walsh, who has been giving attention to the terrible increase of drunkenness in Ireland, gives the following startling statistics: The total number of convictions in Ireland for drunkenness in 1887 was 79,000. In 1888 it amounted to 87,000, in 1889 to 92,000, and in 1891 to 100,528. The present population of Ireland is only about the same as Canada—less than five millions. With such a terrible record for drunkenness it seems evident enough that a more important reform than Home Rule is needed.

There is one thing that commends some of the leading great Massachusetts universities to the patronage of the world. They are located in prohibition cities, and parents can send their sons from home to them knowing that a licensed dram-shop does not confront them at every corner. The cities in which Harvard, Amherst and Cornell Universities are located have each, by a majority vote of the people, prohibited the granting of any liquor licenses. These are among the most prominent of all the American universities. It is a cause of wonder that our Canadian college authorities have done so little to stop the licensed liquor shops. Many of the students have come to grief because of their existence.—Hamilton Templar.

The value of total abstinence in connection with length of days has been well demonstrated during the past few years in the actual experience of the life insurance companies who have classified their risks between abstainers and non-abstainers. These demonstrations are based on actual results, and not on any mere theories. Here is one of the well-established facts thus demonstrated: "He who for twenty years regularly takes his liquor has just the same chance of reaching thirty-seven years of age as he of twenty who wholly abstains from liquor does of reaching sixty-four years. The difference between thirty-seven and sixty-four is twenty-seven years. That is too great a price to pay for the beer-mug and wine-cup, but foolish men are paying it."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Job's confession of God's almighty power. Vs. 1, 2. "I know that thou canst do all things." Making God's omnipotence a mere article in our creed, and grasping it with a living faith, are two different things. "No purpose of thine can be restrained." God governs his universe by a fixed plan, running through uncounted ages, and in the short space of one individual life we can see no more of it than a fly, alit on some wonderful pattern from Eastern looms, can see of the general design. If God could do all things, then he could heal and restore him. If his purposes must be worked out, even at the cost of temporary pain and suffering, the end sought for could be nothing less than our eternal happiness. Those attributes of God which seem the most stern and forbidding in our hours of ease, rise up before us in times of storm and trouble like the walls of a rock-fortress where we can enter and be safe.

2. Job's confession of his unworthiness. Vs. 3-6. God had asked Job, "Who is this that hideth counsel by words without knowledge?" Job confesses that this is exactly what he has done. Instead of waiting patiently for the clouds to clear away, he had tried to reason and argue, with no result except to darken still more those mysteries no philosophy can fathom. "Things too wonderful for me." There would be very few works of religious controversy written if Christian men could always apprehend this truth as Job did. The simplest phenomena of our daily existence, the problem of life in a blade of grass, or the humblest insect in our path, is beyond the wisdom of the wisest to explain. By a series of skillful questionings, God had demonstrated to Job his utter ignorance as regarded the most common things in the natural world. He did not understand the balancing of the clouds, nor the path of the storms, nor the instinct which impels the bird of passage southward. How much less could he hope to understand the mysteries of the invisible world, or fathom God's reasons for allowing him to be visited by such unexampled afflictions. "Be still, and know that I am God." Reason and argument fall dead in the face of a crushing calamity. But if we can hush our rebellious cries long enough, we shall hear the still small voice of the Comforter, soothing us as a mother soothes her weeping child by gently hushing it to rest on her bosom. The greatest help we can give the afflicted is to bring them where they can feel the divine arms around them, and realize that the stroke comes from the hands of a loving Father, who does not afflict his children out of caprice, but always with their eternal good in view. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear." Too much of the instruction from our pulpits and in our Sunday-schools is calculated to give the hearer a mere theoretical or head-knowledge of God. Such knowledge only feeds self-righteousness; but when we know him with the heart, and behold him spiritually in all his infinite love and purity, like Job we abhor ourselves, and repent in dust and ashes, when, before, we thought ourselves as good as our neighbors, and, like him, would have resented the charge of being worse than others.

3. Job restored to his former estate. Vs. 7-10. Job's three friends had said many very true things; but the picture they had drawn of God had been such a distorted caricature as to give all they said the effect of falsehood. Ministers, writers and Sunday-school teachers may well learn from this that the chief point in all their teachings should be to give right views of God. To represent his character truly, so that men will love and fear him, instead of being repelled, is more important than strict orthodoxy of creed. We know how an absent father would feel if his character was misrepresented to his child, and this can only be an image of the way God must feel when some distorted likeness of him is put before his children. While seeming to be defenders of God's justice, Job's three friends actually made him out the opposite. Job, however, had refused to believe that his dealings with men, the rewarding of the righteous and punishment of the wicked, could be narrowed down to this brief earthly life. He had clung to "the larger hope," which looks forward and not back, up and not down. In spirit, if not in the exact letter, he had "spoken" of God "the thing that is right." His vindication was as complete as the humiliation of his friends, who could only be forgiven through the prayers of the very one they had so falsely and cruelly accused. Their pride went before a fall. Job had the true Christ-like spirit; and in praying for his friends whose taunts had added so much to his misery, he realized the promise to those who forgive others their trespasses, for he was restored and given twice as much as he had before. Let us learn (1) to forget our own sorrows in praying for others; (2) to let the rainbow of hope span all our deepest clouds of affliction; (3) when God restores us it is always to something better than our former estate. The Christian's heavenly inheritance is worth far more than the Eden Adam lost.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—A special meeting was held at the Tabernacle church, London, to take steps toward deciding upon a permanent pastor. The principal candidates have been Arthur Pierson, of Philadelphia; James Spurgeon, brother of the late Charles Spurgeon, and Thomas Spurgeon, son of the late Charles Spurgeon. The resignation of James Spurgeon from his temporary pastorate was accepted, and the meeting passed by a majority of 2,000 a resolution that Thomas Spurgeon be invited to officiate in the pulpit for one year, with a view toward becoming the permanent pastor of the congregation. Thomas Spurgeon will begin his duties in June.

—B. A. L. P. L., is the cabalistic title of a new society whose organization is announced. The full name is, "Baptist Anti-Long Prayer League." It proposes to abrogate for brevity in the petitions used at public worship.

—Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of the Clarendon Street Baptist church, has been in Boston for twenty years, and is now the longest-settled of the evangelical ministers there.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond has closed his work in Chicago and gone to Minneapolis. The last three days were spent with the Bethany church, with excellent results. About 900 cards were signed in the Covenant and Chicago Avenue churches, and 150 in the Bethany.

LUTHERAN.

—During the year 1892 the gymnasia of the Missouri Synod at Fort Wayne, Milwaukee, Concordia, New York and St. Louis, were attended by 612 students; the theological seminaries at Springfield and St. Louis by 400, the teachers' seminary at Addison by 210, a total of 1,222.

—The Lutheran church in Prussia embraces 6,900 pastoral charges, 200 of which were organized within the last four years. The annual number of confirmations is 318,000. There are 2,200 young men studying for the ministry in this church. The bequests made in 1891 for the charitable objects of the church amounted to $800,000, the ordinary collections to $250,000.

—The largest Lutheran church in the world is the magnificent cathedral at Ulm on the river Danube. The second largest Lutheran church in South Germany is St. Mary's at Reutlingen. It has to be renovated at a cost of $150,000, a large sum for a small town, but the citizens will get it together.

—March 20th was the 300th anniversary of the Reformation in Sweden. The good work began by Olaf Person and seconded by Lars Anderson, was approved by the synod at Upsala, March 14, 1593, and received the signature of Duke Charles six days later. The day was also observed by the Swedish Lutherans in America.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Methodist Times thus expresses itself editorially concerning missionary effort in India: "The only missionary societies that are conspicuously flourishing in India to-day are the Methodist Episcopal church of America, the American Baptists, and the Salvation Army. And these three are equally conspicuous by the fact that they have not entered into fatally friendly relations with the Anglo-Indian society."

—Rev. W. H. Milburn, the blind preacher who has been chaplain of Congress for a number of years, has been appointed chaplain of the Senate. Dr. Milburn is a supernumerary member of the Illinois conference.

—The Methodist Episcopal church was thirty-five years old before it had a missionary society. Single individuals did some missionary work among the Indians. The success of this work led to an organization. The income for the first year was $823.64. In 1884 it was $755,225.86. In that year Chaplain McCabe thrilled the church with his clarion call for "A million for missions." In 1892 the income was $1,260,483. In 1895 it is expected that it will be a million and a half.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The action of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the Briggs case will undoubtedly be sustained by an overwhelming vote. A Cincinnati paper has taken a ballot of Presbyterian ministers in the matter: "Blank ballots were sent to every twelfth minister in the church. Out of 325 votes received, 219 endorse the General Assembly's deliverance on the inerrancy of the Scriptures."

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—An entire congregation of German Catholics, in the diocese of Central New York, was received into the Episcopal Church of the United States, on St. John's day, by Bishop Huntington. Nine clergymen were present, and a large congregation, chiefly Germans.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The London edition of the Salvation Army War Cry of March 18 contains reports of revivals by cable from India, and by telegraph from about 170 places in Europe and Great Britain. The War Cry receives more news by telegraph than any other religious paper in the world.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A tablet has been discovered at Tell-el Hesi which identifies the site of ancient Lachish. It is said to be the first record ever found of pre-Israelitish Canaan in Palestine.

—Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, for a long time pastor of the Church of the Holy Trinity, New York, but for the last twelve years engaged in the insurance business in Paris, France, announces his intention of returning to the ministry.

—The American Bible Society has an unusually large amount of work on hand. It is publishing the Scriptures in many languages, some of which have been heretofore without written characters. The revised Syriac Bible, long in preparation, is now going through the press under the supervision of Dr. Labaree.

—Rev. F. E. Meyer, who has succeeded Dr. Newman Hall in his London pastorate, has had a ticket printed for the benefit of mothers, with this notice: "By presenting this ticket to the ladies in charge in the Lower Hawkstone hall at 6:15 on any Sunday evening, your baby, or child up to three years old, will be taken care of, so that you may be able to attend to service with your husband."

—It is said that out of every 100 heathen converts one becomes a missionary, but only one out of every 5,000 Christians born and reared in Christian lands, except in the Moravian church, which has one missionary to every 65 members at home.

—The last report of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association gives the number of members of the Hawaiian-speaking churches founded by the missionaries of the American Board at 5,427; and of others, 1,190. The salaries paid native pastors are $500 or less. The largest church has a membership of 634.

—The Boys' Brigade movement is spreading rapidly in America. It originated in Scotland, and the brigades are now numerous throughout Great Britain.

—The Sunday-school of Bethany church, Philadelphia, has a total membership, including scholars, teachers and officers, of 3,071. There are 100 classes, and the average attendance for the past year was 2,257, aside from visitors. Of these were an average of 288, making the total 2,555.

—On Lake Nyassa, Africa, recently "the habitation of cruelty," there are now 150 religious teachers and 7,000 scholars.

—West Harlem church, New York, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, D. D., pastor, has secured lots and is expecting to build a church in the near future.

—The Catholic Propaganda authorities have tried hard for many years to regain the North of Europe. In Norway their progress has been very small, and Catholic churches are few and far between. They have not a single congregation in the country with a membership of a thousand souls. Recently the parliament abrogated the law which prohibited Catholics from holding political office; but the proposition to permit the Jesuits to labor in Norway could not secure a majority of votes.

—Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira, New York, has headed a movement among the clergymen of that city to protest against Sunday funerals, on the two grounds that the associations of the day suggest resurrection, not interment, and that undue labor should also be avoided as far as possible on the Lord's day.

—Welshmen, evidently, do not take readily to Unitarianism. A minister of that persuasion, lecturing at Carnarvon, recently, failing to answer satisfactorily certain questions, as he closed found himself in hot water. "An orthodox chairman was elected, and fervent religious addresses delivered by various speakers. It was proposed, amongst other things, that the lecturer be asked to leave the town the next morning. The assembly ultimately broke up in confusion, and the Unitarian was accompanied to his lodgings by a constable as a precaution against assault."

IT'S A CURIOUS WOMAN who can't have confidence in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Here is a tonic for tired-out womanhood, a remedy for all its peculiar ills and ailments—and if it doesn't help you, there's nothing to pay.

What more can you ask for, in a medicine?

The "Prescription" will build up, strengthen, and invigorate the entire female system. It regulates and promotes all the proper functions, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and vigor. In "female complaints" of every kind and in all chronic weaknesses and derangements, it's the only guaranteed remedy. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in the case of every tired-out or suffering woman, she'll have her money back.

Nothing urged in its place by a dealer, though it may be better for him to sell, can be "just as good" for you to buy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The city and town elections last week, resulted in choosing Carter H. Harrison for Mayor and a majority of the Democratic ticket by large pluralities. The various ward contests so far re-organized the city council that it now contains 38 Republicans and 30 Democrats. Mr. Harrison was formerly Mayor for several years, and his administrations were by no means satisfactory to the better class of citizens.

Ex coroner Henry L. Hertz, while attempting to board a cable car, missed the step, fell under the wheel and lost his left foot.

The threatened strike among the carpenters employed at Jackson Park was a fizzle. Of the 800 who were expected to quit work, less than 250 obeyed the order; and more than 200 of these simply transferred their services from the Exposition to the contractors, so that the work might not be delayed.

On Friday evening that part of the city between Thirtieth and Forty-third streets was visited by a terrific storm of wind, rain and hail-stones, which did great damage to numerous buildings by shattering windowglass, etc. The losses are estimated at several thousand dollars. Several persons were injured.

COUNTRY.

President Cleveland has appointed William Lochren, of Minnesota, Commissioner of Pensions. He has a fine reputation as a jurist, a brilliant war record, and is 57 years of age. Other appointments: Hannis Taylor, of Alabama, to be Minister to Spain; James D. Porter, of Tennessee, Minister to Chili; Jas. McKenzie, of Kentucky, Minister to Peru; Edwin Dun, of Ohio, Minister to Japan.

The Inter Ocean's Springfield (Ill.) correspondent alleges that members of the State Legislature have tried to raise money from insurance, telegraph and other companies by threatening to injure their business by adverse legislation. A demand for corruption money, to prevent the passage of a bill to reduce the rate charges of the Western Union Telegraph Co., it is alleged, was flatly refused by the company.

The Southern press is quite generally urging the farmers of the cotton belt to raise less cotton and more food products. Cotton conventions have been held recently in Texas and Arkansas, and soon the Inter-state Planter's convention will meet at New Orleans, at which time this subject is likely to hold a prominent place.

Up to April 6, 42,578 packages containing foreign exhibits for the World's Fair had passed through the New York custom house. Most of them were sent by various governments, but a fair share represents individual exhibitors.

The twenty-sixth anniversary of the organization of the first post of the Grand Army of the Republic was celebrated on Thursday at the hall of Dunham Post, No. 141, at Decatur, Ill. It was in Decatur, April 6, 1866, that Dr. Stephen son organized the first post with twelve charter members. Thursday four of the six surviving charter members were present.

Mr. James H. Eckles, Jr., was appointed Comptroller of Currency, not because he was an Illinois man, but because he was a college chum of Secretary Dan Lamont.

The Secretary of the Navy has decided upon the official program of the review of the United States and foreign ships of war which by act of Congress will take place in New York harbor April 27.

On Thursday last the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington dismissed from service Mr. Robert Blaine, only surviving brother of the late Jas. G. Blaine, who has had a post there for twelve years, and has been chief of a division.

In New York City, April 6, the United States flag and that of old Greece flew together over their liberty hall in honor of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the independence of the Hellenes. April 6 is a Greek national holiday, which commemorates the last and successful effort of Greece to throw off the bondage of the sublime porte.

A special from Raleigh, N. C., says: Two cars on a "switchback" toboggan slide collided, resulting in serious injuries to eleven girl students and one teacher. Several of the girls were thought to be fatally hurt. All the others were stunned, shocked and bruised.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 50 cents.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic Rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated." Vol. I. of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. II. of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cents each. In cloth, $1.00 each.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry. New edition, 274 pages. Bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished. 25 cents each.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe. 20 cents each.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. In cloth, $1.50 each. Paper, 75 cents each.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pages, 75 cents.

Mah-Hab-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a glance. Bound in one volume. In cloth, 589 pages, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chongangi Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Wolsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times;" and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid, 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to dis fellowship secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. I. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

Mr. Joseph Hemmerich

An old soldier, came out of the War greatly enfeebled by Typhoid Fever, and after being in various hospitals the doctors discharged him as incurable with Consumption. He has been in poor health since, until he began to take

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Immediately his cough grew looser, night sweats ceased, and he regained good general health. He cordially recommends Hood's Sarsaparilla, especially to comrades in the G. A. R.

HOOD'S PILLS cure Habitual Constipation by restoring peristaltic action of the alimentary canal.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE PERFECT MAN.

Henry M. Stanley, the great explorer, says: The attributes of perfect manhood are moral and physical strength.

That character is the ideal which is wisest, bravest, strongest and truest.

Those are the best types possessing most virtues and least faults.

That culture is best which produces refinement in thought, feeling and manners.

What qualities of mind, heart, energy or character should be cultivated, or what repressed, for the higher development of man? Sincerity, charity, perseverance, conscientiousness—opposite inclinations should be repressed—must be cultivated.

If asked, what organs, systems or parts of the body, features of the face or convolutions of the brain ought to be increased, and what reduced to render man more God-like and less brute-like, I should answer, outwardly one cannot conceive wherein man of the higher type can be improved. Such as he is he has shown himself God-like, as in the Carpenter's Son.

If asked, what are the cardinal points to be insisted upon for the all-around development of the coming young man, I should say, love of truth, duty and of our fellow man. Cultivation of common sense and physical health.

If asked, what points are to be urged for the awakening of the higher intelligence of the young American, I would reply, exalted views of the purposes of his existence, and noble, lofty and pure aims.

If asked, what is the best counsel for the young men of to-day, I would reply, avoid vice, banish lust of all kinds. Be sincere, honest, pure. Love thy country and be charitable to all men.

If asked, what is the finest quality in human nature, I would reply, the most Christ-like is unselfishness. The habit of forbearance, which is easy, will, by practice, lead to magnanimity, the highest manly virtue.—Herald of Health.

SUMMER DIARRHOEA IN CHILDREN.

This disease which causes such a large loss of life in great cities every summer among children usually prevails when the heat is greatest and there is most moisture in the air. The digestive organs become weakened, micro-organisms find their way into the intestinal tracts and cause fermentation and generate poisons which kill as surely as any other poison. The best remedies are preventative ones. Keep the child in pure air, and keep its digestive organs healthy by proper food and there will be little danger. Healthy gastric juice destroys the bacteria before they can do any harm, digests them and turns them into food. If the gastric juice is weak, instead of being destroyed they grow and multiply and overwhelm the delicate organisms of the child. Hygiene for children, true hygiene, will prevent all this to a very great extent.—Jennie Chandler.

HOT WATER BATHS.

Hot water is one of the remedial agents. A hot bath on going to bed, even in the hot nights of summer, is a better reliever of insomnia than many drugs. Inflated parts will subside under the continued poulticing of real hot water. Very hot water, as we all know, is a prompt checker of bleeding, and besides, if it is clean, as it should be, it aids in sterilizing our wounds. A riotous stomach will nearly always gratefully receive a glass or more of hot water.—Jenness-Miller Illustrated Monthly.

WILL WE HAVE CHOLERA THIS YEAR?

This is the question which is agitating the minds of many persons. No one can answer it in advance. That there are dangers of it no one will deny, but none of these dangers are so great but with proper sanitary precautions they may be overcome. We have so much at stake this year that no doubt extraordinary efforts will be made to prevent the cholera, and with good prospects of success.

THE CONTAGION OF HEALTH.

We speak of the contagion of certain diseases; but why not also speak of the contagion of health, for it is really contagious. Wherever a healthy man, woman, or child goes, they carry along with them a health-giving influence that does those who are not healthy a world of good. Many a sick person has been saved by the contagion of a healthy mind, and many have lost their lives for want of a healthy friend to lift them over some dangerous crisis in their disease. For this reason nurses and physicians should be healthy persons. They can do as much, often more, for their patients by their own good health, hope and courage, as by the medicines.—Journal of Hygiene.

There is no doubting the efficacy of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It cures every time.

Where Is He Going?

Gentle reader, he is hurrying home. And it's house-cleaning time, too—think of that!

Fifteen years ago, he wouldn't have done it. Just at this time, he'd be "taking to the woods."

But now, things are different. His house is cleaned with Pearline. That makes house-cleaning easy.

Easy for those who do it—easy for those who have it done.

No hard work, no wear and tear, no turmoil and confusion, no time wasted, no tired women, no homeless men.

Everything's done smoothly, quickly, quietly, and easily. Try it and see.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 331 JAMES PYLE, New York.

FARM NOTES.

The lazy dog is pestered most by the flies.

A calf is not valued by the loudness of its bawl.

He who leads time by the forelock can sleep well at night.

The prettiest blossoms do not always hold the sweetest honey.

Growling at the times will not lift the mortgage on your farm.

Be the kind of man that you would like to have your boys become.

Success is on the hill top; you cannot get there without climbing.

It is no money in your pocket to fail to make your stables comfortable.

The sunshine of a glad heart makes the darkest, dreariest day radiant and pleasant.

There is more solid comfort in a smile than in a whole gross of frowns. It is good economy to smile.

If you get mad go to the looking glass and watch yourself growl, and see how quick you will quit it.

The man who depends on the spur of the moment often discovers that particular moment hasn't any spur.

Laziness and labor are brothers; but the one is married to incentive, and the other always remains a bachelor.

Do not act the rascal with your farm, by taking from it more than you give back to it in the way of fertilizers.

If you can see nothing but the bad, shut your eyes. Better be blind than unable to see the beautiful and the good.

Some men pretend to love God, who show that they do not love the wives of their bosoms, by making them use the most primitive household utensils, while they themselves are supplied with all the best improved farm machinery used by civilized men.—American Agriculturist.

MORE OF A SIMILAR KIND.

If the garden is not tile drained, several days may be often gained in the planting time by small surface ditches, removing standing water.

See that the banking about the cellar is taken down now and all old and decaying fruit and vegetables gotten out at once. Open up the windows and let in the sunlight and air.

By an experiment in trapping insects by means of lanterns at Cornell University in 1889, it was found that many more males than females were trapped, and that the total number destroyed proved that the "insecticidal value of the lantern is rendered too small to be practical."

I know of a sure remedy for cabbage worms. Use it every year and it never fails. It is simple and effectual. In sixteen gallons of water dissolve one pound of alum; pour this boiling hot on and inside the cabbage and there will be no worms. A second application may be needed for the second crop of eggs or worms. The boiling water does not injure the cabbage.—Henry J. Kellogg, Cass Co., Michigan.

To raise rhubarb for family use procure a few plants of your nurseryman and plant in deep, rich, well-drained soil, where the sun shines, if you wish the best development. All the cultivation needed is to keep the weeds down and give a good dressing of manure each year.

My garden being a clayey soil I used wood ashes to make it light, but soon found it ruined my vines, as they grew but little, turned yellow, and bore very few beans. I then opened a trench, filled with good soil without ashes in it, and they did well. I have best results when not planting too thick.—J. W. Sparkman, Tennessee.

Just before the close of the last session Congress made an appropriation of $10,000 to "enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the systems of road management throughout the United States, to make investigations in regard to the best method of road-making, to prepare publications on this subject suitable for distribution, and to enable him to assist agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject."

The inquiries for a remedy for cabbage worms are numerous these days. Here is another remedy that the user says never fails to kill the worms and always without injury to the cabbage. Dissolve in two quarts of water a pound of hard soap by heating to a boiling point. Then add a pint of kerosene oil and stir violently, from three to five minutes. (If you have a force pump nothing will do better than it for mixing this emulsion.) This mixes the oil permanently. It can then be diluted as wished—use fourteen parts of water to one of the mixture. Apply to the cabbage and see the good results.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

It gives immediate relief—we mean Salvation Oil, the great pain-remedy. Price 25 cents.

Easy to Take

And prompt to cure, Ayer's Pills act on the intestines, not by stimulating, but by strengthening them. They promote the natural peristaltic motion of the bowels, without which there can be no regular, healthy operations. For the cure of constipation, biliousness, jaundice, vertigo, sick headache, indigestion, sour stomach, and drowsiness, are unsurpassed. They are equally beneficial in rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, chills, and fevers. Being purely vegetable, delicately sugar-coated, and quickly dissolved, they are admirably adapted for household use, as well as for travelers by land or sea. Ayer's Pills are in greater demand, the world over, than any other pill, and are recommended by the most eminent physicians.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

California has passed a "Rest-Day bill," similar to the "six-day law" of France, providing one day of rest per week without designating any one day.

The New Jersey Legislature railroaded a bill legalizing the making and sale of recreation papers and riding or driving for Sunday on Sunday, through both houses in twenty-four hours, showing the folly of electing such legislators and then leaving them unwatched.

In Maine the Australian ballot law has been amended and put in better shape.

Bishop Wigger, of the Diocese of Newark, has issued a circular letter addressed to each priest in the diocese rescinding his former order, in which the priests were ordered to refuse absolution to those members of the parish who sent their children to the public schools in preference to the parochial schools.

A bill is before the Legislature of Michigan for the taxation of church property. The Catholic citizens of the Diocese of Detroit have signed a petition protesting against its enactment.

As May approaches, the Chinese Tag Law seems more and more a serious folly. A delegation of Episcopal bishops recently waited on the President urging milder measures, but were assured the President was powerless in the presence of the law. Very few Chinamen are registering.

Both Houses of the Oklahoma Legislature have passed a bill against gambling.

Twenty-three out of the twenty-seven type-making foundries in the United States have combined to regulate the prices of that commodity. The affair is shown, by its own statements, to be a movement to stifle competition in manufacture and sale.

The month of March was rather colder in this country than usual. The rain was plentiful in the Upper Mississippi and Missouri region, also in California, but in the Lower Mississippi there was less rain than usual. There is no reason to apprehend, however, that either the wheat of the North or the South has been injured or will be below the average.

The four bonded warehouses of the Glenmore Distillery Company at Owensboro, Ky., were burned. They contained 18,900 barrels of whisky, forty-three barrels being all that were saved. The fire caught from sparks from the distillery. Losses, $350,000; insurance, $280,000.

The new directory just out shows St. Louis to have a population of 574,569.

The most important measure thus far passed by the House of Representatives at Springfield is the Berry anti-pool bill, passed last week, and the most important one passed by the Senate is the one extending the suffrage of women, passed this week. Women can now vote on school boards, a privilege which is enjoyed in several States.

Near Jonesboro, Ark., on the second instant, a band of White Caps went to the house of George Black, a colored farmer, to whip him for settling in the neighborhood. They broke in the door, and Black fired on the foremost man named Metcalf, a carpenter, with an old army musket. Black then ran, and one of the gang shot him with a Winchester rifle, the ball going through his body. Black will get well. Metcalf was fatally injured, but refused to divulge the names of his associates in the affair.

The indebtedness of Rev. Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn, amounting to $10,000, has been raised in private subscriptions.

It is announced that President Cleveland has decided to call an extra session of Congress, to meet in September or the 1st of October. The object is to discuss an amended tariff law.

Dean P. J. O'Reilly, who has been pastor of St. Patrick's church at Danville, Ill., for more than twelve years, has been appointed by Bishop Spalding Vicar General of the Peoria Diocese.

FOREIGN.

Minister Hicks, U. S. Minister to Peru, S. A., notified Secretary Gresham, on Thursday, that in one of the towns of that republic a mob attacked the Masonic lodge building, sacked it, and burned the fixtures in the street. As an attendant incident the United States Consul's office was invaded, its furnishings destroyed, and the acting consul shot in the foot. The archives were saved complete. The native police did not interfere with the work of the mob. Sec. Gresham telegraphed to Minister Hicks to bring the government to a settlement for this outrage.

The Pope has spoken into a phonograph a special message of love to the American people, and it is not to be made public until the magical roll is delivered to President Cleveland. Pope Leo's greeting will come out of the phonograph in Latin.

The Pope has been very generally petitioned to call an international conference to stop gambling at Monte Carlo.

Mr. Gladstone, at the head of a Liberal majority, is firmly pressing the great question of Irish home rule. The veteran Premier's speech Thursday, in moving the second reading of the bill, seems to have been as effective as his first great speech introducing it.

It is alleged by excited Roman Catholics in the City of Mexico, that the government authorities have forcibly detained the daughter of a prominent merchant, Mr. Lopez, to prevent her entering a convent as a nun in the State of Louisiana. The reform laws of Mexico prohibit convents, and no woman is allowed to take the veil. Miss Lopez, however, desired to enter a convent in the United States and her wishes were acceded to by her parents. While on her journey, either her brothers, or the government officers, interfered and took her back to Mexico.

The strike of dockmen at the English seaport of Hull assumed the aspect of a riot, and troops had to be called out to protect steamship crews. Gunboats have been sent to protect the shipping in the harbor. The strike threatens to become a national calamity.

I Don't Need It.

This is what many people thoughtlessly say when urged by their friends to take a medicine for some slight but growing ailment. The person addressed rests in fancied security, while some powerful disease may be undermining his health. He may pretend not to notice slight troubles, which are very noticeable to friends, or may imagine them to be merely of slight and temporary character. So he keeps putting off taking proper precaution, as thousands have done before, until the disease gains so firm a hold upon the system that a cure is impossible. It is not our desire to cause needless alarm, but merely to call attention to little things which may be the beginning of serious affections, and to suggest the use of a simple medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will enable you to overcome the insidious enemy, and resist his attacks in the future.

PROPHECY. A STUDY.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER,
(College Agent N. C. A.)

In this booklet is found some views of truth not peculiar to the author, though for the first time put into book form; yet views which will doubtless be new to many. Its cheapness puts it into the hands of any earnest Bible student who desires light on certain phases of Christology. A hint only can be given of the contents by the following readings:

1. PROPHECY: A Study of Christ's Comings.
2. From Earth to Heaven.
3. The Resurrection.
4. From Law to Gospel.

A PRISONER OF HOPE.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Between Two Opinions," "Holden With Cords," etc., New England Correspondent of the "Cynosure," and Editor of the "Home Light."

This very interesting and helpful story by this popular writer, who is well-known to the readers of this paper, will begin in the issue of

for April 5th. The heroine of the story is a cripple, who has been advised to try different methods of healing. The story tells how she was at last healed, but while showing how this was accomplished, the author also deals with certain erroneous ideas concerning bodily infirmities. In writing this story Miss Flagg has done her best work, and it is sure to win praises everywhere. It will have a GREAT RUN, and it is evident that the papers containing the earlier chapters will be soon exhausted. The story will be copyrighted, and will appear in no other periodical. Those who desire to secure the complete story should send in their orders at once. The story will be continued several months, so that the better way to secure it entire will be to subscribe for a year. The Herald is the oldest prophetic journal in the world, and is opposed to Rum, Romanism, and All Evil.

It supplies sixteen large pages of the best reading matter every week. Terms: $1.50 per year, with Conwell's Life of Spurgeon (price $1.50) free, postpaid; six months, 75 cents, without the book. The book alone is worth the price asked for both it and the paper for one year.

ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE.

"COME, LET US REASON TOGETHER."

There will be a conference of Christians to consider "The Effect of Secret Societies on the Church, Family and State," in the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, West Thirty-ninth street, near Seventh Ave., New York City, Tuesday, April 25, beginning at 9:30 and continuing through the day and evening. There will be three sessions. The church will be open all day.

Among those who will address the conference we mention: Rev. Stephen Merritt, M. E. pastor, New York; Rev. David G. Wylie, D. D., pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian church, New York; Rev. C. S. Everson, pastor of the Lutheran church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. Jas. Kennedy, D. D., pastor of the Fourth Covenant church, New York; Rev. James Parker, pastor of the Second United Presbyterian church, Jersey City; Rev. James D. Steele, B. D., pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian church, New York; Rev. J. T. Logan, pastor of the Free Methodist church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. J. P. Stoddard, New England agent.

Invitation has been sent to Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., pastor of the Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, and others to whom we hope to have with us.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard will have charge of the morning session. An opportunity will be given, at this session, for any desiring to present their views, either for or against the lodge. Five-minute addresses will be in order.

A special feature of the afternoon session will be a chalk talk by Prof. R. L. Park, of Drexel Institute, Philadelphia, Pa. The professor is an artist. He will both entertain and instruct, drawing the picture on his revolving canvas as he gives the thought.

Prof. J. A. Adams, who needs no introduction to a New York audience, will have charge of the music.

Any who desire further information can address Rev. W. B. Stoddard, 228 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

State and national authorities have recently been engaged in creating and perfecting a thorough system of precautions against the invasion of cholera from foreign countries. So far as human foresight and care can prevent the immigration of real or suspected cholera patients, arrangements are extremely judicious and apparently complete. It is well.

The long-mooted question of railway fares to and from the Columbian Exposition (except as to points west of the Missouri river) has been settled: One regular passenger rate, less twenty per cent (one fifth), for the round trip, and no tickets to be sold at exceeding two cents per mile. This rule goes into effect to-day, April 20. Everything considered, this is not an exorbitant arrangement.

The strike of some 4,000 mechanics, announced in last week's Cynosure as having occurred at the World's Fair grounds, was immediately brought to a close by the concessions of the management to the demands of the strikers. The incident is another exemplification of the tyranny of the labor unions. The short time before the opening of the Fair on the first of May, and the imperious necessity of having the work done at once, left the management no alternative. A refusal to conciliate the workmen would have caused disastrous delay and annoyance, and the leaders in the strike knew it. They also had the greediness of a combined secret power to profit by the necessities of others—and did it. It is a practical commentary on the evils of the lodge system.

Everything at present indicates that the great Columbian Exposition of 1893 will be opened with much splendor and enthusiasm on the first day of May. The only apparent hindrance is the disposition manifested by some of the union (secret lodge) workmen to strike for some insignificant cause, and delay preparations for the preliminary ceremonies. It is the spirit of these organizations to either rule or ruin, and thus place themselves in opposition to the best interests of the community, to serve their own selfish purposes. If they can be kept at work without too great a sacrifice, the Exposition will no doubt be entirely ready for the enormous influx of visitors that will besiege its gates on the opening day and for six months thereafter. It will be unsurpassed by any previous World's Fair.

On the third page of this issue we present a striking likeness of our frequent and esteemed correspondent, Rev. J. M. Foster, president of the New England Christian Association, and an all-around reformer of distinguished intelligence and power. Mr. Foster is, heart and hand, in close touch with our anti-secrecy work, as his many contributions to the Cynosure and his addresses from the pulpit and platform sufficiently attest. As we write, there lies before us a new and comely pamphlet of forty pages—"Secret Societies in Church and State"—which contains his address of December 15, 1892 (at the New England Convention), and his two papers—"The Church and Secret Societies" and "The State and Secret Societies"—all of which appeared originally in the Cynosure. They are valuable for reference and preservation in this improved form, and the three may be obtained by sending twenty-five cents to Rev. J. P. Stoddard, 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass. In this connection, we ask a careful perusal of his excellent article in this number of the Cynosure—"What Christ's Resurrection Establishes."

COLUMBUS DYING.

(Columbian Exposition, Chicago, May-October, 1893.)

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

Rest thy head upon thy pillow;
Close thine eyes and clasp thy hands;
Thou hast shaped thy course to venture
Boldly into unknown lands.

Weigh the anchor! Steersman, gently
Spread like wings the swelling sail;
Thou hast ventured on an ocean
Where no more thy hopes shall fall.

Swift thy hark sweeps o'er the billow;
Thou hast passed the harbor bar;
And thine eyes, with spirit-vision,
View a pleasant land afar.

No drift-wood or scarlet berry
E'er has drifted from that shore;
And no ship that sails that ocean
With its crew returneth more!

Now that distant land is nearing—
Ah, Azores, those islands bright!
Fairer lands are drawing near thee
Than e'er blessed thine earthly sight.

Cast thine anchor, spirit-steersman!
Lay thine earth-stained garments down;
Thou hast anchored in a harbor
Ne'er to earthly vision known.

Lift thine eyes and gaze before thee,
Ere thou sleep, no more to wake
Till the resurrection morning
Shall thy dreamless slumbers break.

Seest thou now thy San Salvator!
Soon upon its shores thou'lt be,
Where shalt stand thy Saviour-Captain,
Hands outstretched, to welcome thee!

WHAT CHRIST'S RESURRECTION ESTABLISHES.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

On the morning of the third day after our Lord's crucifixion his tomb was found empty. There are three possible explanations.

1. That his enemies stole the body. But this cannot be accepted for two reasons. (1) The guard of Roman soldiers placed about the grave would make it inaccessible. (2) Had they stolen the body they would have produced it afterwards, when the disciples affirmed that he had risen from the dead. The fact that they did not produce the body is conclusive evidence that it was not in their possession.

2. That his friends stole the body. But this cannot obtain. (1) Because it was full moon and very bright. They would have been discovered. (2) Because the Passover brought Jews from all quarters to Jerusalem, and the city was full of people. They would have been detected had they made the attempt. (3) The disciples were greatly afraid, and would not have dared to make the attempt. (4) Because the tomb was left in perfect order. The linen clothes were wrapped and laid by themselves, and the napkin that was about his head was wrapped and laid by itself. It was not a desecrated tomb.

3. That he arose from the dead. Let us note the evidence that this is true. There are two classes of witnesses. (1) The soldiers testified that his disciples stole his body while they slept. Their testimony must be rejected for two reasons. (a) It is in evidence that they were bribed, and that will rule out their testimony. "The Jews gave them money and taught them to say, 'His disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept.' And if this come to the governor's ears we will persuade him and save you." (b) They stated what they could not know. How did they know what occurred while they slept? How could they know whether friends or foes came while they were sound asleep? How could they have slept through the great earthquake, when the angels descended and rolled away the stone? Their testimony bears evidence of falsehood on the face of it. (2) The friends of Christ testified that he arose. There seem to have been ten separate appearances of our Lord. First he appeared to Mary, Salome and Joanna, as they were leaving the garden. "Jesus met them, saying, All hail." Next, to Mary Magdalene at the sepulcher, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." Then to Peter. "He was seen of Cephas." Afterwards to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. Then to ten disciples in the upper room. Seven days later, to the eleven disciples. Again, seven days later, to seven of the disciples on the shore of the Sea of Tiberias. Then to the eleven and probably to above 500 brethren assembled on a mountain in Galilee. Next, to James (1 Cor. 15: 7). And last, to the disciples at Jerusalem just before his ascension. To these we should add his appearance to Saul before Damascus and to John on Patmos. Here we have a great cloud of witnesses. There are only three ways of disposing of their testimony: (a) That they were deceivers. But this cannot be. There was every opportunity of detecting their fraud, if they had been guilty. They hazarded everything on behalf of their testimony. (b) That they were deceived. There is no ground for this. He appeared to one, to two, to three, to seven, to eleven, to above 500 at once. They saw him by day and by night, near and far away. They talked with him, ate with him, handled him. (c) That they are credible witnesses. This is the only feasible disposition that can be made of their testimony. (1) They did not believe in Christ's resurrection themselves at first. The sayings of the women were like idle tales to the disciples. Christ upbraided them with their unbelief. (2) It occurred in their own time and place. They said: "Our eyes have seen, our ears have heard, our hands have handled of the Word of life." They were eye-witnesses of these things. (3) Their number and character put their testimony beyond question. To these he "showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs".

What does Christ's resurrection establish?

1. It proves the divinity of Christ. The angel, announcing the birth of Christ to Mary, said: "Therefore, that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." After his baptism the Father declared from the excellent glory: "This is my beloved Son." At the transfiguration the Father again declared: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him!" But when he arose from the dead the great proof of all was given, "He was declared to be 'the Son of God with power [emphatically] by the resurrection from the dead.'"

2. It establishes the perfection of the atonement and its acceptance with God.

According to the plan of redemption Christ, died to deliver his people, and he lived again to secure the application of his work to them. "He died for our sins and rose again for our justification." The death of Christ upon the cross and his intercession before God are both of divine appointment. Hence the apostle says: "It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God and who also maketh intercession for us." David knew that his sacrifice on Mt. Moriah was accepted, and Elijah that his sacrifice on Mt. Carmel was accepted, because the fire came down and consumed them. So God hath given witness to all the world that Christ's work is accepted in that he raised him from the dead and gave him glory.

3. It establishes his victory over Satan and the grave.

Satan is the god of this world. The whole world lieth in the wicked one. Christ came to rescue his people. The prey shall be taken from the mighty, and the captive of the terrible one be delivered. Satan assaulted Christ. In the three temptations he was foiled. In his attacks through the Pharisees, and even the disciples, he was driven back. In the last hour, which was his hour, and the power of darkness, he seemed to be victorious. But in his resurrection our Lord proved that he was impervious to all the weapons of Satan. Satan was conquered, but allowed to run at large. He found in the Roman pagan empire a party with which to oppose Christ's kingdom; but in 323 that party was shattered. Then he made war with the Lamb through the papacy; but that party is disintegrating. Now he is making war by and through the secret empire—Jesuits, Clan-na-Gael, Mafia, Endowment House, Knights of Pythias, etc. Their name is legion, because they are many. Presently this party will be shivered. And then Satan will be without a party. To be without an organization is for him to be bound. This is the central purpose and mission of the National Christian Association. It will usher in the millennial reign upon earth. In his resurrection Christ declared himself to be Lord of quick and dead. "O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction!" To John he said: "Fear not; I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive again forever more: and have the keys of hell and of death." Hence Paul said: "Now is Christ risen and become the first-fruits of them that slept." As the harvest follows the first-fruits, so will our resurrection follow Christ's. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Boston, April 3, 1893.

AN IMPERTINENCE.

In the "Recognition" of Rev. Frank J. Jones as pastor of the Baptist church at West Springfield, Mass., the "Welcome to Community" was given by Rev. E. A. Smith, pastor of the M. E. church. He improved the opportunity to welcome him, among other things, to the secret societies, and added a special plea for such orders. Mr. Jones himself is not a member of the orders to which he was thus welcomed. The one most represented in his congregation is the Odd-fellows.

This order expressly repudiates all preference for Christianity, and even formally silences the utterance of Jesus' name.

In one of its degrees it dresses some of its members in the garb of Mohammedans and makes them engage in a mock quarrel with others who play the part of Christians.

The master of the lodge quells the disturbance and reproves both for indulging religious preferences within the sacred enclosure of Odd-fellowship.

This order abuses the parable of the Good Samaritan, using it to adorn the very clannishness and limitation of helpfulness, to condemn which the parable was spoken.

Even when the parable is rehearsed in the lodge, its authorship is suppressed, and it is tamely introduced as "An interesting narrative".

In connection with it there is a scrupulous avoidance of all mention of Christ, of the Gospel that reports his life and words, and of the Bible.

He spoke it on being asked "Who is my neighbor?" and made the neighbor of a Jew a Samaritan, with whom the Jews "had no dealings".

But Odd-fellowship sacrilegiously "steals the livery of the court of heaven". It denies Christ, as Peter did, saying, "I know not the man" who spoke this parable, then abuses the interesting narrative in order to answer more plausibly the question, "Who is my neighbor?" when replying, "The man who has paid his insurance in the lodge, and who can push his claim by means of an Odd-fellow's grip, or sign or password."

In other words, the man who, if I am a priest, is a priest; if I am a Levite, is a Levite; or, if I am a Samaritan, is also an initiated and recognized Samaritan.

Not only this. If prayer is offered in the lodge, the name of Christ must be scrupulously avoided. This is because "Christianity is a sect," one of the religious sects of the world, along with Mohammedanism, Mormonism and Buddhism. Therefore, to offer prayer "in the name" of its founder is to offer "sectarian" prayer. Such "sectarianism" is contrary to Odd-fellowship, and must not be indulged in the lodge.

It was to this repudiation of Christ and the annulling of his teachings that Rev. E. A. Smith, of the Methodist church of West Springfield, welcomed a servant of this denied Master to a field where he had come to serve him. The church in which it was done was a church of Christ. The pulpit he stood in was the one where the man he welcomed was to preach Christ.

The opportunity he utilized was obtained through denominational courtesy and Christian recognition of fellowship in Christ.

Under these circumstances, the welcome to organized exclusion of Christ and systematized abuse of his teaching,—extended to a man who was guiltless of both,—was an impertinence.

NATHAN.

JONATHAN BLANCHARD MEMORIAL FUND.

BY PROF. H. A. FISCHER.

The Executive Committee of Wheaton College, at a recent meeting, voted to establish a Jonathan Blanchard Memorial Fund, by which the name of the first editor of the Christian Cynosure is to be permanently associated with the college for which his labors were so abundant, self-denying and successful. Subscriptions to this fund may be made in sums of $100, or $50, or $25, and can be paid in cash before October 1, 1893, or in endowment notes bearing 6 per cent interest from that date. Every subscriber is to receive a memorial volume of Jonathan Blanchard's "Sermons and Addresses," suitably inscribed.

The following are some of the reasons why the fund should appeal strongly to every reader of the Cynosure:

1. Jonathan Blanchard was one of the chief promoters of the reform which the Cynosure represents. For it he labored with voice and pen, and prayed and bore hardness in many ways. If any men have earned a monument for fidelity to the Anti-masonic movement, surely he was foremost among them.

2. Wheaton College has sent out, from the ranks of its graduates and students, some of the most efficient and faithful workers in this reform. Pres. C. A. Blanchard, the Stoddards—father and son—Phillips, Kellogg, Stratton, Enlow, Worrell, Wylie, Bailey, Moffatt, Hench, Shaw, and others whose names have frequently appeared in the Cynosure as correspondents, or lecturers, or officers of the National Christian Association, were Wheaton students. It is no disparagement to other colleges to say that Wheaton College stands in the front rank of institutions which helped the anti-secrecy cause of the present day, from its feeble beginnings till now.

3. The prevailing influences at Wheaton have been, and are to-day, in entire harmony with the motto on the college seal: "For Christ and his Kingdom;" the institution has stood in the past, is now standing, and its officers hope and pray may continue to stand. Last year every member of the four college classes was a professing Christian at the close of the year; and the same was true of a great majority of the students in the other departments. A number of conversions occur each year, and a large band of students are now praying and planning to give their lives to foreign missionary service.

4. The college is very much in need of additional funds. The salaries of the teachers are much smaller than in other colleges in the vicinity of Chicago. Were it not for the fact that the members of the faculty are in sympathy with the work of the college they would seek and easily find more remunerative fields of labor. As it is, they are willing to work for small pay; but the trustees feel that the salaries should be paid promptly. This cannot be done without outside help. To secure this outside help in the past required a great expenditure of time and strength on the part of the president. If the productive endowment funds can be adequately increased, the president and his associates in the faculty can all give their time more fully to training the intellects and souls of the young people who attend the college.

5. All sums subscribed to this Memorial Fund can be applied on the $100,000 fund which the college is now aiming to secure. Of this sum about $27,500 has been pledged, but a number of the sums pledged will be lost to the college unless the whole is secured. This may make whatever the readers of the Cynosure give, of double value to the college.

6. There is no class of citizens to whom the college authorities can look with more assurance for help than to those whose principles are the same as those believed in, practiced and advocated by Wheaton College.

For the above reasons this Memorial Fund is earnestly commended to the prayers and aid of all who read this article. It is very much to be desired that the work of securing subscriptions shall be as inexpensive as possible. Therefore it is hoped that no personal canvass need be made, but that friends of the cause will respond to this article as early and as generously as possible. If some would like to give more than $100 they can have certificates issued to their children, or other friends. In one family, the parents are now planning to subscribe for a $25 share in the name of each of their children. If there are friends who would like to help, but cannot pay as much as $25, several can join in paying for one share.

The names of donors will be published in the Cynosure (if there is no objection), and the memorial volumes will be sent as soon as the subscriptions are paid in cash or by an endowment note.

Those who desire to aid in this movement, or who wish to ask any questions about it, are requested to write to H. A. Fischer, financial agent, Wheaton, Ill. Checks and money-orders should also be made payable to him.

LOSING THREADS.

BY M. J. MIDDLETON.

Not long since I was reading of a young man who came near losing his life by losing his guiding thread. He was one of the people who wished to examine the inscriptions on the walls of the catacombs at Rome; and as he preferred to go and come at his leisure, he would take no guide to accompany him, but, instead, he took a torch and a ball of thread; and at the entrance of one of the dark vaults he fastened the thread, and then starting in through the lonely winding ways, he unwound his ball as he walked slowly along, feeling no fear about finding his way out because he had only to wind up his thread and follow it to his starting point, or place of safety. After wandering about a long while he became very much interested in examining many of the slabs and tombs which had been inscribed by the Christians, centuries ago, for their friends who were buried there while concealing themselves from the persecutions of the Roman pagans. But while the young man was engaged in this employment, he dropped his thread—and while trying to find it, his light went out.

Then he was in complete darkness, and although he got down on the ground and felt around to find it, his efforts were all in vain.

He was now in despair, for what could he likely do, but perish? After groping about upon the ground, backward and forward, in the dark passages until he was completely exhausted and worn-out with fatigue and hunger and fear, he reeled and fell over on his face fainting.

When he became again conscious, he found that in grasping the ground with his hand, he had gotten hold of his thread once more. He then sprang up quickly, and carefully followed his thread until he had come again to the opening; when he knelt down and thanked God for his goodness to him in permitting him to find his way to the open air and the light once more.

How very nearly he lost his life by losing his guiding thread in the labyrinths of vaults and tombs; and how many actually do lose not only their mortal lives, but also their immortal souls, by parting from the guiding thread of their lives. If we see poor, vicious, idle women ready to perish as outcasts, with no hope here or hereafter, we know they would never have come to such a state but by losing, long since, their threads of industry and virtue. Many women and men are in great want and without any employment, yet making no effort to get it. They have lost their threads of industry and ambition and do not care to secure them again.

None need to be vicious, or in want, or disgraced, if they cling to the threads of industry and virtue. Habits of constant thrift and faithful employment of time will keep any one from want and vice. Satan only finds work for idle hands to do.

But greater yet is the need to keep a firm hold upon the thread of eternal life while we travel in the labyrinths of this sinful world made dark by sin. The Word of God is the sure thread of eternal life, to be hidden in the heart and mind, as the safe guide of our loving Saviour through all the dark ways of the world; "making a light to our paths and a lamp to our feet;" and although many men, puffed up in their own conceits, and tossed about with divers doctrines, are now trying with all their strength to wrench the thread of life out of the hands and hearts of true pious believers, yet "the Word of the Lord shall abide forever." It has endured for ages, notwithstanding all efforts to trample it and destroy it, and that is proof sufficient of its truth as divine, because no human writings have endured such persecutions.

REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Many young men are wrecking their souls by dropping the sure guiding thread of life to exchange it for enticing blind guides which fascinate and lead them into the paths of destroyers, because their hearts incline them to these ways and to assent readily to the teachings that uphold and encourage them in following the dictates of all natural depravity.

But many, too, are retracing their steps and are eagerly seeking again for the true guide. May they speedily find the guiding thread of God's Word, and accept it, as their only true counselor, not only in all the everyday paths of life, but also against following in the labyrinthine mysteries of secret societies, which even set up their virtue and saving power as more essential and effectual than that of the Christian religion itself.

FREEMASONRY, THE SYNAGOGUE OF SATAN.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC VIEW OF THE FRATERNITY.

Un beau Vol. in 8o avec planches. Paris: Victor Re-taux et fils, libraires-éditeurs, 82 rue Bonaparte.

With this title a book has recently been published by Monsignor Meurin, of which the Paris Univers gives a very full analysis, and L'Osservatore Romano (Rome) a resume of the more important parts, on what it calls the eternal enemy of God and man.

One point in the opinion of L'Osservatore Romano, and a most interesting one, which the illustrious author of the book has developed fully and demonstrated even to an absolute certainty is, that, in the doctrines and the practice of its supreme direction, Masonry is always found to be most widely spread among the Jews. Another, not less significant and not less fully demonstrated fact is, that Masonry is a sect eminently and essentially Satanic.

Both these truths are demonstrated and proved by carefully examining and analyzing the concealed and disguised meaning of the Masonic symbols and rites, and particularly the hierarchical grades of the impious sect, among which the 33. of the Scottish rite hold a most important place.

What is, perhaps, less generally known, and still less frequently believed, even by many Masons, is the direct communication of Satan with Masonry in general, and his actual presence in some of the Masonic lodges.

The illustrious author cites in support of this statement three incontrovertible and undisputable facts, which are furnished by one who, de visu, assisted at the personal attendance of Satan.

One of these proofs is taken from the English review known as Blackwood's Magazine; the second is given by Father Jandel, who died as General of the Dominicans; the third, by a young official who is now a member of a religious order. Many other proofs of the same nature might be recorded, which are equally unexceptionable and equally conclusive.

In the above-named cases the figure of a young man, elegantly dressed, which evidently entered without substantial form, was suddenly seen to take his place in the chair of the presiding officer. The sign of the cross was made by the priest who witnessed the scene, unrecognized, and the vision disappeared in an instant. Then, Father Jandel says, he made the sign of the cross with a crucifix, which he had concealed under his coat, and not only had the devil disappeared, but all the lights were extinguished and the furniture was tossed about in all directions, so that the Masons themselves were stricken with terror, and would have fled precipitately, but for the deep and impenetrable darkness.

The conclusion to be drawn from this most interesting work of Monsignor Meurin, which may be called strictly historical, is, that paganism, Judaism, apostasy, the vices and the passions, under the supreme direction of Lucifer, advance together to the attack on the heavenly Jerusalem, whose conquest and destruction is their supreme and final object.

But, adds the author, this new synagogue of Satan will be, like the synagogues of old, conquered by the cross. Honor, therefore, and glory, he exclaims, to Leo XIII., who has launched against this accursed sect his matchless Encyclical Humanum genus.

"Honor and glory," exclaims L'Osservatore Romano, "we Catholics, and especially Italian Catholics, owe to Leo XIII., who has shown that in this most iniquitous congregation of Satan is to be found the greatest and most destructive enemy of our faith and of our country. But, even in Italy, if the Catholics will it, the enemy can be conquered and the truth embodied in the religion of Christ can be fully restored."

A few extracts from some of the local papers will show the correctness of some of the statements made by Monsignor Meurin. As these have all been given to the public there is evidently nothing in them which Masons wish to conceal.

The Temple has its eastern and western gates, and members are seated at these gates. The eastern gate seems to have special importance. There are knights of the East and the West.

Cathedrals, consistorys, preceptorys, chapters, etc., enter largely into their form of worship; and one member has been described as particularly "well up in Biblical and Masonic lore".

Officers corresponding with these ritualistic degrees are: High Priest, Grand High Priest, Right Excellent High Priest, Most Excellent High Priest.

Then there are Worshipful Senior Wardens, Worshipful Junior Wardens; Senior Deacons, Junior Deacons; Senior Overseers, Junior Overseers, Master Overseers.

Among the members: Royal Arch Mason, Royal Arch Degree, Royal Arch Captain and Master of the Vail, Grand Royal Arch Captain, Grand Captain of the Host.

There are: Brothers, Worshipful Brothers, Right Worshipful Brothers.

Companions, Right Excellent Companions, Most Excellent Companions.

Master, Past Master, Mark Master Mason, Grand Master of the Third Vail, Right Worshipful Master, Fellowcraft Degree, Fellowcraft raised to Sublime degree of Master Mason.

Seventieth Degree, Twenty-first degree—Noachite or Russian Knight.

Candidates are introduced into the Middle Chamber; Ritualists form a select corps; Most Excellent Companion (R) assumed the duties mythologically reserved to Jupiter; Worshipful Brothers present the working tools, aprons, etc.

The weighty responsibility which hangs over an individual obliged to seal his lips under any and all circumstances, must be terrible. But, while they faithfully keep their own council they are represented often by some of the most dishonorable and lawless members of the journalistic profession. In Rome, especially, the Jews and the Freemasons are the pests of the Vatican, of the cardinals and other church dignitaries. When information is refused, they publish the most ridiculous and sometimes the most scandalous falsehoods. This is evidenced by the fact that they reported unchallenged, for a long time, that Pius IX. was, at one time, a Mason. In that case there would be the anomaly of a Pope excommunicating himself when he excommunicated the Freemasons.

It will be remarked, however, that these same Jews and Freemasons never give to the public anything relating to the craft; they are never interviewed about the business of the order; the reporters let them severely alone.—Catholic Review.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Sabbath observance.—The "Traveller's" editorial change. A righteous boycott.—A novel idea.—A law against the secret military orders.—Other matters.

"I never have good luck with anything I bake on Sunday," one woman was lately heard to remark to another. "Nor I either," was the answer. Though well aware that many people will think this a piece of superstition to be ranked with the Sunday-school story of fifty years ago, in which the Sabbath-breaking boy is invariably engulfed in a watery grave, I am disposed to believe that many other people besides housekeepers have found that it is Sunday rather than Friday which is really the unlucky day on which to begin any piece of work that does not clearly come under the category of either "necessity" or "mercy." James G. Blaine was born and died on Sunday. This was simply a coincidence, and not an unusual one; but according to a certain newspaper correspondent, who may or may not be veracious, "Sunday was his day of fate." It was on Sunday that he regained possession of the Mulligan letters. It was on Sunday that he suffered the sunstroke which gave the presidential nomination to Hayes. It was on Sunday that he prepared his celebrated Florence letter declining to be a candidate in 1888, and it was on the same day that he sent a peremptory cablegram, to the same effect, to Representative Boutelle at Chicago. It was on Sunday that his letter to Chairman Clarkson was given out, in which he said that his name would not go before the coming convention. His statements of the American side of the Bering Sea controversy, and the New Orleans affair with Italy, were given out on Sunday. His resignation of the portfolio of state was twice determined on Sunday, etc. Now, is this all a coincidence? If it is true that some of the most important acts of Blaine's public life were transacted on the Sabbath, can we not see some reason for the fate which followed him, blasting all his most cherished ambitions, and sending him to his grave at a time when he should have been in the full maturity of his powers, if at the same time we believe God's Word, that a special blessing as well as a special curse follows the observer or non-observer of this sacred day? The continental Sabbath has not yet obtained a footing in New England, but the trend is that way. Our public men need to heed this lesson from the life of one of her greatest sons. No body wants the Blue Laws back again; so no one need be frightened because the enemies of Sabbath observance say we are trying to revive them again; but I sincerely believe that if Sunday newspapers and Sunday trains could be abolished, and the old-fashioned Sabbath come once more in vogue, that dreadful disease of our modern American life, nervous prostration, would not be half so common as it is now.

Dr. J. B. Dunn has left the editorial chair of the Boston Traveller, to the great regret of thousands who rejoiced in the brave stand which it took, under his management, against the aggressions of Rome. The paper will continue to be as much of a temperance organ as it can and still be a Republican party organ, but will no longer be an anti-Romanist daily. Is this another victory for the Vatican? It looks like it, and a big victory, too. One of the reasons why the former management was not sustained, according to the Citizen, was because the proprietors of the big stores refused to advertise in it, on the ground that they would lose their Roman Catholic customers, while of the Protestant part they were sure. This shows how much the patriotism of such men whose selfishness and greed have driven all their weaker rivals to the wall, and many of whom, if tales be true, lead most immoral lives, is to be depended on. If there is one thing more than another that makes me impatient with my sex, it is to see the indifference of even Christian women to the character of the men with whom they trade, if they can only secure a good bargain. I wish there could be a league formed of all the loyal white-ribboners and workers for social purity, to institute a grand boycott against every merchant of shabby patriotism or questionable morals. They might be made to smart under the moral effect, even if their pockets did not feel it very perceptibly.

We endow colleges; why not endow newspapers? This novel idea has been lately put forth by Prof. C. H. Levermore, of the Institute of Technology, and is at least worth considering. One first-class journal of wide circulation is an educating influence that for extent far outweighs any of our institutions of learning. It is, in fact, the people's college—the only one from which Lincoln and many another noted public man has graduated. If some of our millionaires would dispose of their surplus money in this direction, and endow a newspaper, thus starting a school of independent journalism which is under no necessity of catering to a depraved public taste, or keeping silent in regard to known evils for fear of driving away money and patronage, they would do a better thing, I fancy, than to give it to colleges like Harvard, already so wealthy as to repel poor men's sons from entering.

An amendment to the existing militia law of Massachusetts has been lately submitted to the Legislature, forbidding any company or association outside of the regular militia from "drilling or parading with firearms, or maintaining an armory in any city or town of the Commonwealth." This is aimed against the many secret Catholic organizations which have sprung up of late, with their uniforms and drills and parades. The new section provides that this shall not be construed as forbidding "any organization heretofore authorized thereto by law from parading with side-arms." What would become of the Knights Templar and Patriarchs Militant if this convenient little clause had not been so thoughtfully introduced? Whether our Legislature will pass the new law is more than a doubtful question.

A Weymouth Baptist minister, Rev. Wesley Smith, has made himself obnoxious to some in his parish by giving a lecture on Romanism, as well as by his plain language on the liquor question. As if this were not enough, he has increased his unpopularity further by his pronounced opposition to sociables and church entertainments. If every pastor would make himself unpopular in the same way, it would go far towards restoring to the pulpit its lost "power."

The forty-thousand-dollar mantle of the notorious adventurer, Mme. Apparuti, is now in Boston, on its way to the great World's Fair. Think of a train twenty-seven feet in length and requiring the skins of 2,700 ermine to trim it! This will match the famous diamond coronet, the gift of Louis XIV. to Madame de Montespan, which Mrs. William Waldorf Astor wears occasionally. One hundred thousand dollars was the sum paid for the glittering bauble so full of associations of shame and guilt. I wonder how she can wear it without a shudder?

Speaking of the Fair, I am glad to see that a bust of Phillis Wheatley, from the chisel of Edmonia Lewis, is to be on exhibition. It is not one of the least of New England's glories that she should produce the first African woman author; and that, too, at a period when there were so few female writers. I think Hannah Adams was Phillis Wheatley's only contemporary in New England of any note. She was the slave of a Boston family; but it shows how different was slavery in the North to what it afterwards became in the South, that her talents were fostered, and her thirst for education was gratified so far that she even went farther than most of her sex and dipped into Latin. It is fitting that her bust should be displayed beside that of Harriet Beecher Stowe, most famous of New England's daughters, who so nobly consecrated her genius to the uplifting of that wronged race, of whose future blossoming Phillis Wheatley's career gave the first faint promise. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 12, 1893.

The right of the States to restrict and control the liquor traffic has once more been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, which gives additional encouragement to those engaged in the conflict with the mighty rum monster. The case in which this decision was made was appealed under habeas corpus proceedings from the Supreme Court of Texas, before which a man had been tried and convicted of selling liquor without a license, to the United States Circuit Court, and the plea made that the liquor law of Texas, which, in addition to other requirements, makes the giving of a bond for $5,000 necessary before an applicant is granted a license to sell liquor, conflicted with the guarantees contained in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The Circuit Court decided that the plea was not well taken, because there was nothing in the 14th Amendment which prohibited a State making such regulations as it might see fit for the control of the liquor traffic, and an appeal was taken. Now that the United States Supreme Court adds the weight of its decision to that of the Circuit and State courts, the question of the right of the several States to impose even the most oppressive—it would be impossible to make them too oppressive—restrictions upon the sale of liquor should be considered as settled; but it probably will not be, so long as big fees can tempt shrewd lawyers into trying to discover weak spots in our laws. The opinion in this case was prepared and read by Mr. Chief-Justice Fuller.

The text of the Russian extradition treaty, as originally negotiated March 25, 1887, by Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, then Secretary of State and now United States Ambassador to Great Britain, and Baron Charles de Struve, then Russian Minister to the United States, was published this week. With the exception of a single article, providing for the extradition of those who murder or attempt to murder the Czar, the treaty is believed to be identically the same as when recently ratified by the Senate and forwarded to the United States Minister to Russia for formal exchange with that government and the final ratification of the Czar. If this belief is founded on fact, it is difficult to understand the storm of protests against the treaty. It surrenders no one except on specific charges and is not retroactive.

Can you imagine a more horrible fate than for a man to die intoxicated? Last Sunday a man was buried here who, only a few years ago, was regarded as one of the ablest business men of the city, a man whom everybody thought certain to get to the top, in a worldly sense; but he did not. On the contrary, he got to the bottom. He began his downward course with the social business drink, as so many before him had done. Later he became a habitual drinker, then a drunkard; and then, while under the influence of liquor, a murderer. The good woman he married before he became a slave to rum stood by him throughout his imprisonment and trial, and when he was acquitted and promised never to drink again, she wept tears of joy. But it was too late; his promise was broken, his faithful wife beaten, and he again became a drunkard, and was finally crushed to death, while drunk, by the wheels of an electric car. What a career! and what a warning for the young men who see no harm in a social drink! The holy man who officiated at the the funeral had known the deceased and his wife for years; and for that reason the portion of his remarks quoted below was all the more impressive. He said: "Friends, he has gone. But there are some things I ought to speak of as a minister of God. Shall I say I cannot but feel there would have been a living man, a man Washington could be proud of, but for the presence in this city of the devastating saloon? We stand in the presence of one of its catastrophes. When shall we see the flaunting sign taken down that ruins so many men of noble impulses? I dare not stand here, with a determination to be true to God, and leave this unsaid."

Among the presidential nominations this week were those of Judge Daniel M. Browning, of Illinois, to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and Gen. Frank C. Armstrong, of the District of Columbia, to be Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Judge Browning is not very well-known here, but Illinois people say he is well qualified for the important duties of his office. Gen. Armstrong is well-known here, having for some years been connected in one or another capacity with the Indian bureau. He is the son of a missionary to the Indians and was born on an Indian reservation, and is therefore well-informed on Indian affairs. His appointment was asked for by the Indian Association.

A more sincere compliment, although probably not so intended, was never paid the Woman's Christian Temperance Union than when one of a group of disappointed politicians who were discussing a Territorial appointment said: "Well, the fact of the matter is, we are unable to overcome the influence of the W. C. T. U., which was against our candidate because of his being a drinking man."

REFORM NEWS.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK IN NEW YORK CITY.

228 W. 36TH ST., NEW YORK, }
April 12, 1893. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—One thousand two hundred and eighty-four deaths were recorded in this city last week, and yet a passing observer sees no difference in the throngs that pack and crowd the busy thoroughfares. The great heart of the metropolis never stops its beating, as the multitudes come and go.

OUR CONFERENCE, the notice of which I send you herewith, is to be a success. If each one who reads the notice, and is living in New York or this vicinity, will feel a personal responsibility, to be present, and bring others, it will be more of a success. The thought of this conference, is to encourage one another in the conflict, consult as to how we may best enlighten those needing light on this subject, help those to a knowledge of the truth who may come among us seeking it, and all for the glory of God and the honor of his dear Son's name.

The friends, in granting us the use of the church, were most cordial. The brother who reported the action of the trustees said: "They voted you the entire church, any time you want it," meaning, of course, when it was not used for church purposes.

A number of pastors whose names do not appear on the program have promised to take part in the conference and invite their people to attend. None was more cordial than Rev. Messrs. Seiker and Steup, pastors of large German Lutheran churches in this city.

Stephen Merritt is an exceedingly busy man; besides running a large undertaking business, a mission that is open both day and night, editing a paper, and preaching all day Sabbath, he is glad to bear his testimony in a conference like ours. He has an audience of about 700 at six o'clock every morning—including tramps and others, who gather to get the food he prepares. While eating, they are told of the way of life. They know the way of death too well. I hope to respond to Bro. Merritt's invitation to address his morning congregation. It will pay friends if they have to come two hundred miles to hear this man that God has so wonderfully blessed and made a blessing to others.

The subjects of but few of the speakers have been given to me as yet. Dr. Wylie will present "The Church as the Best Fraternity;" Dr. Kennedy will show that "The Christian's Relation to Christ must Regulate and Control all his Other Relations." There should be no other master of his affections than the divine.

I worshiped last Sabbath with Rev. Mr. Summerville's people. By request of the superintendent, I addressed the Sabbath-school in the morning; and expressed a few thoughts relative to next Sabbath's lesson, by request, at the Christian Endeavor meeting, on Sabbath evening. Rev. Mr. Summerville took for his theme, in the morning, the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians, and suggested, as the key-note to the first chapter, the word in. Christ in us, we in him, will have spiritual blessings in heavenly places." "In whom we have redemption." "In whom, also, we have obtained an inheritance," according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him." If we are in Christ, and he in us, what is there of value that we do not possess? If all professed Christians believed this, there would not be the shadow of a lodge left to curse our earth.

Come, dear friends, those who can, to the conference. Remember the date, April 25th; labor for it, pray for it, and come expecting a blessing in it. I shall be glad to supply all with circulars or tracts who address me at 228 W. Thirty-sixth St., New York. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

PORTLAND, O., April 12, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In accordance with your request for me to write, I will proceed to give your readers a few plain reasons for opposing secret societies.

There are societies, doubtless, which are organized for secular and wicked purposes. Of course, no Christian would think of joining such an one.

Others, such as Masons, Odd-fellows, and the temperance societies, and those of a kindred character, claim to have for their object works of philanthropy and reform, and deeds of benevolence. That such acts and purposes are commendable, wherever manifest, no one can deny.

But where is the proper place for moral action, influence and labor for the Christian? Jesus says to his people: "Ye are the light of the world," "the salt of the earth." "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." This doctrine of our Lord reveals to the Christian what he is in himself, what he is to the world, and what position he is to occupy to have his influence known and felt; and to this three-fold end God has given a visible church to the world.

There are important bearings which Christian men ought to consider in this matter. The bands of these societies often injure the moral liberty which their members should enjoy with their families. In many of them the wife and children cannot join with their husband and father. Neither can they know all the transactions of the lodge into which he enters. This puts on him bands that he never ought to wear, and has a tendency to wean him from the position of love and oneness he ought to hold in the bosom of his family.

Besides this, there is an indirect influence in these alliances to chill piety. This may be unintentional, but nevertheless true. I have known many men who, before connecting themselves with a secret society, were pious and devoted in religious experience, but after forming such affinity they soon relapsed into professional indifference, and lost their religious interest; and though devoted to lodge meetings, every week, until a late hour of the night, they cannot find time any more to attend the prayer meeting.

This course is not infrequent among Christian men who become members of these secret orders, and is traceable directly to their influence.

Besides this, again and again I have heard members of some secret societies say: "My church is enough;" and "If I am a good Mason or Odd-fellow, I shall be saved." Now, these societies, whatever their pretensions may be, have no semblance to teach Christ and his blood to save men.

How, then, can the followers of Christ allow themselves to belong to a society that thus, in its very nature, falsely leads immortal souls?

Another thing I wish to mention, and to it call the attention of beloved brethren everywhere. Some of these societies, and those, too, to which many ministers and church members belong, frequently get up public balls and dances. Claiming to be no more than worldly institutions, of course they feel that they have a right so to do. But do not the Christian members necessarily feel the grievance and blighting influence of these unhallowed practices which they could not, for a moment, sanction in the churches to which they minister? It seems to me that this is too much of a mixing of the church and the world in the moral designs, impulses and forces which we have consecrated to Christ.

I say these things as a Christian minister, in the light of what I know of the inner and outer workings of secret societies. Therefore I desire to entreat Christian men, if you would be useful, promote holiness, save sinners, and stand untrammelled in every possible work of Christ-like reform, do not join a secret society.

When a Christian man or woman unites with a secret society for reform or benevolence, they virtually say to all around them, the church is not sufficient to meet all my wants. But some ministers and laymen are already "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and ask, "How can I relieve myself of this relation?" I answer, step down and out, at once. Do it in love toward those you leave, and for the one purpose of standing alone for Christ in the perfect law of liberty. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all to the glory of God."

P. B. WILLIAMS.

THE LODGE WILL NOT BEAR INVESTIGATION.

BEAVER DAM, Wis., March, 1893.

In reading the address of Professor Townsend, in your issue of February 2, I was much surprised by one statement which I have often heard substantially made before, and in which a most pernicious assumption is substantially assented to. He says: "When any secret organization, of whatever name or character, is dangerous to the individual; or when it is dangerous to the state; or when it is dangerous to society, then Christian people should withdraw from it, and the state should investigate it, and, if need be, abolish it altogether."

We are told that between Jerusalem and Jericho (where our Lord in his parable represents a certain man as falling among thieves), there were many caves and strongholds where the robbers had their dens. Suppose the government had appointed a commission to "investigate," and "abolish" the robber-bands. Many robberies had been committed, and the commissioners were satisfied that some of them were traceable to certain bands who dwelt in such and such caves. They clean out these bands and find that other caves are inhabited by certain bodies of men who denounce the robbers and robberies in most unmeasured terms. But upon being requested to light up their caves so that the commissioners can see for themselves that there are no indications of lawlessness, they indignantly reply: "We need no investigation; our members are respected in the community; we are honest men, banded together for patriotic and useful purposes, have been zealous in trying to ferret out the robbers, and in fact we organized more especially for this latter purpose." I think that if Professor Townsend had been on the commission he would have said, "All right, but turn on the light." He knows full well that any other course would have been but an invitation to them to commit depredations; only be sure and not get caught at it. Our States pass laws against the carrying of concealed weapons; and it seems a sad sight when prominent leading men advocate permitting irresponsible bodies of men to manufacture and use a far more dangerous concealed weapon than dirk, pistol, or bomb. For all experience proves that one of the greatest encouragements in crime that a wicked man can have, is the hope that others will be led by secret bonds to help him out of trouble which his crimes may bring upon him. And, as is well-known, infidelity, or wickedness, is no bar to joining even the Good Templars, which is probably as innocent as any of the secret orders. But, aside from all other considerations, all these societies should be condemned by all true men, for the reason that they refuse to turn on the light. Remember, many of the secret societies are used for criminal purposes, and all are liable to be.

G. A. PADDOCK.

TURNING ON THE LIGHT IN THE WEST.

ATOKA, Indian Ty., March, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As it does me good to read of the labors of others in this cause, I thought you would be glad to hear something of the work here.

After looking up in the "Ritualist" and "Lexicon" the quotations used by Ronayne in the "Master's Carpet," and several other points, I announced that on the following Sunday I would tell my Masonic friends and others why I am opposed to Masonry.

The day came with pleasant weather, and the church was filled. It seats about 150 or 160. There were some Masons present, but some whom I hoped to see were not there.

The former pastor, at present acting missionary on the field, a 33d-degree Mason, sent a note that he stayed away lest I should say something that would cause him to reply, and so make talk.

I took for a text 1 John 5:11, 12: "And this is the witness, that God gave to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

I tried to (and they say I did) show from their own works: 1. That Masonry claims to be, and is held to be by many, a religion, which will help man in this life and fit him for the life to come. 2. That it is a Christless, and, therefore, anti-Christian religion. 3. That, therefore, it did not, and could not, save men, but did deceive and drag men down to death and hell.

I never had better attention, except that one young Masonic stranger was so unwise as to get up at the beginning and go out into the entry, where he spent the time vainly trying to attract attention.

I spoke for over an hour, and stopped at 12:30, only because dinners were waiting.

Men who had been importuned to join the lodge came and thanked me earnestly for the exposition.

My Masonic friends have nothing to say.

I trust that the way will open so that I can show, as I believe it true, that this is that "image of the beast" spoken of in Revelation.

I am pastor of the Baptist church here, and have my hands full of work (baptized four March 19), but I am willing to go anywhere as the way opens, to expose this evil on Bible lines.

May our God bless all those in the work, and strengthen all our hands and hearts. Yours for the Master,

C. A. FREEMAN.

RELIGION IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

PINE MOUNTAIN, Campbell Co., Tenn., }
April 6, 1893. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Many times in these mountain solitudes I long for your bright pages, but we must learn to patiently forego what we cannot get.

As the spring opens, so does the annual spring work of the Sunday-school man. Every one who is acquainted with the work knows the nature of missions of any kind in this mountain region, and we all feel the effect of the sharp rebuffs and opposition we receive from the native ministry even if we do not often express it. But the spirit of liberty grows. Before any Sunday-schools or church missions were opened here, the people were forced to join one or two churches—Baptist (Hard Shell) or Methodist; if left free, they usually joined the Baptist.

These Baptist ministers asked for no support; but the churches are in worse condition than before the war. When these poor people come flocking to the temple gates for the crumbs that fall from the Master's table, there is nothing but flinty stones. However, they are religious, very much indeed. Often their preachers are hard masters and call on their flocks to live by the BIBLE, when they live in open violation of half the decalogue and all of the Christian principles. Such was, and is to a very great extent, the religion presented to them; and while earnestly they seek crumbs of comfort in Jesus Christ, so dear to them, is it surprising that true religion is of their lives a thing apart? An adult that does not belong to the church is as hard to find as one who lives up to it.

God is to most of them an awful Judge, always on the watch to pass them over to the evil one. These people have many things to contend with. One is the average missionary. It does seem that in a field as wide as this, ready for the harvest, that it is no place for jealousies and petty fighting. Some come among us in the Spirit of Christ, and ask no man's creed, but are glad to join hands and help any one who has the Spirit of Christ, and is laboring to build up his kingdom. Such a one is Rev. A. B. Whitworth, pastor of a Congregational church here. Oh, that all were so! But too many care more for their creed or self-advancement than for the real improvement of the people. There is great danger of the young people growing up irreligious. They listen to an ignorant ministry, which is nearly all they have; they have no desire to fill the house of a STRANGE minister, so the Sunday-school must be an educator for them. This is the only possible way of saving them from the bad seed sown among them and nurtured all their lives—from unbelief and ruin consequent upon the reaction from their emotional religion, and from the newly awakening intellects that feel for something more than their ministers can give them. What we want is to give them intelligent and consecrated ministers from among themselves, or from this Southland. This is our desire, and the Sabbath-school and day-school must lead the way. No one not conversant with it can know what obstacles one has to contend with who tries it. Every Christian in the land should help on this good work. Yours for common humanity,

J. F. CAMPBELL, S. S. Missionary.

INQUIRIES FROM CALIFORNIA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am the pastor of a Methodist Episcopal church.

In your issue of February 9, 1893, is printed a letter from the pen of Edward J. Chalfant. In the letter are some statements which impel me to ask you a few questions. Will you favor me with a copy of the Christian Cynosure containing the answers to the following questions?

1. Is Mr. Chalfant correct when he says "Masonry fled to the South and allied itself with slavery?"

2. Is it true that "The Southern Confederacy was conceived and brought forth in the" (as I infer, Masonic) "lodge?"

3. Is it true that "Masonry ever conspired, either with or without the co-operation of the Jesuits, to give the great Rebellion a fair start?"

4. Is it a fact that the "Masonic order is, or ever has been, a 'cat-spaw' of the Jesuit society?"

5. Where and how can the evidences sustaining these assertions be procured? If they are so, the world should know all about it. If these things be so, proof of them will do more to bring the thinking masses into antagonism to secret institutions than anything you can say or do. I am candid to say that I do not believe them. I want light on every question in which the interests of my country and the souls of men are involved. Will Mr. Chalfant please send me his book "On Land and Sea," if published? I am candidly and Masonically yours,

L. EWING,
Member of California Annual Conference.

ORANGEMEN AND JESUITISM.

Wahoo, Neb., April 8, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Knowing that you will purposely wrong no one, I will call your attention to the fact that the Orangemen have banded themselves together as a vigilance committee for the sake of self-defence. Last week I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Mr. Robert Bell, of David City, Neb.; and finding that he was a Protestant from Northern Ireland, I asked his opinion about Gladstone's Home Rule bill. As he explained the case to me, the greatest curse that ever could befall poor Jesuit-ridden Ireland would be Gladstone's Home Rule.

A prominent member of the Covenanter church of this place, a warm personal friend of Bro. M. A. Gault, made the very same statement a few weeks since. I have classes in general history to teach, and am desirous of getting all the information I can relating to these subjects; and the editor of a light-loving newspaper like the Cynosure is of course equally desirous of the same thing. Would it not be proper to have Mr. Robert Bell present his view of the subject heading this article. He is as vigorous a Jesuit-hater as any one of us, and his abhorrence of Jesuitism is born of the untold wrongs and sufferings that Jesuitism has brought upon the Protestants of Northern Ireland. Let us hear both sides of the case. Respectfully yours, Luther Academy.

LITERATURE.

At: A Social Vision. By Charles Daniel. One volume 16 mo. pp. 296. Philadelphia: Miller Publication Co., 2006 North Twenty-ninth street. Price, $1.00.

This book belongs to a class of literature known as works of the imagination. Sociology, philanthropy, romance, humor and pathos touching questions of public interest are embraced in the narrative. The scene is laid in old colonial Philadelphia, which the author revives for the purposes of his story, which is this: Ai is a young man who lives on a narrow street called Minster street, 7th and Lombard, among the poor. He is elected bishop, but remains in the same place, making a small church, in actual existence, his cathedral; and, by his example, inducing others to come and live in the homesteads of their grandmothers; and thus there is a drifting together, instead of a drifting apart, of the classes. Poor and rich join hands and feel mutually dependent. Ai knows no classes; he knows only his brother man. The motive is to depict a condition of perfect social brotherhood—a return to the primitive days of the past as the better method of enjoying life. It advocates a clean press, just laws, and a universal abolishment of inhumanity, as the foundation-stones of a happy and prosperous society. It has received many commendations.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The articles of the Social Economist for April are characteristically timely. Following close on the agitation of the question of immigration as affected by cholera and the discussion of the proposed annexation of Hawaii, comes Mr. Gunton's article, Philosophy of Immigration and Annexation, placing both questions on the same foundation, sharply defining their significance, their influence on national life, and stating their scientific solution; our monetary system as affected by the shipping interest is vigorously discussed by Wm. W. Bates in Marine Solution of the Money Question; the causes and probable results of Diminishing Returns from Investments are forcibly presented by Uriel H. Crocker; Leonora B. Halstead, writing of The Advantages of City Life, essays to show that concentration of population is not a tendency to be deplored; and the task undertaken by the Royal Commissioners is described by Edward Porritt in Sixty Years of the English Poor-Law. Attention is directed to the significant events of the month in the Editorial Crucible, the Book Reviews are comprehensive, and Free Lance is afield among the Magazines. Published at 34 Union Square, East, New York City.

The Sanitary Era is a periodical with a mission, and labors effectually for special improvements in the conditions of life and health (as well as for general progress in hygienic and sanitary knowledge), and endeavors to make disease and death exceptional instead of universal. Its variety is an important feature, only second to the information and good sense that characterize its contents from month to month.

PAMPHLETS.

"Outdoors" is the title of a refreshing pamphlet which is a pleasure to read. The covers are in ten water-colors, and inside are articles on Lawn Tennis, by F. A. Kellogg; Yachting, by George A. Stewart, successor to Edwin Burgess; Cycling, by Julian Hawthorne; Football, by Walter Camp; Baseball, by J. C. Morse; Horsemanship, by H. C. Merwin; Rowing, by Benjamin Garbo; Canoeing, by C. Bowyer Vaux; a collection of authoritative articles on healthful outdoor recreations, illustrated by Copeland, Beals, Gallagher, Young, and Shute. This book, published by the Pope Mfg. Co., of Boston, for the benefit of the Columbian bicycle, contains articles without any advertising in them. Sent by mail to anybody for five 2-cent stamps.

Believers in the speedy personal second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the restoration of Palestine to the Jews as an attendant event, will be interested in a little tract, "Palestine: An Abstract of Title-Deeds and Documents, Proving that Canaan is Jewish Domain and Property," by Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kans. It is a very ingenious argument, supported by texts of Scripture and really worthy of a close perusal by clergymen and laymen. It can be obtained of the author.

IN BRIEF.

THE VIKING SHIP.

There is an interesting story connected with the building of the Viking ship, which is to sail from Norway in May, arriving here in time to go to the Chicago Exposition by way of the Erie Canal and the great lakes. Near the outskirts of a little village in Norway, Sandefjord by name, there was for a long time a sand-hill or mound. The people spoke of it as the "Kingsmound," and there were ever so many traditions among the villagers about there being strange relics inside—for once, as they said, a Viking had been buried there. In the winter of 1879-80 a soldier began to dig in this mound to discover for himself the truth of these. He very soon struck a solid oak plank that proved to be the side of the ship. Men from the university in Christiania came and made investigation, pronouncing it to be a Viking ship. With warmer weather and softer soil the digging went on, and the ship, in good condition, was brought to light. Inside there was the skeleton of a man in armor, with his oars lying all about. It was easy for experts to determine his period as 900 A. D., and to believe this must have been the kind of ship in which Lief Erickson made his voyage to America some thousand years ago.—Exchange.

SPECTACLES FOR ANIMALS.

The practical value of green goggles for cows to prevent snow blindness is well understood on the American and Russian plains. The work of opticians for other animals is a more recent development. We now have short-sighted horses and dogs which wear spectacles, and appreciate highly the advantage of thus being enabled to recognize friends and surroundings which were formerly indistinct. The owner of a near-sighted horse which has spectacles fastened on the headstall says the animal objects even to going out to pasture without his glasses. The horse was a little startled when they were first put on, but clearly manifested his delight when he fully realized their benefit. If turned out to graze without them he will stay near the barn and whinny plaintively till the stableman brings his spectacles.

A WOMAN DID IT.

It has remained for a woman to invent and patent glass doors for ovens. The wonder is that the idea has not long ago been thought of by some woman who cooks. All cooking instructors lay the greatest stress on the care to be observed in opening an oven door to watch the progress of cakes or muffins. Maria Parloa, making sponge cake, touches the knob with the most delicate care and lightness, dreading even to jar the cake within, and peeks through the smallest crack that will afford the necessary glance. What a relief to walk boldly up to the oven and through these transparent doors, which the genius of a Michigan woman has discovered, study at leisure the progress of rising cake, dough, or crisping fowl.

SO AS TO KNOW WHAT YOU TAKE.

The Berlin police have adopted a common-sense method of dealing with persons who advertise harmful and poisonous preparations for sale, which has the merit of not putting in motion the tardy and uncertain machinery of the law. Immediately beneath the objectionable advertisement they publish the announcement that the preparation above named has been analyzed and is found to consist of such and such a composition, its intrinsic value being so much. In this way lately was stopped the sale of a much-advertised cosmetic, the chief component of which was that deadly salt of mercury known as corrosive sublimate.

AUTOMATIC PROPULSION.

A New York genius has invented a machine for the self-propulsion of ships. It consists of long, strong platforms, rigged out on either side of a vessel, that rise and fall with the roll of the waves and operate a propeller. The motion of these platforms in a strong sea would be similar to that of the pump handles of the old-fashioned fire engines when the "boys" were "shaking her up lively." The inventor thinks that the tendency of these outriggers would be to steady the vessel as well as to force it forward. They would operate in a "dead" calm nearly as well as in a storm; for the ocean is never at rest.

ANOTHER GREAT TELESCOPE.

Another great telescope, the largest in the world, has just been completed by Warner & Swasey of Cleveland. The instrument was constructed for the new Government Naval Observatory on Georgetown Heights, D. C. When the telescope is pointed to the zenith the object glass will be 38 feet above the door. The weight of the telescope is 30 tons. The tube is 32 feet long and 3 feet in diameter at the middle, from which point it tapers toward either end. It has three motions of speed, operated by clock-work, one for the stars, one for the sun, and one for the moon.

HOOD'S CURES.

In saying that Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, its proprietors make no idle or extravagant claim. The advertising of Hood's Sarsaparilla is always within the bounds of reason because it is true; it always appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people because it is true, and it is always fully substantiated by endorsements which, in the financial world, would be accepted without a moment's hesitation.

Read the testimonials published in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla, all from reliable, grateful people.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1893.

They that know thy name will put their trust in thee; for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.—PSALM 9:10.

OPPOSED TO PENSIONS.

We have in mind an instance where a man who was not in the Union army during the rebellion, and sound in body and limb, was employed upon one of the great railroads that center in Chicago. In that service he lost a leg; and then had the temerity to apply for a pension from the government—upon what fraudulent plea we are not informed; but it is nevertheless true that he obtained it, and is now in the enjoyment of it.

Too many of these occurrences have proved the fallacy of an indiscriminate granting of pensions; and their frequency is arousing the indignation of tax-payers and old veteran soldiers against the laxity of a system that permits these frauds to become successful participants in a fund which belongs alone to the gallant, war-worn defenders of our country.

On Wednesday evening of last week "Noah L. Farnham Post, G. A. R., No. 453," met in New York, and declared its unwavering opposition to the indiscriminate granting of pensions, even if it was formally cast out of the ranks of the Grand Army. This same post adopted resolutions on March 3 that the time had come to stop the granting of pensions to distant relatives of Union soldiers and to men who had never been under fire and whose disabilities, if any, were incurred elsewhere than on the field of battle. This provoked a storm of criticism. Rankin Post No. 10, of Brooklyn, filed charges with the commander of the department of New York. After some correspondence the post was declared to be in contempt of the by-laws of the order.

It was finally determined at the meeting on Wednesday night that Post Commander Finn should inform the assistant adjutant-general that it is the opinion of the post, if it is the desire of the Grand Army of the Republic to pay pensions to people who have not incurred disabilities in the service of the country, and to those who do not need them, that the post no longer desires to remain in the Grand Army of the Republic. Commander Finn was also directed to state that if a reply was not received before Wednesday morning, April 19, it would be taken for granted that the Grand Army officials were not in sympathy with the patriotic feeling of the post, which will then declare its connection with the order ended.

George Washington Post has also adopted resolutions similar to those adopted by Farnham Post.

Every honest citizen will endorse the action of these two branches of the G. A. R. Honor and tribute to every worthy soldier of the Union army, but to sneaks, bounty-jumpers, and frauds of all kinds, confusion and defeat!

CATHOLICISM AND FREEMASONRY.

The Sunday States of New Orleans, under date of April 9, makes the following statements, which it is difficult to reconcile with the denunciations of Freemasonry expressed in the Encyclical of Pope Leo, December 8, 1892:

It is understood that Satolli is now considering the advisability of removing the ban of the church from Masonry and other secret organizations, and with this in view, has appointed a committee of bishops at Baltimore to make a report to him in regard to the matter, and in advance of this report Satolli declares that he will not make a decision.

Turning to the pope's letter, which is mainly directed against the spirit and practices of the Freemasons in Italy, but relatively to Freemasonry in all countries, we find the following plain language. He is writing to the Italian people:

When I am addressing you now, I accuse Freemasonry of being a foe to God, the church, and to our fatherland. Consider Freemasonry practically as your enemy, and defend yourselves with all weapons which reason, conscience and faith have given you . . . against such a cruel enemy. Do not be carried away by its beautiful aspect, or blinded by its promises, or persuaded by its inducements, or intimidated by its threats. Remember that Christianity and Freemasonry are opposed to each other on principle. To approach the latter means to create a deep abyss to the former. You will now understand, beloved sons, the impossibility of a compatibility of the two doctrines, viz., the Catholic and the Masonic.

We confess that we are puzzled to see how Satolli can brush aside these bitter opinions of the pope, and permit a conference of priests to modify the opposition—the ecclesiastical hatred—that inspired the foregoing denunciation.

The article in the States is undoubtedly the work of a Freemason. The internal evidence of its origin is everywhere apparent, and should be accepted gratum salis. "The wish is father to the thought," no doubt. In vain may the editor claim, as he does, that "thousands of the most earnest Masons in this country are Catholics," which is doubtless true; but he admits, in the same sentence, that "these Catholics" are "in their dying hours refused the solace of the church unless they renounce what the church teaches mankind to observe" (referring to the alleged moral and benevolent character of Freemasonry).

The church's opinion of Freemasonry is expressed as follows in "Judges of the Faith," by Rev. T. E. Jenkins, published by John Murphy & Co., Baltimore, and endorsed by Cardinals Manning, Gibbons and other "holy men" of the church:

"Masonic associations are not more than 150 or 200 years old, since their foundation by some tippling Englishmen in a French cabaret of Paris."—Part 1, page 4. "We are too free and contented. . . . to fear yet awhile that secret societyism will find such fools or such knaves for tools as the devilish organizations of Europe or South America. At least it is the hour to sound the alarm and be alert. Masonic mummeries are becoming the ritual for State and national dedications of buildings and monuments. What wonder that the lodges foster State secular schools?"—Ibid, pp. 5, 6.

In this connection it is pertinent to ask, Who is Satolli? The answer is: Mons. Satolli is the judicial representative of the Pope of Rome, the highest prelate of the Roman hierarchy in the United States. He is a permanent officer of the church, clothed with authority to hear and determine the existing differences between the bishops of the United States on the school question, and to heal existing ruptures without appeal. He derives his power from the pope alone, and it is not likely that he will dare to oppose the pope's opinions about Freemasonry or anything else. So that, whatever the conference of bishops which he has called to consider the question of Freemasonry may decide, there is no danger of his modifying the decision of the pope that the Masonic fraternity is the enemy of the papal church.

In due season another pope may arise who will know not Leo, and whose policy it may be to conciliate Masonry and unite it with the hierarchy.

THE INCREASE OF HOMICIDE.

A writer in The American Journal of Politics states that during the year 1888 the number of homicides in the United States was 2184. In 1889 the number had increased to 3567. In 1890 there were 4290, and in 1891, 5906. In other words, the number of murders more than doubled in four years. It is probable that other crimes increased in a similar proportion.

It is difficult to account for this enormous increase in crime. The great and growing consumption of alcoholic drinks is one of the causes; but this alone could not have made so vast an increase. The immigration of many of the worst class of foreigners is another, but a wholly inadequate solution of the problem. The failure to enforce the law, the prevalence of lynchings, and the multiplication of secret combinations, which not only wreak their vengeance on their opposers, but shield their members from merited punishment, are among the other causes.

All indicate a deplorable condition of public morals and emphasize the importance of a more faithful preaching of the Word of God. If, as many think, the day of our Lord is at hand, the present is the dark hour before the day.

THE SITUATION IN HAWAII.

The secular press has quite fully reported the action of the United States government in the Hawaiian islands during the past week.

Before deciding to take official action in relation to the annexation of these islands to the United States, as desired by the provisional government at Honolulu, President Cleveland appointed Jas. H. Blount a special commissioner to visit the islands and officially report concerning the present condition of affairs. His credentials were addressed to the provisional government and endorsed by Secretary of State Gresham.

When Commissioner Blount arrived at Honolulu, thus empowered by the United States, he removed the American flag from the royal palace and substituted for it the Hawaiian ensign which it had displaced. Then he ordered the United States soldiers and sailors who had been placed in charge of the city to return to their respective ships, and the native troops were left to guard the palace.

The change, whatever the state of suppressed feeling which it inspired, was quietly and obediently made. Of course, the provisional government was greatly disturbed by the action of the United States, as it seemed to menace the cherished scheme of annexation. But after some discussion, during which the object of Mr. Blount's visit was made plainer, the public mind was greatly relieved.

It is reported that Japan is anxious to obtain possession of the islands for a coaling station; but positive assurance has been given that our government will not brook any foreign interference in Hawaiian affairs during the month or two to be consumed in consultation over the future of the islands.

AN UNUSUAL COMBINATION.

The recent call of a Jewish rabbi, of Minneapolis, to the pastoral care of a Unitarian congregation indicates both a growing appreciation by the Jews of the human character of our Lord, and a wide departure from all real Christian faith by these Unitarians.

"The religion of pantheism," taught by Freemasonry, is largely responsible for this sort of a compromise. It is in the direct line of Masonic religion. That the Jews are to be converted to Christ, and that, sooner or later, they will receive him as their Prophet, Priest and King, seems to be abundantly taught, both in the Old and New Testaments.

It possibly indicates some abatement of Jewish prejudice that they have come so generally to concede that Jesus of Nazareth was a good Jew and a good man; but it is not that sort of concessions that gives hope to the Christian. There were, in ancient times, many wise and good men, but only one Messiah.

It is a sad mistake to suppose that Jesus saves us by his ethical teachings, grand as they were, and not by his suffering as the divine Lord, "who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification." Unless we can accept this, we practically reject him and become his enemies.

It ought to be apparent, both to Jews and all other Unitarians, that to call Jesus good is to admit that he was God. When the young man came unto him and called him "Good Master," Jesus said: "Why callest thou me good? There is none good, save one, that is God." Men who are not what they profess to be are liars. Either Christ was divine or he was not. If he was not, there is no occasion for Jewish or Unitarian preachers; and if they truly accepted him, they would be neither Jews nor Unitarians.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

There is something wonderful in the hold that this system of religious philosophy has on the public mind. In spite of the opposition of the medical profession and the nearly uniform resistance of both the pulpit and the press, it has continued to spread, both in breadth and in depth. Not all these so-called scinetists are alike. They include some of the best as well as some of the worst elements of the religious world. In reading some of their recent publications, we have been impressed with the marked similarity of views to them of the old Quietists, whose grand idea of religion was that of perfect passivity in God. The idea is beautifully expressed in Faber's hymn,

"I worship Thee, sweet will of God,
And all Thy ways adore."

For when the soul has learned to accept all things as from God, and as manipulations of his love, there is indeed peace and saving health. If Christian Science taught only this, it would be indeed a great contribution to our prevalent religion.

But, alas! this is not all. To show the inevitable tendency of the system, we make a few quotations from their "Universal Truth," whose motto is "I have faith in Jesus Christ":

"There is nothing in the whole universe but Good (God).

"Evil there is none, since Good (God) is All." "There is no matter, for spirit is Omnipresent." "There is no reality in sin, sickness or death." "Since God is Omnipresent Good, there can be no other power, no opposing element, in the universe. That picture of a place of torment, and of an Evil One, is of necessity blotted out of existence by the affirmation of God's being omnipotent." "Since all is Good there can be no evil," etc.

According to this theory, Christ did not suffer and die for our sins, except in appearance; for in reality there never was any sin, any suffering, or any death. No one who truly accepts this theory can have any real love for Christ, for no such person really existed, unless in appearance. The whole system resolves itself into simple pantheism, and is analogous to Buddhism, in which the supreme good consists in being absorbed into duty. Not because of the effects on the physical life and health of those who accept it, but because it is leading many to disbelief in God's Word, do we object to the whole system.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. T. E. Kennedy, son-in-law of the late President J. Blanchard, died suddenly at his home in San Francisco, Cal., March 29th. Mr. Kennedy was reared in the vicinity of Los Gatos and San Jose, California, and returned to the latter city immediately after his marriage, in 1875. The greater part of his active life was spent in teaching. He was very successful in this vocation, and was for some years inspector of schools in San Francisco.

During their residence in that city Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, with their older children, were members of Bethany Congregational church, and in other places he was active in Christian work in the Sabbath-school and mission, occasionally preaching in communities otherwise neglected. His father was a pioneer in California, a rugged and earnest nature, warmly espousing the reform represented by the Cynosure.

Mr. Kennedy's death was quite sudden, probably from heart-failure. He had been ill for months with a complication of difficulties, which the physicians did not well understand. At times he suffered much, and then, rallying, he was able to attend to his business.

His death occurred at a time when his friends hoped that he might again rally and possibly recover. He was buried by the side of his mother, at San Jose.

Mrs. Kennedy is left with an interesting and beautiful family of six children, and in her affliction has the dearest sympathy of her many friends.

—We are glad to learn that Mr. Geo. W. Hinman, son of our correspondent, Rev. H. H. Hinman, and formerly a compositor in this office, has been chosen Professor of Mathematics in Benzoia College, Michigan. Mr. Hinman has been a student at Oberlin for the last five years, and graduates this spring. He has our congratulations.

—A clumsy, injudicious bill has passed the lower house of the Illinois Legislature, that commands all parents and guardians of children between the ages of 7 and 14 years to send them to some public or private school during at least sixteen weeks of each year, twelve of such weeks to be consecutive, or to give them such education at home as shall be equivalent to sixteen weeks of school work, and it fixes a penalty for disobedience to these commandments. But it provides no efficient means of discovering the disobedient, or legally convicting them when discovered. It is also replete with other errors, and ought never to become a law.

—The Salvation Army, which has obtained holdings in thirty-nine different countries and colonies, America being one of the foremost, has appointed a week of self-denial, from Saturday next (22d), for all its members and their friends in the United States. The object is to raise funds for maintaining and extending the operations of the Army and thus increase the scope of the work of salvation. From a recent speech by Commandant Booth the present status of the Army in this country is gathered: Adherents, 275,000; commissioned officers, 1,600; has 100 staff officers, secretaries and clerks at its headquarters in New York; has recently purchased land in that city for $200,000, on which an auditorium costing $80,000 is to be erected; and publishes weekly 90,000 copies of its paper, the War Cry. The "slum work" of the Army is one of its most prominent and successful features. It is a grand institution.

—How "Masonic honor" is a "preferred creditor" in a case of financial failure is significantly made manifest in the following modern instance, showing that Freemasonry, like wisdom, is justified of her children. Among recent business failures was that of a man at Bismarck, Dak., who presented a printed statement of his affairs to his creditors. In this his liabilities were placed at $31,517.56, and his assets at $1,500, leaving a deficit of $30,017.56. Two items in this schedule of indebtedness are: "Paid a debt involving Masonic honor, $160 00," and "Paid a debt involving Masonic honor, $163.18." He also offers to pay his unpreferred creditors five cents on the dollar. Had he paid his Masonic creditors in the same ratio, they would have received $16.16, instead of $323.18. The inference is that lodge honor had to be satisfied in full—Masonic obligations were paramount to all others—regardless of the rules of common honesty.

—Those who believe that Freemasonry perverts justice and protects the guilty, will find fresh evidence of the fact in the following incident, which is related by Rev. H. H. Hinman: In a certain thriving town in Wisconsin, there is an officer under the United States government. Recently he was arraigned, tried and convicted of obtaining money by fraud. The penalty for his crime is imprisonment in the penitentiary for five years, or a fine. He is a Mason, and not only has the higher penalty been remitted, but his fine and costs of suit have been promptly paid by others. Up to the present he retains his position as a government officer. Did his Freemasonry secure him this immunity from punishment? In the same town is a minister of the Gospel, a man of fine ability, and, heretofore, quite popular. He is an active member of the lodge. Recently he was accused, and is believed to have been guilty, of conduct unbecoming the character of a minister or a Christian. If he were innocent, prudence would demand that he should ask for an investigation by his brethren. But no, the matter is quietly hushed up. He goes on with his preaching, but good Christians are grieved at the scandal. Has Freemasonry anything to do with this?

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.
2. Annual Meeting Conference, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.
3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

THE CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCHES.

The National Christian Association has from the first maintained that the questions which it urges are first of all religious. It stands for Christ. It holds that he is God, one with the Father and the Spirit; that he is the only way to God; that there is "no other name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved;" and that, therefore, every system, of whatsoever name or nature, which ignores or rejects the Lord Jesus Christ, rejects by that same act the living God, and ends in darkness and death.

We maintain, as a necessary sequence, that every altar not set up in that one name Jesus Christ is false; and every worship practiced before such altars is "Gentile" worship, and therefore worship of demons. "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God." 1 Cor. 10: 20. We believe the secret lodges practice such a false worship at their altars, and that this only needs to be understood clearly, known as a fact, to receive universal condemnation by true Christians.

The late revered and beloved Pastor Fisch of Paris seemed to understand this, when he said in 1873, "The Church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed." Dr. George F. Pentecost realized it when he published that the alliance of church members with wicked men in the lodges "is doing more mischief" than any other one enemy of Christ. So did Enoch T. Carson, a Masonic leader in America, when he said that the order is "disintegrating the churches."

We believe, with Dr. Pentecost and other eminent men, that this reform belongs in a peculiar manner to the Christian churches, and as a step toward bringing it into their control the Association by its Board of Directors has invited the churches to send representatives to a conference to be held in Chicago, June 20, to consider:

1. The religious creed of the secret orders, and whether it does not nullify and contradict the creed of the Christian church as gathered from the Word of God.
2. Whether the lodge altars and worship do not as truly tend to destroy the true, as the altars set up by Manasseh and others were destructive of Jerusalem and its temple.—2 Kings 21st chapter, etc.
3. Whether the secret mystery systems of ancient paganism are not being revived in fact by the lodge, as Masonic writers quite uniformly assure us.

Facts relating to these and related questions will be put before this conference of the churches, in confident hope that they will influence these delegates as they have us, and that in some way the churches can be made to realize them more widely and deeply.

Delegations have been appointed to this conference by the following bodies:

1. The United Presbyterians, Illinois and Iowa Synods.
2. The Reformed Church in America, Chicago Classis.
3. The Presbyterian Church, Chicago Ministers' Association.
4. The Evangelical Association, Illinois conference.
5. German Baptists.
6. German Methodists.
7. Free Methodists.
8. The United Brethren.
9. The Swedish Mission Church.
10. The Norwegian Lutherans of Synodical Conference.
11. do. Hauge Synod.
12. do. United Synod.
13. Danish Lutherans.
14. German Lutherans, Missouri Synod (appointed with limitations).

Several others have probably appointed from whom no report has yet come in. It is expected that some nine or ten other denominations will be represented; and if God desert us not this will be one of the most serious, earnest and fateful meetings of our reform. Let prayer everywhere and continually arise for God's blessing upon it.

THE HOME.

NOW.

If you have a kind word—say it,
Throbbing hearts soon sink to rest;
If you owe a kindness—pay it,
Life's sun hurries to the west.

Can you do a kind deed—do it,
From despair some soul to save;
Bless each day as you pass through it,
Marching onward to the grave.

If some grand thing for to-morrow
You are dreaming—do it now;
From the future do not borrow;
Frost soon gathers on the brow.

Speak your word, perform your duty,
Night is coming deep with rest;
Stars will gleam in fadeless beauty,
Grasses whisper o'er your breast.

Days for deeds are few, my brother,
Then to-day fulfill your vow;
If you mean to help another,
Do not dream it—do it now.

HOW TO FIND REST.

When Noah's dove found no rest for her weary wing, what did she do? We read that she "returned into the ark." Here is the duty of every restless, sin-troubled soul. God says, "Return unto me." Listen to the invitation of the divine love. When the dove returned, she brought nothing but herself. So you can bring nothing to Jesus except one poor, guilty, unsatisfied sinner. Do not bring your sins; do not bring any claims of self-righteousness; they will not pay for the transportation. Jesus wants you, and you need Jesus. Then come to him just as you are, a weak, crippled soul, utterly powerless to help or to heal yourself. The prodigal son only brought one ragged, shoeless, half-starved wretch to his father's door, but that was all the good old father wanted to see. Jesus wants you.

Remember that there was only one ark for Noah's dove to fly to; on every side was the desolation of a drowned world. So God has provided only one ark for your weary, wandering soul. He has not provided a variety of religions, and left us to take our choice. He does not perplex you with several "historical religions," for there is none other name given under heaven whereby you can be saved than the name of Him whose blood cleanseth from all sin. Prince and peasant, philosopher and pauper child, have the same disease, and can only be cured by the same Physician. The core of all true creeds and confessions of faith is just this: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." And the sweet, winsome message he sends to your troubled heart is "Come to me, and I will give you rest."

Observe, too, that the ark had only "one window." All the light and the air come in through that single casement. Beautifully does that single open window typify unto you the illumination of the Holy Spirit. How strikingly it illustrates the fact that every soul which flies toward Jesus must come into the new life through the guiding and renewing influence of the divine Spirit. Regeneration brings the penitent sinner in vital union with Christ; the Spirit alone regenerates.

Troubled friend, the window is open; the blessed Spirit is drawing you now. It is not a pastor, or an evangelist, or a visit to an inquiry meeting, that you need, or can give you relief. Co-operate with the Holy Spirit. Go whither he leads; do what he bids you. Quit the sins which hold you back, and yield your whole self up to Christ. In fact, the coming in through that open window of light and hope into the pardoning love and strength and fullness of the crucified Son of God, is saving faith. It is not the opinion about Christ, but the act of grasping yourself fast to Christ, that alone can save your soul. When you do what the weary dove did,—when you give over everything else and just betake yourself straight to the only ark of refuge, and light down there,—your immediate duty is done. Then the infinitely loving Jesus will do for you what the patriarch did for the returning dove,—he will "draw you in,"—into a covenant union with himself, into a new life, new light, new strength, new hope—everything is become new—into a wondrous and satisfying peace. As your fluttering soul yields itself to the all-sufficient Saviour, you will hear him say, "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you; let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." When you find Jesus, you have found rest.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

UNTRUTHFULNESS OF SERVANTS.

"Mary, if anybody calls, I am out." These words were spoken recently in my hearing, says Helen S. Conant in the Ladies' Home Journal—spoken, too, by sweet lips, lips that would have proudly scorned to tell a lie. And yet this was a lie direct. We were sitting in my friend's cozy upstairs snugery, and she had just expressed a hope that no one would come to interrupt the confidential chat we were enjoying so much. "We will not be interrupted," she exclaimed. "Mary, if anybody calls, I am out."

"Yes ma'am," said Mary, very demurely, as she left the room.

"Was that right, my dear?" I said. "Do you expect Mary to be truthful to you when you teach her to lie for you?"

Of course there was no denying the fact that wrong had been done—wrong to Mary, the maid, wrong to the friend who might call to be turned away with a lie, and wrong to the sweet, youthful lips which had spoken the thoughtless and untruthful words. Still my friend tried to justify herself.

"Everybody does it. I am told constantly that people are out when I know they are at home," she said.

Now, the fact that everybody does a thing never made wrong right. In this case, however, everybody does not do it. A thoughtful, honorable woman has too much respect for herself, and too much respect for her servant, to stoop to such a falsehood. We do not always stop to think of the power of example, nor of how closely we are watched by those whose opportunities for pure moral development have been much less than our own.

Truthfulness is a necessary quality in a servant. Misdeeds are forgiven and forgotten when they are frankly confessed. We are sorry for the broken dish when the maid comes to us with the pieces in her hand, but we rejoice in the feeling of confidence it gives us that we are receiving faithful, if not always careful, service; but it is different when we find the pieces hidden away at the back of a high shelf, or discover them by accident in the ash barrel. A mistress who will deliberately instruct her maid to tell a lie cannot expect to know the truth of what goes on in her kitchen; and if she does not, she is in a large measure to blame for it; for in telling falsehoods herself she loses the respect of her servant, and a mistress who is not respected will never be well served, neither can she exert a good influence upon those humble workers who, for the time being, are members of her household, as it is her duty to do.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS.

"Jesus, and shall it ever be A mortal man ashamed of thee?"

was written by Joseph Gregg when but a youth of 10 years old. In after-life he wrote a number of hymns, among which we have,

"Behold a stranger at the door,
He gently knocks, has knocked before."

"True worth is ever modest known." We have this maxim exemplified in the interesting history of the following beautiful hymn. It was written by Miss Frances Havergal in 1859, and came very nearly going into the fire instead of enriching the sacred literature of the church. The Lord needed it for a different kind of fire, and saved it by a gentle impulse. The rest of the story we give in her own words.

"It was, I think, the first thing I ever wrote which could be called a hymn, written when I was quite a young girl. I did not half realize what I was writing about. I was following very far off, always doubting and fearing. I think I had come to Jesus with a trembling, hem-touching faith, but it was a coming in the press, and behind, never seeing his face, or feeling sure that he loved me, though I was clear that I could not do without him, and wanted to serve and follow him.

"I don't know how I came to write it. I scribbled it in pencil on the back of a circular, in a few minutes, and then read it over and thought, 'Well, this is not poetry, anyhow! I won't go to the trouble to copy this.' So I reached out my hand to put it into the fire! A sudden impulse made me draw it back; I put it, crumpled and singed, into my pocket. Soon after I went out to see a dear old woman in an alms-house. She began talking to me, as she always did, about her dear Saviour, and I thought I would see if she, a simple old woman, would care for these verses, which I felt sure nobody would ever care to read. So I read them to her, and she was so delighted with them that, when I went back, I copied them out and kept them, and now the Master has sent them out in all directions. I have seen tears while they have been sung at mission services, and have heard of them being really blessed to many." This is the hymn:

"I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed,
That thou might'st ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead.
I gave, I gave my life for thee;
What hast thou given for me?"

"My Father's house of light,
My glory circled throne,
I left for earthly night,
For wanderings sad and lone;
Hast thou left aught for me?"

Reginald Heber was born 1783, and possessed extraordinary intellectual brilliancy. He was also deeply pious from youth. He wrote a number of hymns, among them the great missionary hymn: "From Greenland's icy mountains."

The loss of his only child deeply affected him, and under the sore bereavement he wrote:

"Thou art gone to the grave! but we will not deplore thee,
Tho' sorrows and darkness encompass the tomb;
The Saviour hath passed through its portals before thee,
And the lamp of his love is thy guide through the gloom."

Being imbued with a strong missionary spirit, he was sent to India, where, after three years of labor among the benighted of that land, he was called to come up higher; and his body was laid to rest amid the "coral strand."

Judson, the famous missionary to Burmah, was in his earlier years a professed infidel. He was arrested in his mad career by the death of an infidel associate under peculiar circumstances. The deep conviction that fastened itself upon him, brought him trembling to the cross of Christ, to seek the comforts of the Christian religion. It marked a turning point in his life. He decided for Christ, and turned his attention to heathen lands. Sore trials awaited him, but, with an unflinching faith, he endured as "seeing him who is invisible." About the time his work was fairly started, war broke out and he was arrested as an English spy, and confined in a dungeon for nine months. His torture, while in prison, was almost beyond endurance. He was stretched on a bare floor, without even a block for a pillow, and bound with fetters of iron to prevent his moving. This was during the hot season, and he, with about one hundred others, was kept in a close place where no light or fresh air could come except what came through the crevices of the boards of the rude home. The entire time of his imprisonment was nineteen months. It was in this dreadful place and soul-trying time that he versified the Lord's Prayer, that, in the Psalmody of the church, is now echoing around the world:

"Our Father, God, who art in heaven,
All hallowed be thy name;
Thy kingdom come; thy will be done
In heaven and earth the same.

"Give us this day our daily bread;
And as we those forgive
Who sin against us, so may we Forgiving grace receive.

"Into temptation lead us not;
From evil set us free;
And thine the kingdom, thine the power,
And glory ever be."

His loving and accomplished wife, knowing his hard fare in such a prison, prepared for him some dainties, but when they were presented to him, the comforts of his home, and the scenes of his boyhood,—his kind mother, devoted father, brothers and sisters around the noon-day meal, were vividly brought before him, and he wept till the tears ran down over the cruel chains that held him fast. His heart was filled to overflowing.

ing, and he could not eat the delicious morsel but passed it to an associate. Shortly after he was shut up in prison, there was born to him a little daughter, who, when she was twenty days old, was brought to him to receive a father's kiss. He wrote to her a poem of thirty stanzas, beginning,

"Sleep, darling infant, sleep,
Hushed on thy mother's breast;
Let no rude sound of clanking chains
Disturb thy balmy rest."

When the prison doors were opened to him and the clanking chains dropped off, and the tears were brushed away, he wrote:

"Sovereign love appoints the measure,
And the number of our pains,
And is pleased when we take pleasure
In the trials he ordains."

Broken down in health, he sought the benefits of the invigorating sea-breeze, and started on a voyage to the Isle of France. Nine days after embarking, his soul went up to God, and his body was committed to a watery grave, where it shall be rocked by the restless billows till the sea, like the graves, shall give up the dead at the call of the archangel.—James A. Sell, in the Gospel Messenger.

THE HYMNS OF WALES.

Wales has always been a land of song. The soul of the Cymry is full of music, and breaks out on all possible occasions. The Spaniards have their mandolin, the Southern plantations had their banjo, and the Welsh have their harp. But they have always been more noted for their vocal than for their instrumental melody. It is only a few years since a competitive contest was held between England and Wales at the Sydenham Crystal Palace. The best singers of both nationalities took part; the representatives of the little principality, however, bore away the prize—a silver cup.

But from an early day their minds have been more thoroughly attuned to sacred music than anything else. An ancient poet of theirs, alleged to be Taliesin, in the sixth century referred to this in a predictive strain:

"Their Lord they will praise,
Their language they will keep,
Their land they will lose Except wild Wales."

Rev. Elvet Lewis, in his "Sweet Singers of Wales," says, concerning this ancient bard, "On whatever lonesome peak he stood, a companion of clouds and storms and far-off dawns, he heard the prayer, and knew the hope of a nation."

Wild Wales is still their own. The praise of God has been in the land since early Christian days; it has been often subdued, sometimes almost an exile music, but never quite lost. To-day more than ever the best song of the land is the song of God; and the prophetic words haunt its valleys and hills like an immortal echo, "Their God they will praise." It is not definitely known when the hymn made its appearance among them. The twelfth century is mentioned as perhaps the earliest. In the Black Book of Carmarthen of this period there is a bardic hymn of which Elvet Lewis gives a free translation, the following being the last verse:

"Unto God we were lost,
Except for the ransom
By a blameless decree;
From the blood-stained wood
Came salvation forth
To the wide universe:
Mighty Shepherd,
Never shall the merit of Christ decay."

—Lewis Meredith, in the N. W. Christian Advocate.

THAT DEAR OLD HYMN.

An American lady, writing from Cairo, relates the following touching incident. She was allowed to visit the military hospital soon after some wounded men had been brought in from the skirmish. The following, in substance, is the account she gives:

"The three hours we could stay were full of work for heart and hand. One young soldier from a Highland regiment especially excited my interest. He had lost a limb and could not, the doctor said, live through the night. I stopped at his side to see whether there was anything that I could do for him. He lay with closed eyes; and, as his lips moved, I caught the words, 'Mother, mother.' I dipped my handkerchief in a basin of iced water and bathed his forehead where the fever flush burned.

"'Oh, that is good!' he said opening his eyes. Seeing me bending over him, he caught my hand and kissed it 'Thank you, lady,' he said: 'it minds me o' mother.'"

"'Can I write to your mother?' I asked.

"'No,' he said; 'the surgeon had promised to write; but could I, would I, sing to him?'"

"I hesitated a moment, and looked around. The gleam on the yellow water of the Nile, as the western rays slanted down, caught my eye, and suggested the river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God. I began to sing in a low voice the Gospel hymn, 'Shall we gather at the river?' Eager heads were raised around us to listen more intently, while bass and tenor voices, weak and tremulous, came in on the chorus.

"'Yes, we'll gather at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river;
Gather with the saints at the river
That flows by the throne of God.'"

"When the song was ended, I looked into the face of the boy (for he was not over twenty), and said: 'Shall you be there?'"

"'Yes, I'll be there, through what the Lord Jesus has done for me,' he answered, his blue eyes shining, 'while a light that never was on sea or land' irradiated his face.

"The tears gathered in my eyes as I thought of the mother in her far-off Scottish home, watching and waiting for tidings of her soldier-boy who was breathing away his life in an Egyptian hospital.

"'Come again, lady, come again,' I heard on all sides as we left the barracks. I shall go, but I shall not find my Scottish laddie, for by to-morrow's reveille he will have crossed the river."—Golden Rule.

MOTHER'S GIRL.

Sleeves to the dimpled elbow,
Fun in the sweet blue eyes,
To and fro upon errands
The little maiden hies.
Now, she is washing dishes,
Now, she is feeding the chicks,
Now, she is playing with pussy,
Or teaching Rover tricks.

Wrapped in a big white apron,
Pinned in a checkered shawl,
Hanging clothes in the garden;
Oh, were she only tall!
Hushing the fretful baby,
Coaxing his hair to curl,
Stepping around so briskly,
Because she is mother's girl.

Hunting for eggs in the haymow,
Petting old Brindle's calf,
Riding Don to the pasture
With many a ringing laugh.
Coming whenever you call her,
Running wherever sent,
Mother's girl is a blessing,
And mother is well content.

TEMPERANCE.

LIQUID BREAD.

W. S. Caine, M. P., in a recent temperance address at Basingstoke, England, referred as follows to the subject of "liquid bread:"

I remember once seeing over a public-house door in Liverpool, "Good ale is liquid bread." I went into the house, and said, "Give me a quart of liquid bread." [Laughter.] The landlord said, "Ah, first-rate sign, isn't it?" "Yes," said I, "if it's true." "Oh, it's true enough; my beer is all right." "Well, give me a bottle to take home." He gave me a bottle of his liquid bread. I took it to Dr. Samuelson, an analytical chemist, and I said to him, "I want you to tell me how much bread there is in this bottle." He smelt it and said, "It's beer." "No, no," I said, "it's liquid bread." "Well," said he, "if you come again in a week I'll tell you all about it." He charged me three guineas. [Laughter.] In a week's time I went to know all about the liquid bread. The first thing about it was that there was 93 per cent of water. [Laughter] "It's liquid, anyhow," I said, "we'll pass that." [Renewed laughter.] "Now, let's go on to the bread." "Alcohol, 5 per cent." What's alcohol?" I said. "There's the dictionary; you can turn it up for yourself." I turned it up and found alcohol described as a "powerful narcotic poison." "Well," I thought, "this is the queerest description of bread I ever read in my life." [Laughter.] Then he gave me a number of small percentages of curious things, which he had put carefully down on each corner of a piece of white paper, and which amounted to about a quarter of a thimbleful of dirty-looking powder. That was the bread—[great laughter]—two per cent. "And there would not be as much as that," said Dr. Samuelson, "if it were Bass' or Alsopp's. This is bad beer." "So the better the beer the less bread there is in it?" "Certainly. It is the business of the brewer to get the bread out of it, not to put bread into it." This is the simple scientific truth with regard to beer, and the case is stronger with regard to wine and spirits. There is no nourishment in it at all. Science tells you so. Experience tells you so. It has no use for the human body, either as food or medicine.

THE ARGUMENTATIVE GROC-SHOP.

"How dare you come in and plant yourself up against me?" exclaimed the Church to the Grog-shop. "I regard your very touch as contamination. I should think if you had any regard for yourself (which I know you haven't) you would hardly care to be in such close proximity to one who, as you know, despises you as an institution of the devil!"

"Oh," replied the Grog-shop, coolly, "I'm not so sure about there being such a deadly enmity between us, after all."

"What!" answered the Church, "not much enmity between us? Look at these resolutions!" and she held out a formidable batch of anti-saloon declarations. "Let me tell you they were passed unanimously and amid tremendous enthusiasm."

"Yes, I know all about your resoluting," replied the Grog-shop, with impudent effrontery. "That's all mere guff, Mother Church. Actions speak louder than words. I don't regard our relations as at all unfriendly. We are not enemies; we're partners, and that's why I thought I would come and nestle beside you. I'm really under your protection, you know!"

The Church was so horrified that for a moment she couldn't speak; and then, her spirit trembling with emotion, she ejaculated, "O wretched Church that I am, who will deliver me from this dead body!"

"You don't seem to relish my remarks," put in the Grog-shop, "and I notice that your prayer is in the same line as your resolutions. I regard both as pure hypocrisy."

"Now you are adding insult to injury!" exclaimed the Church. "I tell you I hate you, and long for the day when you shall be utterly exterminated!"

"So you have often said," replied the aggravating Grog-shop. "If you mean it, why don't you do the exterminating?"

"Oh! if I but had the power!" fervently exclaimed the Church.

"Well, haven't you? You have enough members in good standing at the present moment to secure prohibition for any government, if they would vote that way just once. But they won't do it. They vote for the parties that license me, and still remain members in good standing; and though you pass a resolution that the liquor traffic cannot be licensed without sin, you go on winking at the sin of voting for the system of licenses! What do you think of yourself? Am I not really under your protection? Then why do you object to my company? Come, have a drink and let us be friends!"

Moral—And the Church was mum.—The Temperar, Hamilton, Canada.

East Mississippi has outlawed the saloon except in two towns—Aberdeen and Okolona. The last place to vote out whisky was Columbus.

In Des Moines, Iowa, the Young Men's Republican Club voted unanimously in favor of prohibition in the State platform of that party, much to the chagrin of the party leaders. The Register does not attempt to conceal its annoyance.

BIBLE LESSON.

OLD TESTAMENT TEACHINGS.

LESSON V.—Second Quarter, 1893.—April 30.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1 The call of Wisdom—vs. 20-24. We are here shown the heavenly origin of true wisdom. There is a wisdom of this world that is shrewd, earthly, sordid. It comes from below, and not from above. It is the opposite of that heavenly wisdom which is here personified. "She crieth in the streets." She frequents the chief places of concourse. There is no secrecy in her methods. She does not hide in darkened upper-rooms, and whisper her heavenly secrets to candidates sworn "ever to conceal and never reveal" them to anyone else. Yet the age in which these words were written was an age when the ancient Mysteries, on which modern Freemasonry and all the minor orders which emanate from it are founded, flourished. Every false worship had its secret forms and esoteric teachings, which were only for the priests and a favored few; but the true religion, then as now, was a religion for everybody, rich and poor, the lettered and the ignorant. Her secrets were free to all. In the thronged city streets, and in the market places, she is represented as lifting up her voice in entreaty to the simple ones, the fools and scorners who despise her heavenly invitation. This is even more true at the present day, when light and knowledge are so widespread. Yet how many "simple ones" there are who fall victims to the rumseller's wiles; how many "scornful ones," who despise everything religious; how many "fools" who are snared by her "whose steps take hold on hell!" "I will pour out my Spirit upon you." We see this promise fulfilled in the conversion of such men as Jerry McAuley. With the heavenly wisdom there are no "hopeless cases". God's Spirit is stronger than hereditary influences. No matter if a man is born of vicious parents, no matter how wretched his environments, if he has the faintest longing in his heart for better things, God will meet that longing with a larger measure of spiritual help than he would grant to one more favored. "I will make known my words unto them." Many a convert from the city slums has become such a Bible student as to shame the cultured Christian who never takes time to study God's Word. There is hope for every one, however miserable or degraded. Earthly wisdom may pass by on the other side. Heavenly wisdom follows in the footsteps of Him who wills not that any should perish.

2 The punishment of them who refuse to hear Wisdom—vs. 24-32. The world is apt to consider this divine wisdom as foolishness. Her counsel is set at naught, her heavenly call disregarded. "I also will laugh at your calamity." When the wicked are taken in their own snare, when the man who lives on the weakness of his fellow-beings, who ruins the innocent, and destroys the happiness of others through his passions or his greed, no good man is sorry but rather rejoices to see vengeance overtake him. They who sow to the wind must reap the whirlwind. "Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer." How many, at the close of a career of folly and dissipation, have looked back with bitter regret to the time when they stood at the turning of the ways, and wished they might live their lives over again! But there are multitudes not to be classed with such, who have yet failed of the true wisdom. They may be church-members, but they have been foolish virgins. Their lamps are gone out. They have not sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, but lower aims and desires have occupied their hearts and minds till it is too late. They are professors but not possessors. They can never be numbered among the wise who will "shine as the firmament". "Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own doings." What we sow we must reap. This is as immutable a law in the spiritual as in the natural world. No man ever sowed nettles expecting to reap corn. So, if a young man sows wild oats in his youth, the harvest of his old age will be wild oats. No truth of God's Word needs to be more strongly impressed on the minds of the young than this. For the "turning away"—or, as the margin reads, the "ease"—"of the simple shall slay them". The prevalent desire to have an easy time, and get as big pay for as little work as possible, has been the destruction of many a young man. This was not the kind of soil which nourished the hardy virtues of our forefathers, or made the martyrs and heroes of a past age.

3 The happy state of those who heed the voice of Wisdom—v. 33. "Godliness is profitable for this life and for that which is to come." Wisdom warns us of the precipices which lie in our path, the snares that might trip our unwary feet, the enemies that lie in wait to lure us to ruin. If we heed her cry we "shall dwell safely," and, more than that, we shall be "quiet from fear of evil". How many are continually borrowing trouble, tormenting themselves with constant apprehensions of evil, when, if they were truly wise, they would trust God, and "dwell safely under the shadow of his wings."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The English Baptist Missionary Society proposed, one year ago, as will be remembered, to raise for foreign missions the sum of £100,000 ($500,000), as a centenary offering in view of the Carey Centennial, then so appropriately celebrated. The effort to this end has been more than successful. The sum reported was nearly £111,000, with donations and subscriptions still coming in.

—There are six Baptist churches in Brooklyn without pastors.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The resignation of Prof. George N. Boardman of the Chicago Theological Seminary, to take effect at the close of the present term, will be a serious loss. The department of Systematic Theology is at the present time an exceedingly difficult one to fill.

—This year the Home Missionary Society returns to Saratoga, for its annual meeting, May 30. Considerations of transportation on account of the World's Fair, make the change advisable from the place originally appointed.

—The death of John D. Wattles, publisher of the Sunday-School Times, at the early age of 43, removes from remarkably effective service for the church and Sunday-school a man who, though conspicuously successful as a business man, has shown how as great service may be done to God in business as in any other calling. As superintendent of a mission school, as leader of a large Hartford teachers' meeting, as secretary of a State Sunday-school association, and as a publisher he has turned each calling to the glory of God and the good of his fellows.

FREE METHODIST.

—All persons who expect to attend the Illinois Annual Conference Sunday school Convention at Aurora, Kane county, May 17, 18, are requested to send a postal to Rev. Geo. W. Whittington, 151 Bevier place, in that city, stating how long they will stay, so that provision may be made for their entertainment and comfort. If possible, do so one week before the time of meeting.

—Rev. Wilson T. Hogg, one of the most talented writers and preachers in the Free Methodist connection, has been elected a General Superintendent of that church, in place of Rev. B. T. Roberts, deceased. Mr. Hogg is 41 years of age, mostly self-educated and a Christian of thirty-two years' experience.

—Rev. J. G. Terrill has been elected Secretary of the General Mission Board, vice Rev. W. W. Kelley, resigned. An excellent choice.

—The memorial service in tribute to Rev. B. T. Roberts, deceased, in Chicago, April 4, was largely attended and of a most impressive character.

LUTHERAN.

—A peculiar case is that of the trial of Prof. Gotwald, of Wittenberg College, Ohio, on the charge of being too orthodox, in that he holds to all the doctrines of the Augsburg Confession as fundamental, and is more Lutheran than the general synod deems wise in this day and generation. The professor says that never before in the history of Protestantism has a man been tried for too much devotion to his creed. The circumstance certainly is rare.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—A mass-meeting in Music hall, in this city, in behalf of Wesley hospital, during the meeting of the bishops, in the first week of May, is planned.

—Gipsy Smith, the well known English evangelist, conducted revival services in Trinity church, Denver, Col., for one month. These meetings have resulted in 450 conversions and 240 accessions.

—Appropriate semi-centennial ceremonies inaugurated the fiftieth session of North Indiana conference March 29, at which Bishop I. W. Joyce presided. M. Mahlin, who has been effective fifty-two years, and G. W. Bowers, the oldest member in rank, who entered conference fifty-six years ago, delivered interesting addresses, replete with reminiscences of olden times.

—The place of holding the Switzerland conference is changed from Biel to La-Chaux-de-Fonds on June 8. Bishop Vincent will sail on the New York May 20.

—The date of the International Epworth League conference at Cleveland, Ohio, has been changed to June 29-July 1, inclusive. It will not be a delegated body, as reported. Bishop Hendrix will represent the Methodist Episcopal Church South in responding to the address of welcome.

—The anniversary exercises of Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, Ill., will be held May 7 to 11. Tuesday, May 9, will be alumni day. The alumni address will be delivered by Rev. Chas. H. Stocking, D.D., of Duluth, Minn., on "The invincible power of weakness."

—It is said that Rev. Amanda Smith, the colored female preacher, has been appointed to membership on the advisory council of the World's Congress of Religions, and that 'Sister Manda' has accepted, with expressions of great gratitude for the honor conferred.

—In most of the Irish Methodist chapels on Monday, March 20, meetings for prayer and humiliation were held on the subject of Home Rule.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. Briggs has come out in eulogy of the Sunday newspaper, saying that there is much good religious reading in it and that it has come to stay.

—Rev. Thomas Harrison is conducting revival services at Dr. Talmage's tabernacle in Brooklyn, N. Y.

—Dr. L. T. Townsend, professor in Boston university, has been invited to the pastorate of Mount Vernon-place church, Baltimore.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The Archbishop of York offers to give $5,000 a year for three years, the sum to be divided among poor English clergymen.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

—The Free and Open Church association, whose aim is the abolition of the pew system in English Episcopal churches, and the daily opening of these buildings for worship, contends that "no church defense can be satisfactory unless rested upon the common law right of all parishioners to the free and equal use of their parish churches"—a damaging admission for the Established Church as it exists to-day.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The officers of the Salvation army who work among the Zulus get 60 cents per week as salary, besides mealie (corn) meal for breakfast and rice for dinner, with an occasional bucket of molasses, which can be got for 12 cents from the sugar mill.

—A Central Union Holiness Meeting will be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 7-14 inclusive, at the St. John's Methodist Episcopal church, to be conducted by Rev. John Thompson, of the Christian Standard, Philadelphia, Rev. B. Carradine, D.D., of St. Louis, Rev. E. Levy of the Baptist church, Philadelphia.

—The results of fifty-one years of colporteur work of the American Tract Society, as expressed in figures, are 5,895 years of labor; 15,654,659 volumes of saving truth circulated; 471,116 meetings addressed; 1,179,367 families found destitute of religious books; 698,148 without the Bible; 755,889 Roman Catholic families visited; 1,992,205 Protestant families neglecting evangelical preaching, and the amazing number of 14,008,838 family visits made.

—To the United Presbyterian Ministerial Association of Pittsburgh, more than any other body, are we indebted for the efforts made lately to rid Pittsburgh of the social evil. To the ministers and members of that church, more than any other, are we indebted for the success of the Sabbath Convention. The United Presbyterians are a power in Allegheny county, and are showing themselves to be a power for good.—Reformed Presbyterian of Pittsburgh.

—The beginning of the meetings in Milwaukee by Evangelist B. Fay Mills, the first week in April, make the religious statistics of this city intensely interesting. The fairly estimated population of the city is 237,784. Of these eighty per cent are of foreign birth or parentage, and only twenty per cent Americans. The total membership of the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches is 6,250. Only about one-fortieth of the population are members of these churches. Multiplying these communicants by three and we get 18,750 as the population they represent. The Roman Catholic population is given at 140,320. The Lutheran population is also large. It is claimed there are 45,000 young people in the city without any public Christian teaching. Facts sustain the fearful statement that the drink bill of the city is $12,000,000 annually. There are 1,605 licensed places where liquor is retailed. In the city are about 700 clubs and secret societies. The circulation of the different Sunday newspapers of the city aggregates about 50,000 copies every Lord's Day. Confronted by such appalling facts the call to Christians for a consecrated life seems to speak in thunder tones.—Standard.

IT'S QUITE A STEP from the great, gripping, dreadful pills to Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. See what an advance there is:

These little Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, are the smallest and the easiest to take—tiny, sugar-coated granules that every child is ready for.

They act in the mildest, easiest, most natural way. No violence, no reaction afterward, and their help lasts. They permanently cure Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

They're put up in sealed vials. This keeps them always fresh and reliable, unlike the ordinary pills in wooden and pasteboard boxes.

They're the cheapest, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

No matter what you've tried and found wanting, you can be cured with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Penitentiary sentences were awarded three ex-postoffice employes in Judge Grosscup's court. The defendants were Walter and Samuel Gurnea and Charles B. Gneist. Each was convicted of a separate offense and a penalty of thirteen months in the penitentiary for larceny was imposed in each case.

Waiters at restaurants are asking for higher wages during the World's Fair. The union has sent out a demand to all places where their members work calling for wages of $20 a week and 50 cents an hour for overtime, the new rate to go into effect on May 1. They will probably get it.

The news that the Straits of Mackinaw were open, which reached this city last Thursday afternoon, caused great surprise among vesselmen. Only one boat seems to have been prepared to leave. Cargoes to the amount of 9,000,000 bushels of grain were waiting in the river to go East.

The United States Supreme Court has awarded the long-disputed "lake front" to the city, thus completely defeating the claims of the Illinois Central to that valuable tract.

COUNTRY.

Fifteen governors of Southern and Southwestern States last week met at Richmond, Va., to devise measures for the encouragement of immigration to the States over which they preside.

Excursion rates have been granted by the Central Traffic Association for persons attending the following meetings: Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Presbyterian church, Erie, Pa., April 24-27, 1893, from points in Ohio and Pennsylvania only; International Committee Young Woman's Christian Associations, Toledo, Ohio, April 27-30, 1893, from all points in Central Traffic Association territory; International Association of Machinists, fifth annual convention, Indianapolis, Ind., May 1-15, 1893; biennial meeting of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge, I. O. G. T., Des Moines, Iowa, June 9-26, 1893, from all points in Central Traffic Association territory.

Charles Appleton Longfellow, son of the poet Henry W. Longfellow, died on Thursday last at the Cambridge home-stand. Mr. Longfellow arrived home from an extensive trip to the South Sea Islands May 10, 1892. Since then he has been an invalid. Pneumonia was the cause of death.

Gov. Crounse has appointed Henry D. Estabrook to be Regent of the Nebraska State University.

The fifteenth annual session of the Grand Council of the Royal Arcanum met in Milwaukee, Wis., last week. Delegates from thirty-seven councils in the State were in attendance.

The Carterites religious sect at Caloma, Mich., have again caused serious trouble. William Burbank, a recent convert, has been practicing the rites by smashing his household furniture and abusing his wife and children while "casting out devils." The wife and children are not converts, and could not stand the treatment. A party of masked men from Watervliet called on Burbank, gave him a coat of tar and feathers, and rode him on a rail.

Prof. Harris, of Cambridge, has reported to Prof. Nestle, at Tubingen, that a palimpsest containing the complete Syrian text of the four Gospels has been discovered in the Convent of Mount Sinai. Hitherto only fragments of the Syrian text have been known.

At Spokane, Wash., on Thursday, a bloody town-site war was reported at the Canadian boundary. Several persons are said to have been killed.

The Green River Basin Land and Canal Company has bought from the Union Pacific Railway Company 180,000 acres of land, situated in the Green River section of Wyoming.

Two policemen were murdered by highwaymen at Dubuque, Iowa. Revenge for interference is thought to have been the cause. Three men were arrested on suspicion.

Somerby, the ex-"Supreme Justice" of the defunct "Iron Hall" endowment company, against whom stand indictments for embezzlement, and who disappeared from public gaze, it is reported, has been found in the State of New York. He is wanted in Indianapolis.

On Friday a terrible cyclone passed over portions of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee, killing nearly a score of people, wounding many others, and destroying a great deal of property.

A Minnesota judge has decided that a set of false teeth cannot be seized for debt when it is in the owner's mouth.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from April 10 to April 15:

Rev D Morrow, D Neff, S F Proctor, Mrs S L Carpenter, J Gardner, Rev J S Turnbull, J P Hammond, Mrs A Bock, C G F Miller, G W Pritts, A Roach, Mrs D Church, Mrs H Parsons, O W Comstock, Mrs M Neubauer, Mrs M Gaddis, R W Lyman, R J Hill, S L Fay, D Molyneux, J H Rason, J A Scroggs, G Harvey, A Acker, Rev A T Ayers, W Patterson, S Russell, J Pierce.

It would be worth while for the ladies to bear in mind that if they take a gentle course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla in the spring, they will have no trouble with "prickly heat," "hives," "sties," "boils," or "black heads," when summer comes. Prevention is better than cure.

The most popular Wall Roll published, and deservedly so. Every page is an effective sermon. The striking character and particular value of this new Wall Roll is in the remarkable arrangement and selection of the Scripture Texts. A constant monitor in the Christian household. A silent teacher for the school. A comforting messenger for the sick-room, as well as being suitable for the office, the store or the shop.

Printed in beautiful large, clear letters, easily discernible at a distance of 10 to 15 feet. Mounted on rollers, with cord, to hang up in usual style. 31 pages, size 14x22in. 75

The Secret of Success; or

Finger Posts on the Highway of Life, by John T. Dale; introduction by Hon. John V. Farwell. 416 pages, 12mo., full cloth $1.50
A book for the aspiring. Written in a fascinating style and full of incidents and illustrations which hold the interest of the reader spell-bound. "It may be true, as has been said, that 'books are sold, not bought'; but this, at any rate, is a book which, if brought to one's attention, he will wish to own. Such a book in every intelligent family in the land—how much (in showing so clearly, so wisely, so persuasively the secret of success,) it might do toward helping to solve the countless aching, burning questions of the time."—The Advance.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WORTH KNOWING.

A poultice of a pint or two of boiled cranberries, mixed with powdered elm bark or wheat flour, spread upon a cloth and applied to the face is a specific for erysipelas. A poultice of dried hop yeast is excellent also.

A poultice of bread and milk, or linseed meal, wrapped in a linen cloth at night, is good for a sty on the eyelid.

The following ointments are good for eruptions on the face: Lard one ounce, oil of bitter almonds three drops, glycerine one drachm, ammoniated mercury one scruple. Another: Sulphur water one ounce, acetated liquor of ammonia one-half ounce, solution of potassa one-half ounce, white wine vinegar two ounces, distilled water two ounces. For blackheads or fleshworms the following ointment applied every day will prove efficacious: Liquor of potassa one ounce, cologne two ounces, white brandy four ounces.

For sore throat or quinsy a poultice of flaxseed meal, to which has been added lard and laudanum, is good.

Warm mustard poultices will often relieve a "stitch in the side."—Selected.

A THOUGHTFUL LOAF.

"Your bread betrays you; you have been thinking."

The compliment was a delicate one; it proved the discrimination of the guest. Helter-skelter mixing of ingredients and thoughtless baking reveal themselves as glaringly as the faults of an ill-set table. Each has the power to deprive men and women of appetites, and that without gratifying them. Housekeeping cannot do itself, bake and cut itself into tempting slices. A table arranged tastefully, providing food which invites thought—these are results of thoughtfulness. Fried fish may be tempting in appearance, appetizing, delicious; but all depends upon conditions of frying. "The fish was greasy!" That means a thoughtless cook. "The bread has a thick, burned crust; it is spoiled; the sweetness has gone out of it." These conditions invite thought, but not that thought which elevates; they contribute largely toward the development of dyspeptics and fault-finders. Mould a thought or two into each loaf.—Exchange.

THE PINEAPPLE.

Among the most wonderful discoveries of recent times is the effect of various vegetable products possessing digestive properties of an active character. The digestive property of the pawpaw has long been known and utilized. More recently it has been ascertained that the juice of the pineapple contains a very important digestive property, which is capable of digesting albumen and allied substances, not only in acid, but in nutritive alkali media, which gives to it the combined properties of the gastric juice and the pancreatic juice. This excellent fruit may be found a valuable aid to digestion. The coarse pulp is wholly indigestible, and only the juice should be swallowed. It should be taken only at meal-time.—Good Health.

REFRESHMENTS.

To a pint of preserved or fresh strawberry juice add half a cupful each of orange and lemon juice, and half a cupful of grated pineapple. Stir all these ingredients together with a quart of ice water. Put in a pint of sugar and beat the mixture thoroughly. Or, if you are willing to take the extra trouble, boil the sugar and half the water together for ten minutes to make a sirup. Add the fruit juices before the sirup is taken off the fire; then put in the remainder of the water and let the mixture cool. Serve the beverage in little tumblers one-quarter full of cracked ice. It is a good plan to have a small bag, about 18 by 9 inches in size. With a stout ice mallet and this little bag to hold the ice, a bowlful of ice may be cracked fine at a moment's notice. The best materials for these bags are burlaps and the ordinary heavy hempen salt bagging in which grocers receive their salt.

To make a coffee cake, take one coffee-cupful of butter beaten to a cream, a cup of granulated sugar and beat thoroughly together. Grate in the rind of half a lemon, beat the yolks of five eggs very light and stir those in, then a cup of flour. Add the whites of the eggs beaten to a froth, and stir until well mixed, but not longer than is necessary; add a teaspoonful of baking powder toward the last. Then put the batter into shallow tins, jelly-cake pans will do, and bake in a moderately hot oven. This is to be iced with a coffee icing made by preparing frosting in the usual way, then adding a few drops of coffee-essence until the flavor is satisfactory.—Anonymous.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

FARM NOTES.

NUTRITIOUS ENSILAGE.

Oats and peas sown together make a fodder rich in nitrogenous matter or protein that is just the thing to supplement the deficiency of corn ensilage in this element. J. H. Dyer, a large milk producer in Middlesex county, Mass., had two acres of peas and oats last year that was put in the silo the day it was cut. Samples of this silage and of the corn silage were analyzed at the Massachusetts experiment station and showed that 100 of each contained the following number of pounds of the feeding elements:

Lbs. of the different feeding elements.	Corn silage.	Oats & peas silage.
Water.....	80.0	38.0
Fat.....	.6	2.4
Fiber.....	5.1	20.0
Sugar, starch, etc.....	11.6	25.4
Protein.....	1.6	8.5
Ash.....	1.1	5.7
Feeding value per cwt.....	21.5cts	53.5cts

The corn silage has twice as much water as the pea-and-oat silage. With only 20 pounds of dry matter to the hundred weight, the amount of the different nutrients is, of course, much less in the corn than in the pea-and-oat silage, the latter being 62 per cent dry matter. This dry matter contains nearly 14 per cent of protein against only 8 per cent in the dry matter of corn silage, so that with three times as much dry matter in the pea-and-oat silage the table shows that 100 pounds of it contains nearly four times as much protein as does the corn silage. Hence the former makes up what the corn lacks, and the two different kinds of silage together make a pretty complete feed. Mr. Dyer still further balanced up or enriched the pasture by feeding damaged wheat, which contained a still larger proportion of protein. The milk part showed the benefit of this ration. Farmers should try peas and oats, either as dry fodder or as ensilage.—Farm and Home.

POOR BUTTER.

I suggest that some of the reasons are there is a great amount of it made on farms that have no convenience or facilities for making a first-class article, and is made by the wives and daughters of the farmer, who do not furnish them with any information on butter-making. What they make is good enough for him, and he thinks is good enough for anyone else. Many of our cows have to depend on stagnant and impure ponds for the drinking water. Milk being about 80 per cent water it will be more or less affected by the impurities in the water, and the cream in rising brings it to the top, and, when churned, the butter retains a portion of the impurities which injure the keeping quality.

We do not look to the comfort of our cows as we should, says Colman's Rural World. Many of them are driven to a shadeless pasture and left there all day in the heat of summer, with no place to lie down and rest but in the scorching rays of the sun. If there is any damaged or mouldy grain on the farm it is generally fed to the cows, as it is not fit for market, and would not do to feed the teams, and the pigs would not thrive on it, but the cows will eat it, and will give us bad milk, because they cannot give us anything else on such feed, and bad milk makes poor butter.

Milk set in cellars and caves will absorb any impurities that may be in them, unless set in an air-tight can. Cellars and caves generally have a musty smell, and butter made from milk set in them has the same, unless set in closed cans. Milk absorbs the flavor of any kind of vegetables. If, therefore, it is kept in the kitchen we are liable to have many flavors combined.

A great deal of the butter made on farms in winter is made and kept in the kitchen or cellar till it is taken to market. A great many people make butter on a small scale, and do not take enough interest in it to give the proper care. They do not post themselves on butter-making, because everybody believes his wife can and does make as good butter as anybody, and he will swear she can; and if you don't agree with him you had better keep still. Everybody takes good, sweet butter to market. He knows he does, because his groceryman tells him so, and his wife made it, puts it in the same can with all of the good butter, and how could it be otherwise? But he had to take a low price for it, there was so much of the same quality in the market. So they did not make it as good the next week, for it did not pay to work so hard for so little money.

If grocerymen would be more particular in testing the butter they buy and take nothing but good, poor butter would be very scarce as there would be no place for it. But just so long as there is a place where it can be sold at any price at all, it will be made, and lots of it, too.

It requires but little labor or experience to make poor butter. To make the other grade requires lots of both and some knowledge of the proper methods.

It is not probable that those who follow dairying as a business for profit would make much poor butter. If they did they would have to retire from the business soon, as it would be impossible to find a market for their production or a price that would pay expenses. So we come to the conclusion that it is the many that make a little for market and sell for any price they have offered for it that furnish us with a large amount of our poor butter.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, better than any other Spring Medicine, fully prepares the system to resist the ailments and epidemics peculiar to March, April, May. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, quickens the appetite and imparts real and lasting benefit to every tissue and organ of the body. Positive proof of this statement may be had from anyone who has faithfully taken this wonderful medicine.

Read the statement of NATHAN S. CLEAVELAND, whose father was for 60 years Professor in Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.: "I believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal as a blood-purifier and Spring medicine. For Loss of Energy, That Tired Feeling, for Debility, Dizziness, Indigestion, or Dyspepsia, or for Loss of Appetite, this remedy has to me always been an unfailing specific. It gives tone to the stomach, aids digestion, overcomes restlessness, irritability, and nervousness, and exerts a beneficial and healthy action as a brain and nerve restorative. My father believed in the great medicinal value of this remedy, and never failed to recommend it, whenever opportunity offered. Some years ago, he urged my youngest sister to take it for debility, and a low state of the blood, and the result of her following his advice was very gratifying. She improved in health and strength from the first and was soon as well as ever. Whenever any one asks me, 'What do you consider the best blood-purifier?' my answer is, 'Ayer's Sarsaparilla.'"—NATHAN S. CLEAVELAND, 376 Centre st., Jamaica Plain, Mass.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

A vagrant Negro was recently sold in Missouri at auction, under a State law that permits any vagrant to be so disposed of.

Several Illinois towns have just elected women for school officers.

Mrs. John Budner of Beaver Brook, near Blairtown, N. J., gave birth to four children last Thursday morning. Two of the babies are boys and two girls. Mrs. Budner is the wife of a young farmer and is but 16 years of age. The mother and children are doing well.

The new Cunard steamer Campania ran twenty-seven miles an hour on her trial trip.

The local option law of the State of Arkansas confers upon its citizens the privilege of petition against the location of a saloon within a radius of three miles from any church or schoolhouse. If a majority of citizens so petition (and a woman's name here counts as much as a man's) the Judge has no choice in the matter—the saloon must go.

During the nine months ending March 31, there has been a decrease of over $95,000,000 in the export of food products from the United States, showing a falling off in our foreign trade of that amount and leaving the balance of trade largely against us.

A Negro, name not given, who murdered Burnet, the keeper of a country store, near Fort Gaines, Ga., was seized by a mob of Negroes and whites on Friday last, and made to confess his crime, which had robbery for its purpose. He had killed Burnet to prevent his interference while he looted the store. It was at once determined to lynch the murderer. He was bound hand and foot, bound to a stump, surrounded with combustibles, his clothes saturated with kerosene, and a flame applied. The scene was diabolical, the lynchers yelling with delight while the poor wretch screamed with agony. At length, several pistol shots from the mob put an end to his sufferings. Most of the lynching party, it is reported, were Negroes, and women were active in torturing the victim. It was a disgraceful and horrible commentary on Southern lawlessness.

Wind and rain storms of unusual severity last week swept portions of the Missouri Valley, the Southwestern States and Michigan. At Ypsilanti, in the latter State, the damage is estimated as between $100,000 and $150,000. Somewhere near 150 dwellings and barns were destroyed. Reports show that the devastation was quite general throughout the State, leaving death and destruction in its wake, most severely in the southeastern portion. At Royal Oak fire added to the horror and a man and his wife were burned to death. In the Missouri valley, the village of Coudray, Mo., with a population of 300, mostly miners and their families, only three houses were left standing. Seven persons were killed there. At Higginsville, Mo., eight persons lost their lives in the storm. In Indiana much damage was also done by a tornado. In Kansas many persons are reported killed and thirty or forty injured. Several villages, buildings, fruit trees, etc., were demolished.

FOREIGN.

A letter from Tippoo Tib's son confirms the report of the death of Emin Pasha and all his people.

Fifteen thousand coal miners struck in Belgium last week. Mobs and fights with soldiers occurred, and great excitement prevailed. At Hull, England, non-union men were working in the places of strikers under military protection. A general strike among London dockmen was imminent on Thursday.

The King of Italy and his suite visited Queen Victoria at Florence. Much enthusiasm was manifest.

Alexander I., Crown Prince of Servia, on Thursday night, seized the throne, imprisoned the regent, and, although only 17 years of age, proclaimed himself full sovereign in power. The whole affair occurred and was concluded while the king and his court were at a royal banquet. The Servian army is loyal to the King, and received him with joyous acclamations. The boldness and suddenness of this incident may, it is thought, tend to break up the general peace of Europe.

On Friday evening last, at Brussels, Belgium, the police and the great army of workmen on strike, had a severe encounter, during which many persons were seriously injured. The guards were unable to subdue the rioters, and a panic ensued among the tradesmen in the city, and they closed their business places. Even the newspapers suspended publication. Disorder and dread prevailed everywhere. A general strike has been ordered at Charleroi, and at other points confusion and riotous proceedings caused great anxiety.

Two New Manufacturing Plants at Harvey.

The Harvey Land Association have just closed a contract with J. H. Whiting to locate his car-wheel foundry at Harvey. Also with the Detroit Foundry Equipment Company to locate there. Each one of these industries will occupy five acres and will begin building at once to cover the same. These make sixteen manufacturing industries located at Harvey during the last two years, fourteen of which are in active operation.

Over 1,100 buildings have been erected in Harvey in the past 732 days and there has been no time in the history of Harvey that there has been so much building going on as at the present. There are 200 houses under construction and a large number under contract.

PROPHECY. A STUDY.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER,
(College Agent N. C. A.)

In this booklet is found some views of truth not peculiar to the author, though for the first time put into book form; yet views which will doubtless be new to many. Its cheapness puts it into the hands of any earnest Bible student who desires light on certain phases of Christology. A hint only can be given of the contents by the following readings:

1. PROPHECY: A Study of Christ's Comings.
2. From Earth to Heaven.
3. The Resurrection.
4. From Law to Gospel.

A PRISONER OF HOPE.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Between Two Opinions," "Holden With Cords," etc., New England Correspondent of the "Cynosure," and Editor of the "Home Light."

This very interesting and helpful story by this popular writer, who is well-known to the readers of this paper, will begin in the issue of

Messiah's Herald

for April 5th. The heroine of the story is a cripple, who has been advised to try different methods of healing. The story tells how she was at last healed, but while showing how this was accomplished, the author also deals with certain erroneous ideas concerning bodily infirmities. In writing this story Miss Flagg has done her best work, and it is sure to win praises everywhere. It will have a GREAT RUN, and it is evident that the papers containing the earlier chapters will be soon exhausted. The story will be copyrighted, and will appear in no other periodical. Those who desire to secure the complete story should send in their orders at once. The story will be continued several months, so that the better way to secure it entire will be to subscribe for a year. The Herald is the oldest prophetic journal in the world, and is opposed to

Rum, Romanism, and All Evil.

It supplies sixteen large pages of the best reading matter every week. Terms: $1.50 per year, with Conwell's Life of Spurgeon (price $1.50) free, postpaid; six months, 75 cents, without the book. The book alone is worth the price asked for both it and the paper for one year.

One of the most valued of our correspondents, "Crucifer," writes: "I am glad to know that the Association is to avail itself of the opportunity afforded by the Exposition."

Kansas, it is reported, is to be cursed with a new secret society, whose object is to secure the re-submission of the prohibitory law and its ultimate repeal. In the meantime the enforcement of the law will be secretly resisted. Kansas is singularly unfortunate. Ever since its admission as a Territory it has been the stamping-ground of outlaws and unscrupulous politicians—the Farmers' Alliance and the Populists—and now another! Poor Kansas!

An ex-Freemason, who quit the lodge after having been beguiled into taking thirty-one degrees in the order, thinks that a Mason's wife and family would, no doubt, far rather have him stay at home as a dignified gentleman than to see him as a "brother," "dressed like an Italian monkey, when some Free and Accepted Right Worshipful Master Scalawag is honored by a street parade." This is the verdict of common sense evolved from experience and right thinking.

The American Negro, whose rights as a free-man are almost wholly ignored by the Southern whites, is obtaining justice by appealing to Northern courts for protection. The wife of Mr. Mack W. Caldwell and their three children were at Johnson city, Tenn., and desired to come to Chicago. The agents of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad sold her a first-class ticket; but instead of being put into a first-class car, she was compelled to travel over that road in a "Jim Crow" car—one exclusively designed for the transportation of colored people. There were no first-class accommodations; a part of the car was occupied by smokers, and altogether her journey was rendered very uncomfortable. The husband brought suit against the Southern road, in the United States Circuit Court of the Southern district of New York, for damages, and was awarded $800. The Southern road immediately applied for a new trial, which was promptly denied. The lesson should be a salutary one to the offenders.

A Pittsburgh magistrate recently fined the manager of the Press, in that city, $75 and costs for publishing and selling newspapers on Sunday. On an appeal to a higher tribunal, the decision of the magistrate was affirmed, the judge declaring himself to be of the opinion that "defendant comes within the statute prohibiting worldly employments on the Lord's day, and he is adjudged guilty." This decision has since led to the formation, in Pittsburgh, of an "Ultra Law and Order Society," which has placed in the hands of an alderman the names of over 300 people who will be charged with violation of the statute. These persons are employed in mills, on street and steam railroads and in other capacities. The members of this "ultra" society are opponents of the Sunday law; but, however evil the motive of their organization, it may lead to a better observance of the Sabbath in the Smoky City than it has ever before been accustomed to enjoy. Let all Sunday work cease, should be the universal demand.

Last week the trial of two Chinamen, in Chicago, for a serious assault upon a third, brought forth some startling developments. The victim, Wong Aloy, a student at Evanston, had interested himself in the murder trial of the Chinaman who was recently convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. While listening to the testimony in that case, he discovered that the official interpreter was falsifying the evidence and unduly favoring the defendant. He exposed this misdemeanor, and was himself then appointed interpreter. For this his assailants had tried to murder him. In the trial of his assailants, one of them was identified as a well-known Higbinder from New York; and Wong declared that his enemies had procured firearms and doomed him to death. He says, however, he is well protected by American friends and the police, and that he is determined to break up the leader (Sam Moy) and his gang. The case was adjourned until Friday of this week, and the death of some of the prosecuting witnesses is expected before the resumption of the trial.

The Religious Telescope, an organ of the Liberal branch of the United Brethren church, tells the following story: At Harrisburg, Pa., three attempts were made to build up a church, and all resulted in failure. Bishop Erb then said: "I am going to Harrisburg to try once more to establish our church there. I will preach Christ, hold meetings, and whomsoever God will convert I will receive into the church, asking no questions about secret societies." He succeeded, for that denomination now has at Harrisburg "a magnificent brick church, having a seating capacity of five or six hundred, and a fine parsonage with all usual conveniences, and two other churches in the city nearly as good." We believe that any denomination may follow the Bishop's method with perfect success; but the spirituality of such churches is the least ingredient in their composition. Any church in which the spirit and material of the secret lodge prevails, as it does in hosts of them, is not a Scriptural church, but a travesty on Christianity. Was it not such a church to which the Lord Jesus sent that remarkable message found in Revelation 3: 15-18?

The great strike in Belgium was a political movement in behalf of a free ballot and increased rights of citizenship. The people demanded it, and King Leopold favored it. The Liberals, on February 25, caused an unofficial referendum to be taken, which showed that universal suffrage was demanded by a vast majority of the people. Thus in Brussels 48,660 persons voted for universal suffrage, 7,689 for suffrage for men over 25, and 3,935 for limited suffrage. The result in Antwerp and throughout Belgium showed the same great popular demand for extension of the suffrage. But the Chamber of Deputies, in the national parliament, strongly intrenched, as it supposed, stood almost a unit for the middle as against the lower and non-property-holding class, and refused to accept the popular demand; hence the formidable "strike," or revolution, rather, that threatened the safety of the government. The energy of this outbreak, however, brought the Chamber to its senses, and on Tuesday, by a vote of 119 to 12, it adopted universal suffrage, with a proviso for plural voting by owners of property. The people were satisfied with this decision, and an internecine conflict was happily averted. It was a great victory for humanity.

In last week's issue of the Cynosure we gave place to this emphatic declaration, quoting from the Catholic Review: "What is, perhaps, less generally known, and still less frequently believed, even by many Masons, is the direct communication of Satan with Masonry in general, and his actual presence in some of the Masonic lodges." This belief is, however, well-supported in the context. Referring to the above extract, Rev. William Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn., writes as follows: "I am especially pleased with the view taken... on the immediate relationship of Satan to Masonry. I cannot see Masonry in any other light than that Satan has an immediate personal supervision of every true Mason, and a claim upon him which is designed to hold him in his possession forever—that is, for all time and eternity. Hence I am impressed that none but one truly sent and possessed by the Holy Ghost can cope at all with Masonry. The Scriptures everywhere bear testimony to this view of the case; and I meet Masons every day that corroborate it. It is fearful to contemplate them and their certain doom, unless they break the almost fatal spell. Indeed, it seems to me that some of them realize their condition and feel that they are eternally done for and without hope. The unpardonable sin is, I think, contemplated and provided for in Masonry by Satan himself. Oh, for grace to meet the issues before us!"

BAAL-WORSHIP IS A REALITY AND NOT AN EMPTY TERM.

As the term is a meaningless expression to most readers and listeners, they cannot sufficiently appreciate the enormities of Baal-worship from mere denunciation. As a suggestion, and for the benefit of both preacher and congregation, the following is therefore copied from the seventh chapter of the "Story of the Phœnician." What is needed is a vivid and persistent presentation of details. The average person is without information or the means of its acquisition, and on such names and terms have no terror.

Rawlinson, the leading English historian of the East, says that Eth-baal, King of Tyre and high-priest of Astarte, or Ashtoreth, to proselyte the Jews to paganism, married his daughter Jezebel, whom he had thoroughly imbued with his spirit, to Ahab, King of Israel, the son of Omri, the founder of Samaria. Omri and Ahab were, both of them, bold and warlike monarchs, of a calibre much superior to any of the other princes who had hitherto occupied the throne of the northern kingdom. Eth-baal may have hoped to gain political advantages from the alliance, but its primary motives appears to have been religious propagandism. The Phœnician princess took with her from Tyre the paraphernalia of her religious worship, together with a sacerdotal entourage, which gave her at once a court of her own creatures, a band of unscrupulous adherents, and a means of displaying the ceremonial of the new religion on a most magnificent scale. Four hundred and fifty ministering priests of Baal were attached to the worship of that god in the Israelite capital, while four hundred others devoted to Ashtoreth hung about the royal palace at Jezreel and feasted daily at the table which Jezebel provided for their entertainment. Ahab was persuaded to build a great sanctuary for Baal on the hill of Samaria. "It was of a size sufficient to contain all the worshippers of Baal that the northern kingdom could furnish. . . . In the interior was a kind of fastness or adytum, in which was seated or raised on pillars the figures, carved on wood, of the Phœnician deities, as they were seen in vision, centuries later, by Jezebel's fellow-countryman, Hannibal, in the sanctuary of Gades. In the center was Baal, the sun-god; around him was the inferior divinities. In front of the temple stood, on a stone pillar, the figure of Baal alone."—Stanley, "Lectures on the Jewish Church." Vol. II., p. 256.

A sanctuary was also assigned to Ashtoreth at Jezreel. Ashtoreth was worshiped under the form of an emblem, rather than of a statue. The emblem was called an Asherah, and is thought to have resembled the "Sacred Tree" of the Assyrians. It was generally set up in a temple (2 Kings 21: 7; 23: 6), but may sometimes have been worshiped in the open air under the shade of trees. Hence the Greek translators of the Hebrew Scriptures, confounding it with its surroundings rendered the term "alsos," grove, which the Vulgate replaced by lucus, whence the grove of the Authorized Version. Jezebel's four hundred priests or "prophets" ministered to this idol in the vicinity of Jezreel, and presented to the Israelites a form of religion which was so attractive to them that very soon the whole people fell away from the worship of Jehovah and proclaimed themselves votaries of the two new deities, Baal and Ashtoreth.

To the corrupting influence thus introduced, the gradual declension, and ultimately the fall and destruction of the Israelite kingdom, is distinctly ascribed. (2 Kings 17: 16-18.) Nor did the evil stop there. The daughter of Eth-baal passed on the malign contagion of her evil genius to her own daughter, Athaliah, a daughter worthy of such a mother, who became the queen of Ahaziah, monarch of the rival kingdom of Judah, and took advantage of her position to bring Judah no less than Israel within the sphere of the fatal fascination. The terrible virus by her introduced into the Jewish state clung to it to the end, and hastened that end. Vain were the reforms of Hezekiah and Josiah. The Phœnician rites brought in by Athaliah took a firm hold on the Jewish people, and are declared by Ezekiel (chapter 8: 6-18) to have been among the chief causes of the captivity.

For the lessons of history to have their proper effect, it is necessary sometimes to penetrate into dark recesses, and to expose to the eye that fearful corruption which in various places has from time to time underlain the fair surface of society like the ghastly horrors that are concealed within a whited sepulchre. When we hear of Baal-worship and Astarte-worship we are apt to suppose them very harmless and innocent things, and to wonder at the fierce denunciations which the prophets of Jehovah hurl against their votaries. Do not all men worship one god? Are not "Jehovah, Jove, and Lord," Baal, Ammon, Zeus, Ormuzd, Brahma, merely his different names in men's different languages? Alas, when a searching investigation is made into religions, it is found that they differ essentially from the root upwards—that some of them have scarcely any features in common—that, instead of all men worshipping one god, different nations worship deities as different as it is possible for thought to conceive or words to depict. What is there in common between the fearful goddess of the Thugs—we say not the Christ—but even the "Great Spirit" of the red Indians, or the Brahma of the Hindoos? How can there be said to be any resemblance between the fetish of the African and the "good and holy Ormuzd" of the Parsee? And so between Jehovah and Baal there was the widest, most wonderful difference. Dean Stanley, certainly no bigot, observes that "the change from the symbolical worship of the one true God, with the innocent rites of sacrifice and prayer to the cruel and licentious worship of the Phœnician divinities, was a prodigious step downwards, and left traces which no subsequent reformations were able to obliterate."—Vol. II., p. 245.

Those who desire further information can obtain it from "Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry," "Freemasonry Illustrated," "Key to Masonry" in the second edition of "My Experiences with Secret Societies," and the Bible. Ronayne, the author of an exposition, "Masonic Sun-worship" and other works, says that he was discouraged from active opposition to Masonry by the discovery that contrary to his expectations ministers were very largely in it, and there was insufficient moral sentiment left in the nations to sustain the reform. There are 16,000 Masons in France, 60,000 in Germany, 300,000 in England and 600,000 in this country, besides 400,000 unaffiliated from the dotage of old age, or otherwise. This indicates the comparative magnitude of the evil here. MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

A RADICAL COVENANTER'S POSITION.

BY J. M. SLOANE.

We are often urged to incorporate with this government, swear allegiance to its constitution, vote for officers in its elections, and thus help to make things better. An old Vermont Covenanter, when urged to do so replied: "When you undertake to lift a tub, you do not get into it, do you? Do you patronize a saloon as a means of reforming it? Do you reform a Masonic lodge by joining it?" How did such reformers as Luther, Zwingli, Calvin and Knox attempt to reform the Church of Rome? Was it not by dissent and by standing outside of that corrupt organization?

The Christian people of the country have been voting a hundred years to reform the administration of this government, and, instead of improving, it has grown more and more corrupt, and its acts of oppression have not been surpassed by any nation.

As a remedy, the ballot has failed. The reason of this failure may be illustrated in this way: Why is it that all the long, broad, clear rivers that flow into the Mississippi produce no effect in purifying its waters, but only to swell its turbid tide of liquid mud, while it makes its way with resistless power to the Gulf? The reason is that the constitution of its banks and bottom are mud and sand, and its current, like the troubled sea, is continually casting up mire and dirt. It is so with the current of American politics. Their constitution rests only upon the mire and shifting sand of worldly policy and human expediency. There is lacking the granite foundation of the divine law. Our government, like the house built upon the sand, will fall in the storm of God's wrath, and great will be the fall of it. Our politics are tending to the gulf of destruction. If we would be safe let us stand from under by a clearly expressed and faithfully adhered-to dissent.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

BY P. B. WILLIAMS.

Whatever variance there may be about the outward marks, by way of church ordinances and church polity, there is but one evident design of the Holy One in giving this institution to mankind. It is to establish and spread holiness. The church, then, is God's system of organized holiness.

Its work is that of reform and philanthropy in every possible way. Do we want everything good advanced? Look to the church of Christ. Do we wish every vice suppressed? Look to the church of Christ. To such a glorious institution every Christian belongs. What better or other relation could we ask? And surely there is work and blessing enough in the church for all.

The church of Christ has in it all the elements of reform and benevolence that this world needs.

If it has said that she does not fulfill her mission fully and faithfully in taking care of the sick, the orphan and the poor, and in prosecuting the work of temperance reform, I would urge every Christian to enlarge his or her devotion and consecration for the church's improvement and perfectness.

Do this instead of letting down your standard and dividing your moral strength by uniting with a secret institution that makes no pretensions to the promotion of Gospel holiness. You have but one life to live; you will soon be in eternity, and you cannot afford to form such alliances as a basis of moral action.

What have I written, thus far, that should offend any one? Yet it does offend every lodge member. While the church, the government, the school systems, political parties and everything else are open to investigation and criticism, secret societies deny us the right to investigate or criticize them. I say that this alone is enough to condemn them in the sight of God, and the eyes of an intelligent Christian community.

AMERICAN PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

ITS PRINCIPLES, GROWTH AND SECRET WORK.

Oce. B. Jackman is president of the State Council of Iowa of the "American Protective Association." This organization has a membership of 18,000 to 20,000 in Iowa, and about 800,000 in the United States, although it is only about five years old. Through the courtesy of President Jackman I was able to secure the following concerning the aims and purposes of the A. P. A., which may be of interest to many:

1. Nationality is not a bar to membership. We ask no man where he was born.
2. We interfere with no man's partisan politics.
3. We attack no man's religion, so long as he does not attempt to make his religion an element of political power.
4. We unite to protect our country and its free institutions against the secret, intolerant, and aggressive efforts that are persistently being set forth by a certain religio-political organization, to control the government of the United States and destroy our blood-bought civil and religious liberty.
5. We are in favor of preserving constitutional liberty, and maintaining the government of the United States.
6. We regard all religio-political organizations as the enemies of civil and religious liberty.
7. It is in our opinion unwise and unsafe to appoint or elect, to civil, political or military office in this country, men who owe supreme allegiance to any foreign king, potentate, or ecclesiastical power, and who are sworn to obey such power.
8. We are in favor of maintaining the principle of one general unsectarian free school organization, and will oppose all attempts to supplant it by any sectarian institution.
9. We are opposed to all attempts, local or national, to use public funds for any sectarian purpose.
10. We are in favor of laws taxing all church property.
11. We are in favor of changing our immigration laws in such a manner that they will protect our citizen laborers from the evil influences of cheap pauper and criminal labor, which, through the instrumentality of European propagandist societies, and in this country by the aid of strikes, and the subtle influence of priests, are rapidly supplanting our free and educated American citizens in every line of industry.
12. We believe there should be an educational qualification to the elective franchise that will require every "American citizen" to be Americanized.
13. We are in favor of putting into office honest and true patriots, who are best qualified to fill the position, regardless of political parties.
14. We are willing to be governed by these principles in our future political action.
15. Our mission is to awaken the people of free America from their lethargy, indifference and over-confidence. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," yet the Protestants of the republic have ceased to be vigilant, and, in conscious strength, are either intently chasing the mighty dollar, or quietly dozing, while we swiftly drift toward a more tremendous and terrible crisis than this country has yet known.

The growth of this new organization is very rapid, and I was told its influence is already being felt in both local and general elections.—F. M. Rains, in the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, February 25, 1893.

IN ST. LOUIS.

During the last Presidential campaign the A.

P. A. at St. Louis took a prominent part in the political struggle, and it was said that the disposition on the part of the members to vote the Republican ticket caused dissensions in the lodge.

The order has flourished in St. Louis for about five years, and a large number of its councils and an aggregate membership of several thousands were known to exist during the Harrison-Cleveland contest of last year.

A SCENE.

In one of the councils (says our informant) the name of a certain well-known Hebrew was proposed for membership. Instantly a member sprang up, exclaiming:

"I protest! I will refuse to sit in a council with a Jew."

"I am a Jew," said the secretary, quietly. The scene which followed caused a number of members to withdraw from that council. A person knowing the facts says there were about forty withdrawals.

THE SECRET WORK.

Some rather startling information was obtained concerning the secret work of the order. As a sample: In taking the final oath that admits a man to full-fledged membership, the presiding officer pulls out a crucifix, which he "calls the emblem of the Roman Catholic Church." These crucifixes are supplied to every subordinate lodge, and have the figure of Christ in bronze upon them in the same shape as on those used in the Church of Rome. The candidate is ordered to put his left hand on the crucifix and the right hand on an open Bible. The presiding officer then reads and the candidate repeats an oath which binds the candidate to renounce the crucifix "the emblem of the pope," and to uphold the open Bible. After that, the candidate is declared a member of the order. It is explained to him then, that to facilitate speaking among members in public places, certain terms are used to denote certain things. The figure "13" means a member of the A. P. A.; "11" means a Roman Catholic, and "15" means a Protestant in general. If a member is in doubt as to whether he is speaking to an "A. P. A." man, he is to ask:

"Who sticketh closer than a brother?"

If the subject of his interrogative is a "true bird" he will at once reply:

"A friend."

All members of the order are called friends.

Religion appears to be the sole bar to membership. Uncompromising war is declared on all things that are Roman Catholic.

Many of the order's peculiarities are exposed in the secret manual which found its way to the St. Louis Republic office. This manual, printed on plain cardboard, gives the original object of the A. P. A.

The "oath" and "charges" are unintelligible on first perusal. They were arranged so as to give no intimation of their purport without the key. They are printed as follows:

OATH.

Deputy: You will repeat after me the following obligation, giving your name in full:

(Persons offering will raise the right hand.)

I, ———, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, do solemnly promise, declare and swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States and the State where I reside. I will keep inviolate the secrets of this organization; I will obey its constitution and laws; I will use my best endeavors to (No. 1); I will not knowingly vote for, recommend for, nor appoint, nor assist in electing or appointing a (No. 2), nor any person sympathizing with (No. 3) to any political position whatever; and in all my public and political action will be governed by the principles of this order. I will oppose all (No. 4) and will ever maintain the great principles of (No. 5); will never reveal any of the signs, grips, words, passwords or other mysteries of this order, or the names of any of its members or its numerical strength to the uninitiated; I will always give a brother of this order preference in all matters of business and also in my act of elective franchise, all things being equal. I will make prompt reports to the chief recording secretary of every initiation made by me. I will advocate the principles of this order; I will use my best endeavors to initiate all true men, and in this way help spread the order. All this I voluntarily promise, declare and swear (or affirm) without hesitation or mental reservation, or any self-evasion of mind in me whatever, so help me God.

CHARGE.

Citizen Brother: The steady encroachment of No. 9 upon those institutions of our country which we have so fondly cherished and which we believe underlie the whole fabric of free government, have impelled us into fellowship in this order, which we trust divine Providence will use as one of the instruments in His hands to effect the overthrow of that terrible power which has so long cursed the world.

In receiving you into our midst, it becomes my duty to charge you never to forget the obligations you have here voluntarily assumed. Never allow yourself to be betrayed into any word or act, by which the fact of the membership of any brother in this order may be divulged to the uninitiated. For your own security let your influence be felt in the advancement of (No. 10) rather than (No. 11) to positions of political power, trust or emolument.

In our organization mere party issues must never be introduced, except so far as they involve the principles of our order. You are at liberty to select for yourself, as a free American citizen should, your political relations, governed only by your own convictions of loyalty and truth. Your political affiliations may, at times, press you severely, but let your obligations ever prevent you from yielding to party clamor. As members of the order, seek to control party rather than to allow party to trail your honor in the dust.

Deputy: Brother, for such I am pleased to welcome you into our fraternity, known among its members as (No. 12).

We have certain signs and words and a grip by which to recognize members of the order. These are to be used with caution, and are as follows:

The challenge sign is made thus ———.

To this sign a member of the order will respond thus ———.

In introducing a conversation with a stranger who has given the correct response to the challenge, we say:

Q: ———? A: ———.

The answer being correct and the parties being mutually satisfied with the claim of brotherhood, the grip is exchanged, which you will now receive.

THE KEY.

The key is contained on a leaf of the manual, and with it the meaning of the mysterious numerals is made plain. It is as follows:

No. 1—Promote civil and religious liberty.

No. 2—Roman Catholics.

No. 3—Roman Catholicism.

No. 4—Attempts to use the public funds for any sectarian purpose whatever.

No. 5—One general unsectarian free school.

No. 6—"Oath of the Shield."

No. 7—The principles of religious liberty.

No. 8—Political power of the Roman Catholic Church.

No. 9—The Roman Catholic Church.

No. 10—Protestants.

No. 11—Romanists.

No. 12—The N. O. D.

Over the key to the numerals is printed, "Cut these numbers off." With the numbers cut off the meaning of the obligation is destroyed, and candidates for admission are at a loss to know what they are to swear to.

By comparing the obligation and the charges with the key their meaning can be ascertained.

TEST QUESTIONS.

A leaf in the manual marked "confidential" is to be shown the common people. It starts out by saying: "In view of the intolerant, persistent, aggressive efforts of Romanists, their evident determination to control the government of the United States and to destroy our civil and religious liberty, I desire to submit to you the following questions:"

"1. Are you a Protestant from principle and from choice?"

"2. Are you in favor of preserving constitutional liberty and maintaining the government of the United States?"

"3. Do you regard Romanism as the enemy of civil and religious liberty?"

"4. Is it not in your opinion unwise and unsafe to appoint to civil, political or military office in this country men who owe allegiance to the Pope of Rome, and who have sworn to obey him?"

"5. Are you in favor of maintaining the principles of one general unsectarian free school organization?"

"6. Are you opposed to all attempts to use the public funds for any sectarian purpose whatever?"

"7. Are you willing to be governed by these principles in your future political actions?"

"8. Are you willing to unite with others and hold these principles, and henceforth devote yourself to the protection and perpetuation of civil and religious liberty and this great American Union?"

When a man is once initiated into the order he becomes a deputy and possesses full power to initiate candidates by administering the oath contained in the manual. An address to the "deputies," contained in the manual, urges them, for the good of the order, to spread its principles from Maine to California and from the lakes to the Gulf.

THE BLACK LIST.

The order in each State has what it calls its black list. Each subordinate lodge turns in the names of rejected applicants, with the cause of rejection. Or if any member suspects a man of giving away secrets or plotting against the order, he can have his name put on the black list. This list is sent out to each subordinate council by the State secretary. For instance, if John Smith applies to Council No. 1 for admission and an enemy votes against him, his name is given out to every lodge in the city or State. If it is found out that candidate James Brown's wife is a Roman Catholic he is rejected and the words "wife is an 11" are given as the reason for his rejection. Other causes for rejection are given thus: "He is no good," "general principles," "not the proper kind," "wife under 11 influences," "by ballot," and so on.—St. Louis Republic, Sept. 23, 1892.

THREE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCES.

The present year will be a notable one in the development of the "Northfield idea." The Christian world has become familiar with the two great annual summer gatherings in the home town of Mr. D. L. Moody—the General Conference of Christian Workers and the World's Student Conference. Since the return of Mr. Moody from his last European evangelistic campaign arrangements have been made to add to these conventions a third one—an International Conference of Young Women. This conference is to be to the College young women what the World's Student Conference has been and is to the College young men of this and other lands. A growing desire for such a conference has found expression in urgent requests from the young women of some of the leading educational institutions. Evidently the time is ripe for the inauguration of the movement.

The Young Women's Conference will be held first, in the order of time, June 20-28, the World's Student Conference next, July 1-9, and that of the Christian Workers last, Aug. 1-13. Mr. D. L. Moody will preside on each occasion. The meetings will be held this year under unusually favorable conditions, with even better facilities and more ample accommodations than before. There will probably be a larger representation of prominent Christian workers from other lands than at any previous season. There is no reason why the confident expectation of an unusual blessing, a mighty spiritual impulse, may not be realized in the Northfield Conferences of this Columbian year, so that it shall indeed prove to be "the acceptable year of the Lord."

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

A most remarkable appeal "to the conveners of Christian conferences in the United Kingdom" has recently appeared in England. Among its signers are a number of the leading scholars and most earnest missionary spirits of the various religious denominations, such as A. A. Bonar, A. R. Fausset, H. Grattan Guinness, F. B. Meyer, Mark Guy Pearse, and others of local reputation. After recapitulating the signs of the times, the movements of the Jews looking to a speedy fulfillment of the prophecies in Ezek. 37, and the great deterioration everywhere of morals and vital religion and the ascendancy of unbelief, superstition and formalism, the aggressions of Rome, and the increase of Christ's foes in Protestant churches and colleges, betokening religious dearth and darkness which can only be overcome by the second coming of Christ to establish his personal reign on the earth, they say:

"We appeal to you, therefore, beloved friends, to take into your prayerful consideration the value of a united testimony to the imminence of the stupendous events which attend and follow our Lord's appearing; and, if it seem good to you, to make the Second Coming of Christ a central subject at your conference in the year 1893; if so be that God, by his blessed Spirit, may honor such testimony to the coming glory of his dear Son, for the arousing of a vast number of believers out of worldliness and sloth, and that a multitude of the unsaved who have hearts falling them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, amid the increasing insecurity of property and the development of anarchy, yet may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21: 26, 36), by "laying hold of the hope set before them" (Heb. 6: 18), whilst the day of salvation still shines upon them. We are, dear brethren, your servants for Christ's sake."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Modern Criticism.—The tobacco question vs. sweets.—Injustice to Prohibitionists.—Legislative matters.—A bit of snobbery.—A new lecturer in the field.

Could there be anything finer than a criticism of Edgar A. Poe's on Mrs. Browning's sonnet to George Sand: "Her reproach is so delicate it seems like a prayer." This rare perception, and subtle, poetic insight, is not nearly so common among the literary critics of to-day as it was when the Dial was living its brief life, and Grassham's was a name as familiar as Scraper's and the Atlantic Monthly is now. But it is not the fault of our modern critic that he cannot make bricks without straw. When any combination of circumstances cheapens and lowers literature, he has fewer opportunities for evolving these high and rare qualities. And there is such a combination to-day:—a public who read nothing but the newspapers, and writers who must cater to the tastes of such a public, or else eat their bread without butter. Charles Dudley Warner told his audience, when he lectured on "Journalism" at the historic "Old South," the other evening, that with all our culture, our Browning and Shakespeare clubs, and literary fads of one kind and another, people do not do as much solid reading as they did twenty years ago; and as for the Sunday paper, with its forty pages of hodge-podge, warranted to induce mental dyspepsia in anybody who wades through it, "they had a great deal better read the dictionary, for there they would at least get good words which they could put together for themselves." By the way, many people might profitably employ the half or quarter-hours, or even the five minutes that they now let run to waste, over a Webster's Unabridged. Before they know it they will find themselves more fascinated over its pages than they ever were over the last new novel. Try it some day, and see what a strange, new interest will attach to many a common word after you have stood at its Anglo-Saxon or Teutonic source, and seen how Shakespeare used it, or Tennyson, or Carlyle, and thought how it has expressed the joy or sorrow, the love or hate of many a bygone generation, and will live on the lips of those yet unborn. Words are the most wonderful things with which we have to do. They are born of Time, but they lay hold on Eternity. Our words may perish like straw and stubble in the judgment fires through which our words shall pass unscathed, the witnesses which condemn or justify us at the last day.

We have grown used to the inoculation idea since poor Jenner's discovery of vaccination for small-pox was received with so much incredulity and persecution, at least, as applied to the animal creation; but inoculating plants is something yet more "new under the sun." There is a theory now being discussed among tobacco-raisers, that a poor quality of the weed may be improved by inoculating it with the bacteria peculiar to the superior kinds of tobacco. I wonder what the difference is between the bacteria in tobacco, and the same in a rose or a morning glory? All the difference, one would think, judging from analogy, between a tarantula and a humming-bird. Roscoe Conkling, it is said, broke off the habit of tobacco-chewing by keeping a package of crystallized candy in his pocket and taking a lump whenever the desire arose to "have a chaw," as our Kentucky brethren express it. This is certainly a safe and pleasant remedy, and one to be commended to every devotee of the filthy practice who desires to reform. Even if it fails to work a cure, it can at least do no harm. The little boy, only eight years old, who recently died in the Charlestown district, it was alleged, from a slight chastisement administered by his teacher, but actually from excessive indulgence in cigarette smoking, is a sad object-lesson for all parents and instructors of youth. If a sweet tooth in children is any preventive against the vile habit, let it be cultivated by all means, provided stringent laws are made and enforced to give us pure candies free from chalk or plaster-of-paris, strychnine or alcohol. But how did a child of such tender years manage to get hold of so many cigarettes? The law against selling them to minors can easily be evaded, and the more need that every case of cigarette smoking, real or suspected, among children be rigidly investigated. There may have been cases of prosecution under the law passed by Massachusetts two or three years ago, which forbids its sale to lads under sixteen, but I have yet to hear of them.

Prohibitionists are calling the attention of the Massachusetts Legislature to a very manifest injustice in the laws which regulate political action. The voters of the State are divided into two classes; those who cast three per centum or more of the entire vote at the last election preceding, and those who cast less than three per centum. Thus the minority are denied the privileges accorded to the majority, besides the imposition of disabilities "grievous to be borne." The major class can hold a caucus at any time, with only two or three voters present, while the minor class "are prohibited from holding a caucus for the nomination of candidates for office, or the selection of delegates to a nominating convention, unless twenty-five legally qualified voters are present and acting therein." Of course this unjust and arbitrary distinction bears hardest on the very class on which it is imposed. It is easy enough for either of the two great parties to secure twenty-five voters for a caucus, but it is quite otherwise with a reform party which is small and weak. This is a distinction in favor of the many against the few which is not only very unjust but un-republican, and not at all consistent with that doctrine of equal rights on which our laws are supposed to be based. I should like to add, however, that the deprivation of one sex of all political rights and privileges is only the same invidious class-distinction carried farther.

The bill to prevent office-holders in State, county, or city, from voting, or otherwise taking part, in political caucuses or conventions, was voted down with a vim that one only wishes might have been displayed in some better and more important cause. The bill to tax all church-building property valued at over $50,000 was referred to the next General Court, a convenient, but (it seems to me) rather cowardly way of shirking the question. Rome, as is well known, keeps adding to the already enormous value of her church property, and to tax that property is one way of checking her aggressions. One is not surprised that Irish Romanists, like Moriarity of Worcester, bitterly opposed the bill. The House has also recently passed a measure providing headquarters for the Grand Army at the Capitol; a doubly foolish thing to do, as, to the credit of that body, it is a favor they have never asked for. It creates a mischievous precedent, for if one secret order is granted such a privilege, why not another? The State House is, or should be, for the transaction of State business, and not for any private organization secret or open.

The Home Maker, in its April number, classes Baby Ruth, Baby McKee, and other children in our land who have had greatness, or at least celebrity, thrust upon them in their cradles, under the title of "The little Kings and Queens of America." Isn't this snobbery, or something worse? There is a trend in this direction not pleasant to contemplate by sensible people who do not believe in this quasi kind of royalty. The chasm between class and class has already grown sufficiently appalling, and this kind of thing can only help to widen it.

It has long been the desire of many others beside the writer to see the subject of the close relation between secret societies and the drink problem handled in public by a thoroughly posted W. C. T. U. woman. Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, the noble wife of our beloved New England agent, has now come to the front, prepared to deliver such a lecture wherever desired. She has recently addressed the Wellesley W. C. T. U. on the above topic, and was listened to with eager interest as she gave fact after fact, well-substantiated by good authority or personal experience. She cannot fail to win the attention even of that hardest class to reach, the woman who "is sure that Masonry can't be a bad thing because my husband belongs to it." Anti-secret friends who arrange for a lecture from her in their locality will find that she knows her subject by heart, and can present it fearlessly, sweetly, eloquently. Let the light spread.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—Rev. M. A. Gault is now taking a few weeks' needed rest at his home in Blanchard, Iowa. In June he expects to change his residence to Bloomington, Ind., where he will take charge of a Covenantant congregation, and hopes to be able to give some time to the work of reform.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1893.

The return of spring brings a revival of outdoor religious and temperance missionary work, which has for some years been steadily on the increase in Washington. It does not severely tax the memory of adult Washingtonians to remember the time when our churches, with rare exceptions, ignored, if they did not actually oppose, street and alley missionary work. To-day that work is endorsed by all the churches; and the church which has not its own band or bands of alley and street missionaries is the exception rather than the rule. In addition to the denominational bands, also, there are several large non-denominational organizations which are supported by non-churchmen as well as churchmen, actively engaged in the work of making converts to Christianity and temperance, thus carrying peace, and, if not happiness, at least contentment, into many humble homes where both were unknown before the advent of the street and alley missionaries.

No change, either in individual or public sentiment, ever takes place without a clear and well-defined cause. What was the cause of this change of sentiment regarding outdoor missionaries? The question can be answered in one word—results. A friend, fond of illustrating his meaning with little stories, says of it: "The street missionaries were like a farmer who went into an agricultural country, secured an abandoned farm, and began to plant seed in a manner different from that of the old farmers in that section. Some of the old farmers were disposed to ridicule the new-comer's methods of planting seed, others to sympathize with the mistaken zeal which he devoted to work which they felt certain was wasted on poor soil and would never amount to anything, and still others to ignore him and his methods as being unworthy of notice. The new farmer had faith in his methods and worked on, trusting to the future for his reward. By and by harvest-time came around, and the new-comer had a crop, not so large as that of some of his wealthy neighbors, but still a crop. That opened the eyes of some of his neighbors to the fact that it was not always safe to condemn a method because it happened to be new to them, but there were still doubters who did not believe that the old abandoned farm could be made to keep on producing crops; but they became fewer and fewer as each annual crop from the old farm became slightly larger than that of the year before, and that, too, in the face of droughts and bad seasons which had caused the crops of more than one of his wealthy neighbors to be partial, if not complete, failures; and now they can scarcely be found at all. The old farmers have not changed their methods, which experience has proven to be well-adapted to the soil they cultivate, but they have acknowledged that the new man's methods are also well-adapted to the soil he cultivates, and are all disposed to lend him a helping hand." Is it not a good illustration?

St. Paul's English Lutheran church celebrated the semi-centennial of its organization this week. This is the mother-church of English Lutheranism in Washington, although its two vigorous children have, at least in the size of their congregations, outgrown their parent. During its fifty years of existence St. Paul's has had five pastors.

The Presbyterians of the city are hard at work making preparation for the reception of the One-Hundred-and-Fifth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, which is to meet here in May. Six hundred commissioners, representing 217 presbyteries, are expected to attend; and as many of them will be accompanied by their families, it will be no easy task to hospitably entertain them; but it will be accomplished. The various committees in charge have been unusually successful in getting cash contributions; and from the manner in which the laymen have come forward with offers to entertain the visiting brethren at their houses, it is plain that the assembly is to be made a memorable one, in more than one respect.

The two subjects uppermost in official circles this week relate to Hawaii and the financial condition of the country. Nothing official has been given out on either subject, but the impression is general that Hawaii will not be annexed, and that some sort of an arrangement will be made whereby the United States, in exchange for a naval station on the islands, and probably certain trade privileges, will guarantee to protect the Hawaiian government from foreign interference. Further than to say that he apprehends no danger, Secretary Carlisle declines, as he has done since he assumed office, to publicly discuss the financial situation. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

HARTFORD, Conn., April 17, 1893.

At Danielsville, on Friday last, I learned something of the notorious Dr. Graves, who is accused of the murder of Mrs. Barnaby. The papers report him a member of Danielsonville Lodge and of Willimantic R. A. Chapter. His home record is exceedingly unsavory. His affections seem to have been bestowed regardless of wealth or poverty, nationality, color or social condition, using his profession as a means of access to his victims. The doctor's reputation at home seems to be expressed in Proverbs 10:7—"The name of the wicked shall rot."

At Putnam I found the life-long friend of our work, Hon. Geo. Buck, and his good wife, much improved in health, and no less determined in opposing the hidden things of dishonesty. Bro. Geo. Perry, now in his eighty-third year, accompanied me on foot to the postoffice, a mile or more distant, and showed his zeal by handing tracts to those whom he met in the way.

I called upon a gentleman with whom I had previously conversed, and who told me at the time that he intended to unite with the Masons. To my inquiry if he had thoroughly investigated the subject, he replied: "I know nothing of the inside work of the lodge, and I suppose it can be obtained only by joining." When I assured him of his mistake, he expressed a desire for information, which I was quite willing to give; and I felt well repaid when, on my second call, he assured me he had abandoned his purpose to become a Mason.

Before leaving, I obtained at the depot a copy of the Putnam Patriot, from which I extract a few items of interest. As the result of services held in some of the churches, a few conversions and a general refreshing are reported. The Baptists, assisted by Dr. Coburn, enter upon a protracted effort this week, and the Advent Brethren give notice of special services in the near future. The W. C. T. U.s are battling nobly against the rum demon, and though the old serpent is not dead, he feels the crushing weight of the woman's heel on his bruised head. These are tokens for good which the Master will have in "everlasting remembrance." I would that there were no events of sadder hue to chronicle, but this same Patriot notes events of which it is not a pleasure, but a duty, to speak. While the few have been quietly gathered in the churches, many "have forsaken the right way and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness." (2 Peter 2:15.) An enemy, "transformed into an angel of light," has found a hiding-place in the bosom of Christ's bride. The inspired panorama of Revelation 12 is seen in miniature, where the dragon seeks the destruction of the "man-child" in the inky flood of false worship. Moabitish altars, reared in high places, are provoking the good people of Putnam to repeat the sins of ancient Israel, and the judgments of God will surely be visited upon those who do not repent and forsake the secret worship of Baal.

Probably the most recent instance is the organization of a Rebekah-degree Lodge, with a list of fifty members, who have passed the silly ritual of initiation and taken a solemn vow never to disclose the awful mysteries of this night work-shop of the prince of darkness. Names of officers only are given; but in this catalogue of titled dignitaries seven (or just one-half) are, as I am credibly informed, from the Congregational church. The Universalists have two, and the Baptists and Methodists each have a single representative, and it may be justly presumed that the membership is distributed in something near the same proportion. There is a divine, or rather a diabolical, fitness in this proportion, since the Congregational pastor is the only one who has publicly eulogized the order, and, as reported in an earlier issue of the Patriot, announcing himself "the oldest Odd-fellow in the hall." This pastor possesses very many and estimable gifts; but when he gives his influence in support of such a burlesque upon things sacred, and such a formidable rival of the church and the prayer meeting as an Odd-fellows' lodge, he makes a sad mistake, for which he ought to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." A few passages from God's Word, faithfully and lovingly applied to the secret society system, would cheer the hearts of devout ones and do great good in Putnam.

I have met and talked with the ministers in Putnam, and feel confident that not one of them loves the secret lodge meeting more than the open prayer meeting, or that they would advise young converts to become yoked up with infidels and profane men in a covenant of perpetual silence, as a means of grace and growth in spiritual life; but it does seem to me that these pastors need to pray for protection against the "fear of man, which bringeth a snare." The Good Shepherd is very tender of his sheep, and his heart goes out after them when they wander away. He says: "My people have been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray; they have turned them away on the mountains. They have gone from mountain to mountain; they have forgotten their resting-place."—Jeremiah 50:6. Have all who were once enrolled with the people of God in Putnam escaped this awful apostasy? Do you not know some who "have forgotten their resting-place" and are wandering from lodge to lodge and from degree to degree, unsaved because unwarned?

I spoke on Sabbath at Willimantic, where I was refreshed by the fellowship of the brethren and helped on my journey by their offering at the morning service in the M. E. church.

HARTFORD, Conn., April 18—Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, of Boston, spoke here in Unity Hall, last evening. If select, the audience was not large for a city like Hartford. Cynosure readers need not be told that she handled her subject with a master hand, or that, as this was her first appearance in Hartford, both the speaker and her speech were much more popular at the end than at the beginning of her lecture. Only expressions of commendation were heard for the address, and regrets that so few were there to be instructed and benefited by it. JAMES P. STODDARD.

MORE DELEGATES FOR THE CONFERENCE.

AN INTERESTING VISIT TO KANKAKEE AND PEOTONE, ILLINOIS.

A long-standing invitation took me, on the 15th inst., to Kankakee, Ill., to the Illinois Conference of the Evangelical Association.

This denomination, founded by Jacob Albright, is entered in some of our lists of churches as a Methodist branch. It is essentially so in form of church government. A few years ago there were 1,800 churches and some 135,000 members. Internal troubles have brought the body into unenviable notice for several years. One of the three bishops began to walk in the way of temptation, where the Lord taught us to pray that we "enter not." He joined the Freemasons and began to bring gifts to lodge altars; and after bowing in this house of Rimmon, unholy ambitions seized him and troubled the church. One thing led to another, until Satan tempted this Bishop Dubs to attempt a division of the church. He counted a majority in some conferences on his side, and expected to carry the church. But one with God is a majority; and when he succeeded in drawing the lines, he found his party able to divide only seven of the twenty-five conferences. The church remained strong; his party was the only faction.

In connection with the trials that have followed, two factions have been mentioned. This is a mistake; there is but one. The uniform decisions of the courts recognizes this fact, and forbids the use of the name "Evangelical Association" to the Dubs party.

In the Illinois conference this separation has been for the good of the church, since it separated all the lodge-men from it by their voluntary act. It should now make it safe for them to come back to the communion-table by requiring them to abandon the sin of lodgery.

I was made very welcome at the Conference. Bro. Vogelein, of Peoria, introduced me to Bishop Breyfogle and the body. Prof. Klatsing, of the N. C. A. Board, Brethren Lintner of Mendota, Wellner, of Elgin, and others, interested themselves in our behalf, and a short time was given to the Association's work.

The vote was unanimous to send a delegation to the special Church Conference of June 20th, and their appointment was referred to the presiding elders.

That evening found me in the pleasant home of Bro. R. S. Gilkerson, an old settler, three miles from Manteno, and an elder in the United Presbyterian congregation to which Bro. J. W. Cleland ministers. With this excellent people I spent a Sabbath of sweet communion, speaking for the reform at the forenoon and only service. Bro. Cleland, in arranging that I should address a congregation in a Methodist church a mile or so distant, secured a union meeting for the morning instead. I regretted to learn that several present were members of some secret order. God grant that the Word plainly set before them may lead them into a life of separation for God!

Bro. Cleland has an interesting work, though somewhat isolated. The church building is seven miles from Peotone, and the congregation is scattered over rich and level farming lands. God has blessed them with peace, their labors are harmonious, their pastor is faithful and devoted. May the Lord make them more and more a blessing to the region about them.

Last week was full of exacting and wearying labor for the special work of the season in the World's Fair, the Conference and the Congress. God leads us on and opens the way. Let us follow with an unfaltering testimony.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN NEW YORK.

228 W. 36TH ST., }
NEW YORK, April 21, 1893. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This, like those past, has been a busy day. Though weary, I take a few moments to report.

I have just come from a meeting of the Christian Alliance, in the church of which Rev. A. B. Simpson is pastor. Brother Simpson is away at present, but the God-honored work that he oversees goes right on. There were not less than four hundred earnest, active Christians present, and the meeting "went itself," no prompting being needed. I missed much of the service, as I was passing out notices of the conference as the audience retired. A good notice was given by Dr. Willson, pastor in charge, from the stand.

I spent one evening last week at the mission of which Brother Stephen Merritt has charge. I never saw such an army of tramps and bummers as confronted me. While the faces in the body of the house were unwashed and bloated, those on the platform and in front were so different that I felt it a pleasure to meet these consecrated workers and aid them, as best I could, in pointing to the Lamb of God. I felt greatly blessed in bringing a message of love to those besotted, benighted ones. Under all the rubbish there were hearts that could feel. They were somebody's children. Many expressed a determination to lead better lives.

I spent a very pleasant Sabbath with Brother James Parker, pastor of the Second U. P. church in Jersey City. I first met this brother when a student at Xenia, Ohio. Dr. Armstrong, known to Cynosure readers, whose sudden departure, a little over a year ago, was mourned by many, was the founder, and for twenty years pastor of this church. I may be allowed to express joy with the congregation that they have found so consecrated and able a pastor. May God greatly bless his labor of love. There are several to unite with this church at the coming communion.

Sabbath afternoon, according to appointment, I spoke to a large audience. A young people's meeting, in the evening, afforded me an opportunity to make a few remarks on "The way to find God."

I lectured on Monday evening to a goodly number in the same place. A debate, in which many of the young people were interested, kept some away. Collection $12.26.

Father has just come in, and is tired also. I made out a list of twenty ministers whom I requested him to visit this morning. When he gets after the ministers, they generally come. So I shall look for them at the conference next Tuesday. Yours in the work,

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ODDS AND ENDS OF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM VARIOUS LETTERS RECEIVED AT THIS OFFICE.

We write you a few lines from this lovely section of California (Kelseyville, Lake county), "the Italy of America," certainly rightly named, as it would be difficult to find more beautiful scenery or a more healthful climate, or more mineral springs, in the same extent of country, on earth. We are occupying the new Academy building for a residence...situated on an eminence overlooking the town and Clear Lake, a beautiful sheet of water thirty miles long and six miles wide. We had a flourishing school in the Academy (a new two-story building, with a barn and other out-buildings, and four acres of land), but the teacher had occasional attacks of insanity and left us. There is also a new three-story boarding-house adjoining the Academy grounds, with two acres of land, which can be bought for $1,000. The owner of the Academy will take $1,600 or $1,800 for it, for school purposes, and send three children to it. A wood-cut of the Academy and particulars will be furnished by either myself or the owner. We are seventeen miles from the railroad, but have two lines of daily stages—in the summer, three. We have a good prospect for a railroad to this place, as nearly all the money required for it has been pledged—none of which is to be paid until the road is completed. We are anxious to have this desirable property get into the right hands—into those of some educator who is alive to the crying need for reforms along all lines—especially that of anti-secrecy. Yours for the cause of truth and righteousness, MRS. M. S. COOK.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 31, 1893.

I am hard at work for the Lord Jesus Christ, with Satan and the lodge people standing at my right hand to resist me. I am glad that you are in sympathy with the dear old (Baptist) Vanguard and the female college at Little Rock. May God bless that dear man, Bro. J. A. Booker. I am poor, but I will divide with him as the Lord prospers me. I believe that God has brought him to the front for such a time as this. I have been praying unceasingly to the Lord to raise up friends for our work, and have received several letters of sympathy. To-day I received a box of goods from some unknown friend in New Orleans. I gave them at once to a needy family. Many persons come here who have no money to provide for themselves, and some are invalids and cannot work, seeking aid, without friends or money. May the Lord give others the spirit to help.

Yours in the great work of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, S. M. FISHER.

Secrecy rules New Hampshire—robs it, and next year will turn it from Republican to Democratic—all through secrecy and trickery; for Catholics gladly follow leaders who for twenty-five years have been slowly getting control of the State.

QUAKERTOWN, Pa., April 11, 1893.

I believe that it is time when the National Christian Association, temperance and prohibition societies, the Y. M. C. A. and the Christian Endeavor Association, and all true Christians should unite and select a good, suitable man for our next President. Let it be done this summer, at Chicago, in some Christian assemblage; and then go to work in that direction with an earnest good will and quietness, so that when the next campaign shall close his election will be sure. If possible, I shall be there for some time myself, and willing, at any time, if wanted, to give public addresses on the Roman conspiracy, or other topics, in either German or English, provided only that my necessary expenses are defrayed. JACOB C. EOLY.

LOWELL, Mass., March, 1893.

The Rev. A. C. Brown, of London, who preaches to an audience of about three thousand souls upon the Lord's day, and who has been permitted to welcome four thousand into the church to which he ministers, has said: "That which has no authority from Christ, no promise attached to it by God, no provision made for it by the Spirit, can only be a lying hypocrite when it lays claim to be 'a branch of the work of the Lord.'" Let the boys' brigade movement be tested by these words of sober truth, and I believe it cannot stand the test. If it is indeed "a branch of the work of the Lord," then it must have some sanction from Christ, the Spirit, or the Scriptures, in order to be taken up as a part of the work of the churches. If, instead of being attested by such authority, we find its paraphernalia and spirit opposed to the teachings of Scripture, then, whatever the sensation produced, it should be discarded, inasmuch as "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal." All these shifts to which resort is made in our day are but weak substitutes for real strength—frail crutches of a limping Christianity. Let a return be made to the Word of God, to heart-piety, "real Holy Ghost religion," and, as in the beginning, God will take out of the masses, now unreached by the churches, a people for his name. May that day speedily come. Yea, "Come, Lord Jesus!" Yours in the blessed hope,

SHARPSBURG, Pa., April 17, 1893.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Sharpsburg, Pa., held their annual anniversary on April 9. Dr. David McAllister, of the Reformed Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh, Pa., was invited to deliver the annual address. The auditorium of the Association was completely filled to the doors. The Doctor took for his text 1 John 2:14, latter part of the verse: "I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." The address was full of practical thoughts and considered the finest ever presented to the Association audiences. The speaker referred to the iniquity of the lodge system in a single utterance, when he illustrated the downfall of a friend who had joined the Masons. The remark was entirely unexpected and created quite a sensation. Sharpsburg is full of lodge-men, some of whom are prominent in the United Presbyterian, Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches. Our ministers, for some reason, do not cry out on this soul-destroying system. They evidently have been giving "milk and water" to their flocks, as one tersely put it. It has started the people of our town, especially those who are "followers of the Light," to think, and we hope much good will result. We have endeavored to discuss the question publicly through the newspapers, but think the editors will screen it as much as possible. Perhaps we will make arrangements later to have Brother Stoddard lecture for us. Yours for the truth, JAMES S. TIBBY.

LITERATURE.

THE SEPARATED NATION. By H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass. Pp. 224. Paper, 20 cents.

EGYPT IN HISTORY AND PROPHECY; OR, Pharaoh Proclaiming God. By Robert Patterson, author of "Fables of Infidelity and Facts of Faith." Pp. 57. Paper, 15 cents.

Both of these books belong to "The Anti-Infidel Library," edited by H. L. Hastings, and published by him at the Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston.

"The Separated Nation" is a concise history of the Jews, the prophecies relating to them, their prosperity, downfall and punishment, and, in a word, God's dealings with them as his "peculiar people." To-day the record of the Jewish nation, as set forth in the Bible, and as they have been known in all ages by other nations, is the best of testimony in behalf of the truth of the Scriptures. It is impossible for any intelligent person to carefully read the Old and New Testaments in connection with the secular histories concerning this separated nation, and to understand their present condition and position in the world, without acknowledging the wonderful dealings of the Lord with them. And, as in the past, he is still separating them from other nations, holding them with a firm hand until in his own good time they shall be restored to his love and favor and acknowledge Him whom they slew upon the cross as their Messiah and the Son of God. Mr. Hastings has given us a volume of much interest and value.

Egypt, too, comes prominently forth as a strong testimony to the truth of the Bible. Take the history of this remarkable country, from the date of its earliest records to the present time; read all the dealings of God with it, and it stands forth a land of wonders, but in nothing more wonderful does it appear than in the fulfillment of the ancient prophecies concerning it.

Take these two books together, and let the young or uneducated read them, and they will impart lessons that time and infidelity will find it difficult to efface.

THE FIRST MILLENNIAL FAITH: The Church Faith in its First One Thousand Years. By the author of "Not on Calvary." Pp. 84. New York: Saalfeld & Fitch, 12 Bible House.

We do not like the tone of this book. It smacks too much of the "higher criticism" mode of Scriptural interpretation. It would have us believe that Christ's passion in the garden of Gethsemane and on the cross had nothing to do with his work of man's redemption. If we cast away our belief in that doctrine, we may well exclaim with Paul, "Our faith is vain; we are yet in our sins." Instead of searching the Bible, he quotes mostly from the ancient sages, seeking truth in the opinions and traditions of men, rather than in the Word of God. Christians know in whom they trust, and in whom is their hope. They have no use for this man-made book.

THE BELIEVER'S HANDBOOK OF READY REFERENCE: Setting forth the Principles of Christianity in Plain and Simple Language; Designed Especially for the Young, the Unlearned and the Unconverted. By D. M. Gillespie, M.D. Pp. 271.

The author tells us in his opening chapter that among its specific objects is his desire to "guide the Christian in the selection of knowledge that will be of lasting benefit to him during this life, and in preparing him for the life to come; to place in the hands of church members a practical work that they may hand to those who have not time or patience to examine more complicated books which require more time and study; to bring about a reform in the church that will bring it back to the principles which were adopted, taught and practiced by the apostolic church during its primitive stages."

The number of topics included in its twenty-four chapters is large, relating to the home, family, social duties, spiritual advantages and Christian obedience. It is written in a Christian spirit, and teaches most wholesome lessons for all.

Some of its chapters on baptism and other church ordinances will provoke criticism; but the spirit in which they are advanced should disarm rancor. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

The following is the author's testimony against secret societies:

"We oppose the principles of secrecy being adopted by any social, beneficent, religious, civil or political organization of mankind, believing that the meetings of all such organizations should be held openly; therefore believers should not unite with any secret society whatever."

"The principles of secrecy, when applied to any organization, prepare the way for the formation of degrees; in fact, the creation of degrees cannot be prevented in any secret society, and the lower degrees, to a greater or less extent, are controlled or ruled by the members of the higher degrees, and in this way it becomes a species of aristocratic monarchy, i. e., the rich ruling the poor, the strong managing the weak or the few controlling the many."

A copy may be obtained by sending 50 cents to the author at Clay Center, Kansas.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

A prominent feature of the Review of Reviews for April is a character sketch of Mr. Cleveland's new cabinet, from the pen of Prof. Woodrow Wilson, the distinguished and brilliant writer upon American politics and history, who adorns the chair of Jurisprudence at Princeton University. It is, upon the whole, in decided sympathy with the President, and contains an excellent analysis of the peculiar condition of political parties at the present time in this country. The series of World's Congresses at Chicago, to begin with the Congress of Representative Women in May and to extend through the entire six months of the World's Fair period, will be interesting by reason of the intrinsic merits of the discussions, and attractive on account of the varied personality of the delegates and visitors who will come from all parts of the world. An article, by Rev. Dr. Barrows, of Chicago, chairman of the group of religious congresses, treats of the very audacious experiment of a parliament that shall bring together representatives of great religions hitherto considered as bitterly antagonistic to one another.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Journals.)

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

It is reported that protests from the Ohio lodges working in foreign languages have been sent to the Grand Chancellor, against the act of the Supreme Lodge prohibiting the translation of the revised ritual into German and other European languages.

Kansas Knights are talking in favor of the establishment of an "industrial school," or "college," for the benefit of the orphan children of deceased brethren. The Grand Lodge of that State has levied an annual per capita tax of 10 cents a member, to be levied for the term of ten years, for that purpose.

A sensational affair in Pythian circles took place at Parkersburg, W. Va., recently. Bro. Stewart, who is the editor of the Reveille, and is an enthusiastic Knight of Pythias, had in some way offended the officers and members of his lodge at Harrisville, and when he presented himself at the door of the lodge-room, he was rudely ordered to decamp. This he refused to do, and started to go in, when an officer of the lodge ordered the door-keeper to eject him by force. It took about a dozen of the brothers to accomplish this, when the lodge went into executive session. The session, however, was suddenly disturbed by a storm of pistol bullets which wended their way through the outer door. This action threw the lodge into confusion, when Stewart, pistol in hand, walked in and took his seat. The lodge then refused to entertain any further business, and adjourned. Charges were then preferred against Stewart, but on trial he was acquitted, on the ground that he was in good standing at the time, and had the right to enter the lodge-room at any of its sessions.

ODD FELLOWS.

The Central Relief Fund, recently organized by the Odd-fellows, has for its purpose the placing of old lodges that have many aged members upon the same standard as younger lodges. Per capita taxes, ranging from two and a-half to sixteen and a-half cents per week, are levied by the association upon the subordinate lodges according to age in five classes. Thirty-nine lodges, with a membership of over 7,000, belong to the organization.

In some of the Western States a peculiar state of things exists. The son of an Odd-fellow and an Indian woman cannot become an Odd-fellow, because of the Indian blood in his veins; but his mother, though a full-blooded Indian, is eligible in a Rebekah lodge, by reason of her husband's membership in the order.

"Where is my wandering boy to-night?" Hush! Perhaps he is on the lodge-room goat.—Fraternal News.

She is afraid to use Pearl-line. She admits that it will do just what is claimed for it, that it will save her time, take away the drudgery, and do the work better; but she argues that, if it does all this it must ruin the clothes. It's a poor argument. Because the dirt is loosened and separated and brought out, why need harm come to the fabric that holds it? It's a delicate matter to arrange—but Pearl-line does it. All its imitators would like to know how. Hundreds of millions of packages of Pearl-line have been used—by millions of women. If it had been dangerous to anything it would have died long ago.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearl-line." IT'S FALSE—Pearl-line is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearl-line, do the honest thing—send it back. 335 JAMES PYLE, New York.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1893

The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—PSALM 33: 10-12.

MASONIC ARGUMENT.

Every day, when Masonry is attacked by Christian men, many of whom have waded through its labyrinths of darkness and wickedness in search of that phantom "light" which they never found, and for which they took upon themselves the horrible, blood-curdling obligations of the fraternity, the principal argument by which they are met is abuse. It makes no difference how many degrees a renouncing Mason may have paid for and taken; when he quits the order and declares himself free from its obligations of secrecy and obedience to Masonic law, he is called a liar if he says aught against the evils which it inculcates.

The other day one of our esteemed contributors quoted the poem written some years ago by that Christian scholar, Rev. Joseph Travis, entitled "No Jesus There," referring to his experience after having taken several degrees in Masonic lodges. This quotation stirs up the Voice of Masonry to say: "A very malignant cynosurean boasts of his applying to Masonic lodges the song 'No Jesus There.' That act proves his utter ignorance of Freemasonry. He also woefully misapplies the symbolism of the gavel. Evidently he is in the blackness of darkness."

How easy it is to be captious and mistaken! Bro. Travis was, beyond dispute, a "worthy" Mason of high degree; and although he has been dead for many months, his testimony against the lodge as a Christless institution still survives and will go down the ages "to the last syllable of recorded time." He is where no abuse can affect him.

MASONRY AND OTHER FRATERNITIES.

J. Q. A. Fellows, "Ancient Craft correspondent, Louisiana," makes one or two statements in the April number of the Voice of Masonry that are worth a slight degree of consideration, especially by those who have been versed in Masonry and its work, but have withdrawn from it for conscience' sake. If either of these statements is true, the columns of the Cynosure are open for its concession; but if either is untrue, there will be no hesitation in refuting it as strongly as the falsification shall deserve.

1. That the organization of many secret and semi-secret societies, in recent years, and their popularity, have "sensibly checked the growth of the Masonic institution and materially affected its prosperity."

2. That they have been deleterious to the fraternity not only "by preventing a healthy increase of membership"—from which evil it now claims to be recovering—but by "the danger of engrafting upon, or infusing into, the principles of true Freemasonry wrong ideas of the institution."

After enlarging upon this apparent danger to the parent secret fraternity, through the attractions which these minor societies successfully present in ceremonies and high-sounding titles, Mr. Fellows adds:

But the main inducement held out by these organizations to the uninitiated is the feature, presented in various forms, that by the payment of certain monthly or quarterly sums, called dues, or assessments, a certain fixed sum per week shall be paid each member in case of sickness, or a sum of less or greater amount to the family of the deceased in case of death. A calculation, even casual, clearly shows that the amount promised is far in excess of the premium, called dues, paid in. Hence many, in the hope of getting much for little, have been induced to join these various organizations.

Having shown how fallacious these flattering inducements have proved, in the many failures of "endowment societies," and that "the whole scheme of each and all is based on false premises," and "engenders false ideas of life and business," with "nothing of benevolence, or charity, or brotherly love, about it," he makes this declaration:

Our obligations are not simply to contribute a certain amount of dues to the lodge treasury, as the sum of our charity, but "to contribute personally to anyone in necessitous circumstances, and more especially to anyone who has been obligated as a brother, as far as his necessities may require and our means will permit." This is the true measure of our obligation as Masons; there is nothing of lodge dues in it—the lodge fund derived from dues is not a charitable fund, but is for the current expense of the lodge; the lodge is not an organization to give systematic relief—Masonic relief is personal, and the conscience of the giver is the only guide as to his ability or the want of the recipient. In this the poor contributes of his little, the rich of his abundance, and thus the obligation is fulfilled.

"Thus the obligation is fulfilled!" Let us see: "It costs you," says Rev. B. Carradine, "from $10 to $125 to get in." "The uniform of one order costs $35, and of another order $75." "Then comes the costliness of association and fellowship necessarily created by being cast with men after that order. Then there is the costliness of attending upon the distribution of benevolence. From the United States statistics of 1883 I get this: A fraternity of 550,000 members received $5,000,000; $2,000,000 of that were given to the poor, the sick, the afflicted and the troubled, and it took over $3,000,000 to meet their regular expenses; so that it cost that fraternity $3 to give away $2."

We have before us the finance committee's final report to the Grand Masonic Lodge of Iowa for 1889: From it we gather the following totalities in the matters of appropriations for salaries of grand officers and charity for the year:

Services of grand officers.....	$ 4,000
Mileage and per diem do.....	7,840
Ordinary general expenses.....	5,897
Special (not charitable).....	900
Total.....	$18,637
Add total appropriation for CHARITY, including Youngstown disaster—widows and orphans.....	585
	$19,222

The proportion of money appropriated for expenses to the amount set apart for charity was over $31 to $1.

In 1891 the forty-nine "fraternal orders" designed "to extend relief to their members, and provide for their widows and orphans," reported as follows:

No. of benefit members Dec. 31, 1891.....	2,223,148
No. of social members, same time.....	401,330
Total membership.....	2,606,097
Total receipts from all sources.....	$28,377,234
Total benefits paid.....	$26,894,794
" paid expenses.....	611,752
" balance on hand.....	870,688
	$28,377,234

No wonder the despised "fraternal orders" are "deleterious" to Masonry.

FEMALE MASONRY.

Madame Maria Deraismes is a woman in France whom a contemporary describes as "strong-headed, practical, and irreligious," and "who has already exerted considerable influence over a portion of her own sex" in her own country. With a good many of her class, both in Europe and this country, she is anxious to do something to win fame and fortune, and has concocted a scheme "for making the intellectual influence of women more widely felt and appreciated."

Her idea has taken the form of a "Masonic institute for women," of which she aspires to be the founder. In her explanation of this enterprise, she is reported as saying:

"Freemasonry, which professes to bear the torch of enlightenment, has always neglected the feminine element. It is a very great mistake. In repulsing women and refusing her admission to their temples, the Masons have driven her towards the church, and have thrown her into the claws of the priests."

In this distressing alternative she proposes to rescue woman from Charybdis and restore her to Scylla—from the church to Freemasonry. Nobody seems to believe that she is crazy, but with that characteristic impetuosity to do something remarkable she appears as a reformer and a doubtful helper of her sex. How she will succeed remains to be seen.

Referring to female Masonry, an exchange, in whose statements we do not have the utmost confidence, says that she is not the only woman who would be, or is, a member of that secret fraternity. In proof of this it cites "Miss Sophie Walder, Mistress Templar of the New Reformed Palladic Rite of Charleston. This lady is a Freemason and a good deal besides, and is about as well-known in France, Belgium, and Switzerland as in the United States."

Miss Walder, according to this authority, "belongs not only to Freemasonry but to avowed Occultism, lying within Freemasonry and, moreover, to the Luciferian sect lying within that. The Luciferian rite being the direct worship of Lucifer, and Sophie being a Satanic medium of no mean order, it is evident" that she is not only a Freemason, but possesses more diabolism than Masonry itself.

So far as the story of Madame Deraismes is concerned, there is a strong probability of its truth; but as to that of Miss Walder, there is a stronger probability that somebody is lying.

Female Masonry in France may outvie Blavatsky in occultism; but in America it is fortunately confined to Masons' wives, sisters, daughters, cousins and aunts, who go through a ritual called the "Eastern Star," which is neither Masonic nor diabolical, but a little side-show gotten up by the fraternity for the promotion of "the era of good feeling" among its female relatives.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Before the next issue of the Cynosure can reach its many readers, the Columbian Exposition will have been opened to the public with appropriate ceremonies.

There have been twelve World's Fairs before this, most of which were financial successes, and all of which were creditable in their exhibits. Each has left its impress upon the age in the interest of art, science and manufactures. The one now inviting all nations to Chicago probably possesses as many attractions as any of its predecessors, if not more, and seems to hold, with a strong hand, all the elements of success.

The following table gives, in compact form, convenient for reference, the dimensions, area and cost of Exposition buildings proper:

The foregoing list does not contain mention of the various national and State buildings, which are very numerous and ornamental, and greatly enhance the beauty and value of the Exposition.

The cost of ground decoration up to the time of dedication is given as follows: Grading and filling, $450,000; landscape gardening, $323,500; viaduct and bridges, $125,000; piers, $70,000; waterway improvements, $225,000; railways, $500,000; steam plant, $800,000; electric lighting, $1,500,000; statuary, $1,000,000; vases, lamps, etc., $50,000; lake front adornment, $200,000; water supply and sewerage, $600,000; other expenses, $1,000,000; total, $5,943,500. The total expense of organization, administration and operation of the Exposition is estimated at nearly $5,000,000. This takes no account of the sums spent by the government, the States or foreign nations.

For views and further information respecting these buildings, send ten cents to this office for a handsome souvenir book of the Fair.

The following is a complete list of special jubilee days, as arranged up to date by the committee on ceremonies:

Washington.....	May 17
Wisconsin.....	May 23
Maine.....	May 24
Denmark.....	June 5
Germany.....	June 15
Nebraska.....	June 15
Massachusetts.....	June 17

Italian societies.....	Oct. 12
Minnesota.....	Oct. 13

The mind fails to grasp the elegance, massive-ness and wealth of the exhibits displayed. Weeks might be expended in leisurely surveying them, and then the half would not have been appreciatively seen.

The entrance fee to all enclosures in the grounds (with two exceptions), will be 50 cents per adult visitor; and on all week-days the gates will be open from 6 o'clock in the morning until 10:30 in the evening, affording every opportunity for sight-seeing.

No one, says the Inter-Ocean, need stay away from Chicago because of apprehension of cost. Cost will be just what the visitor chooses to make it. Rooms, small it is true, and somewhat remote from the grounds, but within reach by steam and cable cars, are advertised for rent during the Exposition season at $2 per week; add 20 cents per day for car fares during six days—$1.20; 80 cents per day for meals, seven days—$5.60, and $3 for six admissions to the grounds and you have six days for the Exposition and a seventh to the city at large at a cost of $11.80. This is an estimate on a basis of rigid economy, but it is an estimate on a practicable basis. A single person of average shrewdness can get along comfortably at a cost of $15 per week. All expenditures in excess of $20 may be estimated as for the higher class of comforts or of luxuries.

THE STUDENTS' BUREAU OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Notice of the re-organization, last December, of this effort to promote inquiry into the secret lodge system among American students was published in the Cynosure at the time. We are permitted to take from a report of the secretary, Mr. I. D. Stone, to the correspondents of the Bureau, the following interesting particulars, showing the progress of this very hopeful movement:

CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, }
April 15, 1893. }

The Executive Committee of the Students' Bureau of Correspondence issues the following report of its work since re-organization in December last.

1. Thirty-five correspondents have reported to the secretary from various institutions.

2. Fourteen institutions have been visited in promoting the efforts of the Bureau.

3. The following gentlemen have consented to address students on the dangerous tendencies of secret societies, charging only traveling expenses:

Joseph Cook, lecturer and editor of Our Day, Boston.
Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., editor of the Watchword, Boston.

Rev. J. M. Foster, Chambers Street Presbyterian church, Boston.

Rev. James M. Gray, Ref. Episcopal church, Boston.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Sec'y N. E. Christian Ass'n, Boston.

Rev. O. P. Gifford, D.D., Immanuel Baptist church, Chicago.

Rev. S. H. Swarts, Kenwood M. E. church, Chicago.
Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Cor. Sec'y Nat'l Christian Ass'n, Chicago.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College.
Rev. E. B. Graham, editor Midland, Omaha.

Rev. J. A. Wilson, D.D., Wooster, O.
Rev. M. A. Gault, Bloomington, Ind.

Bishop M. Wright, Dayton, O.
Rev. Roland D. Grant, Portland, Oregon.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Washington, D. C.
Rev. W. C. Paden, Oakland, Kans.

This list is being enlarged continually. All correspondence relating to lectures must be conducted through the secretary of the Bureau.

4. Circulars have been sent to the students of all the Protestant colleges of the country.

5. A list of questions has been sent all the presidents of these colleges, and responses have been received from nearly 200. These replies will be compiled and the interesting and valuable statistics distributed to the correspondents of the Bureau.

6. Other lists are prepared to be sent to pastors, to missionary secretaries, and to the secret lodges.

7. New names are being continually received for the correspondents' list.

In private letters to student friends, please mention the Bureau and its work, and aid in increasing this list.
I. D. STONE, Secretary.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the College agent, after having taken a few weeks' rest, purposes to visit the frontier in Northern Dakota and engage in missionary work during the summer.

—Rev. J. R. W. Stevenson, the Covenanter missionary who returned to Blanchard from Cyprus last summer, has regained his health, and is now preaching at Homewood, Kansas.

—The Baptist Vanguard, the office and materials of which were destroyed by fire when the colored Baptist College was burned at Little Rock, Ark., several weeks ago, and which has never missed an issue since, now appears in its former size, with new type and other evidences of returning prosperity. It is to be congratulated for the energy of its management.

—The Aurora, published by the literary societies of the Iowa Agricultural College, at Ames, Iowa, remarks: "College fraternities all over the United States have been anxiously waiting to see what attitude the faculty of Chicago University would take in regard to their establishment in that institution. It is now known that they will not be prohibited there; but it is very apparent that they will not be welcome, and the restrictions and frown of disapproval of those in authority will have a tendency to keep them out."

—Among the best religious newspapers with which it is our privilege to enjoy a weekly exchange, is the New York Observer, published at 37 Park Row, New York City, which has for some seventy years held a warm place in the esteem of Christian readers. A better family paper is seldom to be found; either as a source of entertainment designed to improve the head and the heart, or as a judicious commentator on current events, it possesses merits of a high order. As the oldest of the religious weeklies, published continuously under its original name, and maintaining its fidelity to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, it deserves the popularity and success which it has achieved.

—The India Watchman reprints, from an English publication, a romantic historical paper, showing that Queen Victoria is the descendant of an escaped nun—Charlotte, daughter of the Duke de Montpensier. The maiden was the victim of her father's bigotry, and became the lady-abbess of the convent in which she was immured. Protestant tracts which came in her way were eagerly read, but her surroundings afforded no hope of release from the position which she occupied, and of which she became heartily tired. In the year 1572, a Huguenot army invaded Normandy, broke into the convent and released its inmates. The abbess fled in disguise and made her way to Germany, where she found warm friends and became a Protestant Christian. No wonder England abhors the papacy.

—Last Saturday's New York World contains a dispatch from Delaware, Ohio, of the 20th inst., detailing a case of rare brutality among the college students in that place. Three of these, juniors, belonging to the Greek-letter fraternity of Sigma Zeta Nu, "were in the act of initiating Percy Wilson, of Chattanooga, Tenn., into the secrets of their order in the Chi Phi Hall when a delegation of the Delta Omicron Alpha, twelve in number, broke into the hall, overpowered the Sigma Nus, bound them hand and foot and proceeded to brand them on their faces. The branding-iron was a stick of caustic or nitrate of silver. The letters D. O. A. were made on each cheek and chin, respectively, and marks imitating horns were made on the forehead. Mr. Wilson was given a light dose, only one cheek being marked. All the men were handsome and stand high in society, but the black tattooing of the D. O. A. makes them look like Fijis ready for battle. The five students branded have suffered great pain, and bled freely from their wounds. Physicians say they are branded for life." Later, warrants were sworn out for the offenders, and the best local legal talent has been engaged by both sides for the trial.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.

2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.

3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

Special permission has been asked and freely granted by Dr. J. E. Roy, of the American Missionary Association, Dr. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, and Dr. Gifford, of Immanuel Baptist church, to use their published testimonies in the N. C. A. exhibit. Several years ago Mr. Moody gave a very cordial leave that his views should be published in a similar way. The friends of the late beloved Col. George R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission, wish that his name be not omitted, and that though dead he may yet speak to multitudes for Christ against one of the greatest enemies of his church.

There will be many friends of our reform who cannot safely come to Chicago this season because of age or infirm health. Let this be a suggestion for them. If they may not come for personal gratification, let them set aside a part or all the sum that they might have spent, if they had come, for the instruction and blessing of those that do. Help with the Association, in this way, to be a blessing to the crowds who come to the Fair.

Many will be expecting to come, who may at the last moment be disappointed. Let the fund you have been setting aside for the journey and its expenses be consecrated to a higher purpose even. The cause you wished to promote needs your aid. How can you better turn the personal disappointment of giving up the World's Fair into a blessing for your fellow-men?

Last Friday the last contracts were made for the N. C. A. exhibit. The committee designs to make the display of our work and its history as complete as possible and in as good style as our limited means will permit. We shall have good neighbors,—the American Bible and Tract Societies, the Y. M. C. A., the Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Disciples, etc., are close by. The people who will most frequent the northwest gallery of the main building will be such as we wish by all means to reach.

Every one who wishes the success of our cause will pray and aid in making this effort most efficient.

THE HOME.

THE PILGRIM CHURCH.

Far down the ages now,
Much of her journey done,
The pilgrim church pursues her way,
Until her crown be won.

No wider is the gate,
No broader is the way,
No smoother is the ancient path,
That leads to life and day.

No sweeter is the cup,
Nor less our lot of ill;
'T was tribulation ages since,
'T is tribulation still.

No slacker grows the fight,
No feebler is the foe,
Nor less the need of armor tried,
Of shield, and spear, and bow.

Thus onward still we press,
Through evil and through good—
Through pain, and poverty, and want,
Through peril and through blood.

Still faithful to our God,
And to our Captain true.
We follow where he leads the way,
The kingdom in our view.

SOCIAL PURITY.

Prominent among the reformatory organizations seeking to enlarge their field of useful labor in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition, there will be held in June a World's Congress on Social Purity. The New York Committee for the Prevention of State Regulation of Vice, with Aaron M. Powell, chairman, has issued a circular calling for an International Congress, to be held under the auspices of the World's Congress Auxiliary, June 2 and 3, 1893. All Social Purity and White Cross organizations, all churches, philanthropic and rescue organizations, in sympathy with its objects, are invited to send five or more representatives.

Papers upon topics germane to the general subject of social purity are expected from representative men and women on both sides of the Atlantic. Among the speakers announced are Hon. Charles C. Bonney, President of the World's Congress Auxiliary; Archbishop Ireland, Francis E. Willard, Julia Ward Howe, Mary A. Livermore and Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell. Papers are also invited from France, Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, India, Great Britain and other countries.

The gigantic evils with which these noble Christian philanthropists are contending should arouse every Christian man and woman throughout the world, in undying hatred for vice, and unyielding efforts to oppose all attempts at so-called State regulation of vice. The names of delegates, and all communications, should be sent to the chairman of the World's Congress Committee, Aaron M. Powell, P. O. Box, 2,554, New York City.

THE SINS OF ONE'S YOUTH.

There is something very sad as well as instructive in David's prayer, "Remember not the sins of my youth." Zophar, in the Book of Job, says, "His bones are full of the sins of his youth." Not only can bodily diseases be traced to the indiscretions and disobedience of youth, but also confirmed habits and overmastering sins and hardened guilt.

It is a fateful truth that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Sow a thought and reap a desire; sow a desire, and reap an act; sow an act, and reap a habit; sow a habit, and reap a life; sow a life, and reap an eternity. The reaping must be the same in kind, and manifold in degree.

These sins of youth will have their revenge in bodily ailments and mental associations and spiritual temptations. Grace does not affect them, nor can one grow out of them. The stains and scars and crooks remain through all the growth. God may have forgiven them, but one cannot forget them, nor cease to blush at their remembrance. Most of the sins of age are but the outbursts of the pent-up sins of youth. It is found that the large majority of criminals become such before 21 years of age. At that age one becomes cautious and takes fewer risks. So, also, do the large majority of those who become Christians follow Christ in youth.

The only explanation of the sudden fall of some Christians is that they were overcome by the accumulated force of the hidden sins of youth. The psalmist made God his portion from his youth, and became "a man after God's own heart." Yet the sins of youth overcame him at times of great temptation, and brought forth such bitter fruit in his sons that the heart-broken cry was forced from him concerning Absalom: "Is the young man safe?"

Nothing is more blessed than to be able to say of a young man, "He is safe," sound in growth. One does not care to ask so much, "Does he inherit wealth?" "Is he well educated?" "Is he smart?" as "Is he safe?" "Can he be trusted?" Trusted with himself and his future, as well as with property and confidence. A merchant could find any number of boys who were said to be smart, but only one who was faithful.

To be able to say that a young man is safe, he must have formed a character for manliness and godliness, which promises a fixed course of right thought and action and life with corresponding growth.

And nothing except the regenerating grace of God can so change and fix the character and life. No young man can save himself, nor can it be said of him that he is safe, until he is saved in Jesus Christ. The sins of youth will bring forth a harvest of sins in after-life, unless the grace of God intervenes.—New York Evangelist.

NEWS FROM JERUSALEM.

A letter from Mrs. Eliza J. Robertson, at Jerusalem, February 20, to a gentleman in Abilene, Kan. (especially the following paragraphs), is full of interest. The lady is a missionary in that city:

"The city is being rebuilt on the very grounds predicted by Jeremiah (31: 38-40) and Zechariah (14: 10). Large hospitals, school-houses, hotels, convents and other buildings have been erected, covering almost as large an extent as the city inside the wall. There has been no permit given by the Sultan to rebuild the temple that I know of. I hardly think the Jews would apply for one while the mosque of Omar stands on the Temple area. . . . The railroad from Joppa to this place is a great convenience. The engine excites the wonder and fear of the natives; some of them believe is possessed of the devil. Another railroad it is being constructed from Halfa on the Mediterranean Sea to the Houran on the other side of the Jordan river. The Jews are looking daily for their Messiah, because they see prophecy fulfilled in all these things."

RODDY'S CONVERT.

His real name was Rodger, but he was usually called Roddy, not precisely for short, but because that name glided more easily from the tongue. On Sunday, on Roddy's return from church, Mr. Peterman, his next-door neighbor, said:

"Well, Roddy, where have you been?"

"At a missionary meeting," replied Roddy.

"Poh! poh!" scoffed the old man.

The missionary meeting of which Roddy spoke had been a very stirring one, and had fanned his missionary zeal to a white heat.

"Why, Mr. Peterman," he said in surprise, "don't you believe in Foreign missions?"

"Naw, not a bit of it," the old man replied.

"It's money worse'n thrown away. We've got heathen enough at home, an' we'd better get them converted before we spend our money trying to convert them that live five thousand miles away. There's Bill Meeks, now, across the street, I just saw him come home drunk. He took up the whole sidewalk. Better spend your money on such home pagans like him, don't you think?"

Roddy felt the force of his old neighbor's objection, but he soon had an answer ready:

"I know there are plenty of unsaved people at home," he admitted, "and we ought to do what we can for them. But we ought to help the heathen, too; we ought to do good in as many places and ways as we can."

"We'd ought to 'tend to our home affairs first, according to my way o' thinking," declared the old man.

"That's so," answered Roddy; "but that isn't all we ought to do. It looks to me just like this. There are people to be saved here at home and in the heathen countries, too, and we ought to give the Gospel to both classes as fast as we can. If you and I can get our neighbor, Bill Meeks, converted, and can give a little money to get the poor Africans and Chinese and Hindoos converted, too, we will do more good than if we only try to save Bill Meeks. We ought to give everybody a chance to accept the Gospel, oughtn't we?"

"Well, I declare, Roddy, you can argue just like a lawyer," broke out Mr. Peterman.

Roddy flushed a little at the compliment, but said: "I don't care about arguing; that's not the point. But may I ask if you gave anything to foreign missions this year?"

"Of course not. As I said, I don't believe in 'em."

"I suppose, then, you gave so much more to Home missions?"

"Well—no—not exactly. There's so much need right here in Barrytown that I couldn't spare anything for anywhere else."

"Then you must have given a nice large sum for the Gospel right here, didn't you?"

"Why, h-h-em! h-h-em! I gave ten dollars to the preacher."

"Is that all?"

"Yes—I believe so."

"That's not very much for a rich man; but then, may be, you tried to save a great many people around you. How many did you save?"

"Look here, boy, you talk as if you were teaching me the catechism," said the old man, impatiently. "I don't know that I saved anybody in particular."

"That's just what the speaker said at the meeting to-day. People who won't do anything for missions won't do much for any other good cause, either. But I must go now. Mother's calling me to dinner, and I'm as hungry as a bear."

"The idea of a chit of a boy talking to me like that!" muttered Mr. Peterman, crossly, when Roddy had gone. "It was—impertinent."

Still, the lad's words had gone to the old man's conscience like a well-aimed arrow, and troubled him all the afternoon, so that he did not derive much pleasure from his Sunday newspaper. Roddy feared that he had spoken too bluntly to his neighbor, but still he hoped that some good would result from the conversation.

Toward evening Roddy and his parents were sitting on the veranda, each with a book in hand, when Mrs. Barrows—that is, Roddy's mother—looked up and said:

"There comes Harry Peterman; and—why, he's reeling as if he were intoxicated."

They watched the young man as he came with unsteady steps down the street toward the corner, and then turned and staggered to his own doorway, and disappeared in the house.

"Poor fellow!" said Mr. Barrows. "I'm afraid he is falling into bad habits. This isn't the first time he has come home recently in such a condition."

"His parents are very much troubled about him," answered Mrs. Barrows. "His mother says she can't understand why he has become so reckless. He doesn't seem to care for church or Sunday-school or anything good."

"I heard him say the other day that he didn't believe in church and religion any more," added Roddy. "He said religion didn't do his father any good, for he was just as close-fisted as any sinner could be—those were his very words."

A few days later Roddy met Mr. Peterman, who said:

"Did you see Harry come home on Sunday evening?"

"Yes, sir," Roddy replied frankly.

"Please don't tell any one about it, for my sake, Roddy. I feel the disgrace very much."

"I won't say a word," Roddy promised.

"Thank you," said the grateful old man, the tears shining in his eyes. "I don't know what to do for Harry. He's getting so reckless—doesn't care at all for church any more. If only something could be done to bring him back. Ask your father and mother to speak to him, Roddy—and—and pray for him!" and the tears streamed down the old man's furrowed cheeks as he turned away.

Roddy's eyes, too, were dim, and he walked home in a thoughtful frame of mind. What could he do for Harry? Here was home work, and he would not neglect it because he was deeply interested in the spread of the Gospel among the heathen. How soon opportunities occur when one is really on the alert for them! Scarcely two weeks later the pastor of the church which Roddy attended announced, on Sunday morning, that a young native of India, who had been converted from heathenism and educated in this country, would speak in the evening.

"Mr. Peterman and Harry must hear that address," was Roddy's mental resolve.

It required all Roddy's arts of persuasion to induce Mr. Peterman and Harry to go to the meeting, but at last they consented. If ever the young Hindoo speaker was anointed by the Spirit, it was on that evening. Roddy was sitting near Mr. Peterman. At first the old man's face was a study. Doubt, curiosity and hostility were written on his features; but as the young Hindoo grew more earnest, describing the darkness, helplessness, woe and sin of the heathen world, his own hopeless condition while yet in sin, and finally his wonderful deliverance through the preaching of the Gospel by American missionaries—as he described all this in his earnest, eloquent way, Mr. Peterman bowed his head, his bosom swelled with emotion, and the tears rained thick and fast down his cheeks. If the Gospel could bring such joy and freedom to a poor Hindoo, why could it not help his son Harry? His old heart leaped with hope at the thought.

Meanwhile Roddy also glanced, at intervals, over at Harry Peterman's face, which had taken on a very serious expression. What were the young man's thoughts? He could not tell. It was not long, however, before he learned the condition of Harry's mind. The next evening Mr. Peterman stepped into Mr. Barrows' sitting-room with a radiant face.

"Good news! good news!" he broke out. "Harry has made up his mind to become a Christian and do better. Roddy, what do you suppose put such a grand notion into his mind?"

"Was it the address last evening?" Roddy ventured.

"It was," said Mr. Peterman with beaming eyes. "He says if the Gospel can do so much for a poor Hindoo it can also save him. Yes, sir, that's just what he says. You see, he's a pretty smart boy, if I do say it myself, and he just reasons it out in that way."

"And has he really asked God to help him?" said Mr. Barrows.

"Yes, and God has answered his prayer."

Here the old man's voice broke, so that he could not speak for some minutes.

"Roddy, I'm your convert," he said presently. "I believe now in Foreign missions and Home missions and every other good cause. To think, though, that a Hindoo had to come all the way to America to convince me and win my boy from sin! Yes, Roddy, I'm your convert. God bless you, my boy!"

"I rather think you are his convert," said Roddy joyfully.

Judging from the intense interest that Mr. Peterman ever after took in missions, it would seem that Roddy was correct.—Interior.

SIN MAKES TROUBLE.

Sin makes trouble for ourselves, but not for ourselves alone. Every man must bear his own burden, but yet his burden may become a crushing load to others; and our sins often make trouble for those who come after us.

A number of men were working in a mine, and as they continued the excavations they placed props here and there to take the place of the solid wall of earth they were removing, and support the ground overhead. It was necessary that they be exceedingly particular in placing these supports, but in the haste of mining there was some slight carelessness, and they saw the danger when it was too late to remedy it. They knew the mine would soon cave in, and so gave up their work. But there were others in danger—men who were on the surface, enjoying the fresh air and sunshine, and thinking of no immediate peril as they walked over the condemned mine, and removed the engines which could work there no longer. All at once, the earth gave way from under their feet, and steaming engines and men were hurled into the awful depths to certain death. They suffered the consequences of the carelessness of others, as they perished without a moment's warning. Too often do men's sins thus bring calamity on those who are innocent.—The Christian.

THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY.

Will some wise man who has journeyed
Over land and over sea,
To the countries where the rainbow
And the glorious sunsets be,
Kindly tell a little stranger
Who has oddly lost her way,
Where's the road that she must travel
To return to Yesterday?

For, you see, she's unfamiliar
With To day, and cannot read
What its strange, mysterious sign posts
Tell of ways and where they lead.
And her heart upbraids her sorely,
Though she did not mean to stray
When she fell asleep last evening
And abandoned Yesterday.

For she left a deal neglected
That she really should have done;
And she fears she's lost some favors
That she fairly might have won.
So she'd like to turn her backward
To retrieve them if she may—
Will not some one kindly tell her Where's the road to Yesterday?

TEMPERANCE.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

A World's Temperance Congress, to be composed of representatives of all temperance and religious bodies from or among all nationalities in sympathy with the temperance reform, has been called by the World's Temperance Congress committee, appointed by the board of managers of the National Temperance Society, to meet in the city of Chicago on Monday, June 5, 1893.

It is expected that the congress will continue during four days. Separate, simultaneous sections will be held, as may be found desirable and necessary for the reading and discussion of papers upon special topics inclusive of every aspect of the temperance reform. Papers have been invited from a large number of gifted and able writers in the various countries, men and women, and many acceptances have been already received.

The congress will be held with the co-operation of the general committee of the World's Congress Auxiliary on Temperance Congresses. It promises to be important and historic beyond any convocation in the interest of the temperance reform ever held.

The congress will be for deliberation only. No action will be taken of binding force upon the representatives of any country. English and French will be the languages of the congress.

The following acceptances have already been received from persons invited to prepare papers to be presented to the congress:

SCIENTIFIC.

The Physical Benefits of Total Abstinence: B. W. Richardson, M. D., F. R. S., London, England.

The Effect of Alcoholic Intoxication upon the Human Brain and its Relation to the Theories of Heredity and Evolution: A. Forel, M. D., Zurich, Switzerland.

The Latest Verdict of Science Concerning Alcohol: N. S. Davis, M. D., Chicago, Ill.

Are Beer and Light Wines to be Encouraged as Against the Stronger Distilled Liquors? J. B. Dunn, D. D., Boston, Mass.

POLITICAL AND LEGISLATIVE.

Principle and Method in the Temperance Reform: Herrick Johnson, D. D., Chicago, Ill.

The Duty of Church Members in the Temperance Reform: Rev. Joseph Cook, Boston, Mass.

Ought Women to Vote Concerning Liquor Traffic Legislation? Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Melrose, Mass.

The Relation of Law to Gospel in the Temperance Reform: Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, Chicago, Ill.

Sumptuary Laws: Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble, Chicago, Ill.

The Effects of Intoxicants upon Politics and the Government: O. P. Gifford, D. D., Chicago, Ill.

Local Option: H. L. Wayland, Philadelphia, Pa.

The License Problem in Theory and Fact: Albert G. Lawson, D. D., Camden, N. J.

Electoral Leagues: J. H. Raper, London, England.

Nationalizing the Liquor Traffic: Edward Belamy, Chicopee, Mass.

Sunday Saloons: Rev. W. F. Crafts, Pittsburgh, Pa.

COFFEE HOUSES.

Temperance Restaurants and Coffee-houses in Great Britain: Joseph Bentley, Bradford, England.

Coffee-houses in America: Joshua L. Bailey, Philadelphia, Pa.

These papers will be considered in sections, July 5, 6, and 7, and public meetings will be held in the evenings, to be addressed by some of the ablest speakers in the country and by distinguished visitors from abroad.

June 11 has been set apart for "Temperance Sunday," and the ministers of Chicago requested to open their pulpits for sermons and addresses upon various phases of the Temperance Reform.—The National Temperance Advocate.

WELL SAID.

The sanction of the law given to evil is a tremendous evil in itself.—Dawson Burns, D. D.

"Give the devil his due" is all wrong. Give him your "don't" and you'll be happier.—Yonker's Statesman.

The cause of temperance has nothing to hope, but much to fear, from a license system.—Daniel Dorchester, D. D.

"A liquor-dealer may be a Democrat, Republican,—Mugwump; he can never be a Prohibitionist."—Inn keepers' Journal, N. Y. Liquor Paper.

The liquor traffic can never be legalized without sin. License, high or low, is vicious in principle and powerless as a remedy.—Bishops of the M. E. Church.

Let every laborer know this fact: That at least one full hour's toil of each day's labor is his tax for the support of the dram shops of America.—Rev. J. H. Sherman.

At the base of reform lies the education of the intellect into an appreciation of ethical life, and a knowledge of how to defend and perpetuate that life.—The Progressive Age.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Patience under affliction. Vs. 11, 12. Life without any trials would fail entirely of its prime object, which is that of discipline, and the fact that no one lives and dies without passing through more or less of trial shows that God means that the whole human race should feel its salutary effects. It is true that many are not benefited by affliction, and others are only hardened by it. These are the ones who "despise" his chastening and "weary" of his correcting hand. But a true child of God, even if he does not understand the reason why he is so sorely tried, will be patient under that pruning, which will, in due time, "bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness."

2. The blessedness of Wisdom. Vs. 13-18. The world calls a man happy who prospers in his business relations, and amasses a great fortune. But here we have a different standard. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom." He may not possess a dollar; but if he has the true wisdom he is rich. Its value far transcends that of silver or gold, or precious stones, or any earthly treasure which men peril their lives to win. These are perishable, but wisdom endures forever. Riches must be left on this side of the grave, but wisdom supplies us with the current coin of the other world. "Length of days" is in her right hand. Wisdom means temperance, industry, faith in God, hope for the future. Wisdom forbids sinful indulgence or the greed of gain; all those things which shorten life and make men old before their time. "In her left hand riches and honor." Riches is a relative term. What is wealth to one man may seem poverty to another; but "godliness, with contentment, is great gain." True wisdom will lead us to make the best of our lot, and a cheerful, contented spirit, though we have to work for our daily bread, will make us richer than a millionaire. Such a man is always honored; and (best of all) he has the honor which comes from God. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness." He who was wisdom incarnate, has said: "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." It is by learning of him that the soul finds rest. "All her paths are peace," but it is not the peace which the world gives. The latter will not stand the stress of trial, while the peace which God gives grows only deeper and more satisfying the wilder the storms of trouble which may beat around us. "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her," under whose shade one may rest, and eat of the fruit, untroubled by the flaming sword which guarded the tree of life in Eden. Wisdom includes everything. It has the promise of the life which now is and of that which is to come. So the simile will be found to be full of the deepest and richest meanings if one will take the time to search them out.

3. Wisdom in the Creation. Vs. 19, 20. Wisdom allies us with God himself. It is by means of his wisdom and knowledge that this material universe came into being. The writer, the inventor, the artist; even the farmer, the mechanic and the housekeeper, to achieve the highest results and do the best work, need to pray for this heavenly wisdom. That divine Spirit of understanding which made the stars can show the astronomer the laws which govern them. He who hung this world in space, and knows every plant and mineral on its surface, and has so nicely balanced all its physical forces; he it is who can unfold to man the mysteries of nature; "who giveth liberally," and "upbraideth not." Work or study which is sanctified by prayer will bring forth more and better results than that which is undertaken in one's own human strength with no sense of dependence on God.

4. The way of safety. Vs. 21-24. "Life unto thy soul." All that makes life, as Scripture expresses it, "life indeed," the smile of God here and the hope of eternal joy hereafter. "And grace unto thy neck." The beauty of a fine Christian character may be likened to but far transcends the golden chains which kings used to wear around the neck as a mark of royalty. "Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely." Life is full of snares and pitfalls, but they who make Wisdom their guide "shall not stumble." "When thou liest down thou shalt not be afraid." We shall feel in every emergency and every danger the presence of our divine Protector, so that we cannot fear, any more than a child with his father's arms around him. "Thy sleep shall be sweet," undisturbed by dreams of evil. There is no need for Christians to enter a lodge and band together with men of doubtful or indifferent character, for mutual protection in traveling, or help in sickness and misfortune. They who really trust the Lord will not dishonor him by any such course, thus giving the lie to all their professions of confidence in his power to keep them. God does not want any half-way trust. He has given us no half-way promises. They who have the heavenly wisdom will trust him for everything, and through everything: in darkness and light, in storm and sunshine, in life and death.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The "Central South Association," with all its historical associations, has passed into history and the "Tennessee Association," phoenix-like, has risen full-fledged from its ashes. The Central South Association was the parent of the great associations of the Middle South, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and at the time of the change of its name, April 8, had connected with it churches from Northern Alabama, Kentucky and Arkansas. These retain their rights and welcome as they pass into the Tennessee Association. By the change of name the Tennessee Association conforms to the usage of Congregationalism by limiting its extent to the lines of the State. The Central South Association, hereafter to be known as the Tennessee Association, met at Nashville, Tenn., April 6, with the Union church of Fisk University. The sermon of the opening session was preached by Rev. John W. Tolliver, of Florence, Ala. Rev. George Lusty presided as moderator. The religious devotions from beginning to end were intensely earnest. The narrative of the state of religion was very interesting, often intensely so. Many of the churches reported growth and increased spiritual power. On the other hand there were reports of discouragement and struggle enough to lead to the inquiry, "Why does not Congregationalism flourish in the South?" The officers for the next year are: Rev. B. A. Imes, moderator; Rev. Eugene Harris, recording secretary; Rev. H. S. Bennett, statistical secretary. The next meeting will be at Memphis, in April, 1894.

—The committee on temperance of the New York and Brooklyn Association in their report recommended that all members of Sunday-schools be urged to the practice of total abstinence; that a set of scientific temperance text-books be placed in Sunday-school libraries; that total abstinence be the principle and practice of church members; that unfermented wine be used for the communion service; that the law requiring scientific temperance instruction in public schools should be enforced, and that churches should co-operate in its enforcement; and that earnest efforts be made to abolish liquor saloons.

EVANGELICAL SYNOD.

—The Evangelical Synod of America, the representative in this country of the United Church of Prussia, Baden and other German lands in which the Lutheran and the Reformed are joined not by a federal union but by an organic consolidation, has recently compiled new statistics. From these it appears that this body, which is mostly German but favors a judicious introduction of English into its congregations and schools, now numbers 730 pastors, 898 organizations, 137 parochial schools, 19 stations with 1,006 baptized Christians. The leading educational institution of this body is at Elmhurst, Ill., where there is a college with a teachers' seminary, the attendance being 174. The Synod issues 7 German church papers, all of which are well supported.

FREE METHODIST.

—All persons who expect to attend the Illinois Annual Conference Sunday-school Convention at Aurora, Kane county, May 17, 18, are requested to send a postal to Rev. Geo. W. Whittington, 105 South Lincoln avenue, in that city, stating how long they will stay, so that provision may be made for their entertainment and comfort. If possible, do so one week before the time of meeting.

LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

—The Reformed Church of Latter-Day Saints, at Lamoni (Iowa) Conference, denounced Spiritualism because it is contrary to the doctrine of Christ. It recognizes no clearly-defined supreme being; it does not develop its devotees to a higher plane of morality, and operates through them just as well when they are corrupt as when they are pure; its prophecies are not fulfilled. Another declaration maintains the position that nothing short of the Word of God should be taken as the man of our counsel, and hence whatever may have been said or done by what is known as the "Old Church," which is not in harmony with that word, should neither be received or excused. The people of God should stand upon the platform of Jesus Christ as revealed in God's Word to his people on earth. Another resolution, declaring that dancing and card-playing are unbecoming to a true Christian, was passed.

LUTHERAN.

—Lutheran church property in Brooklyn, N. Y., is valued at $1,360,000. The number of churches is thirty; of congregations, thirty-six; of pastors, forty; of communicants, 15,000. Eleemosynary and educational work is represented by a home for the aged, a deaconess' institution, a hospital and a number of parochial schools.

—As was to be expected, the much advertised trial of Professor Dr. Gottwald of the Wittenberg Seminary for being too Lutheran for an institution of the General Synod ended in a complete vindication of the accused. Convicting evidence was wanting.

—Seventy-one delegates, of whom forty were pastors, attended the recent meeting of the Danish Lutheran church in America at Chicago. No action was taken with reference to the theological seminary, the condition of which was one of the principal reasons assigned for the meeting. The congregations were a unit in their opposition to a division of the church on doctrinal or any other grounds.

—Rev. Dr. S. A. Ort, of Wittenberg College, will deliver the address on "The Doctrines of the Lutheran Church," on Lutheran Day, at the World's Fair in September next. Dr. Ort is one of the leaders in the conservative ranks of the General Synod.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Methodist church of Fostoria, Ohio, has adopted a resolution doing away with one communion cup, and has ordered 400 small tumblers, supplying one cup for each communicant. It is stated that other churches in the city will do likewise at an early date.

—Ministers in Ireland have signed an appeal to Methodist ministers in England that they oppose Home Rule, both on religious and commercial grounds. Home Rule in Ireland means peril to the Wesleyans as well as to other Protestants in the island. The contest is not one-sided, by any means.

—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, of the M. E. church South, writing in Zion's Herald on "Episcopal Methodism at the forks of the road," says: "Episcopal Methodism in America is at the forks of the road. The one leads to Congregationalism, the other back into the old path trod by our fathers. . . . All must see that this is a state of things that cannot last. Episcopal Methodism cannot move on two distinct and opposing lines at the same time. It cannot have one system for strong and rich churches, and another for the poorer and weaker ones. Already are heard the muttered thunders of a coming storm."

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbyterian Presbytery of Chicago has adopted a resolution requesting the General Assembly to dispose of the Briggs case, by sending it back to the Synod of New York. If it is there sustained, the case will then go to the Assembly, strengthened by the prestige of having been supported by the presbytery and the synod.

—The revision question still agitates the Presbyterian church; but the tone of discussion is much different from what it was two years ago. It seems now pretty well settled that there will be no revision at present.

Y. W. C. A.

—The fourth international convention of the Young Women's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada meets in Toledo, Ohio, April 27-30. This international association, which has headquarters in the Venetian building, Chicago, is a part of the World's Young Women's Christian Association, and is composed of 300 city and college associations in thirty-seven States and provinces, and of sixteen State organizations. Among the speakers of the convention are: Prof. Graham Taylor, Chicago; Dr. T. C. Hall, Chicago; Mr. L. D. Wishard, New York City; Dr. J. H. Brookes, St. Louis, and many prominent association members and workers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—As among various arrangements made for large gatherings with the Columbian Exposition, attention should be directed to those announced for an International World's Sunday-school Convention, to be held in St. Louis. That city is chosen, instead of Chicago, in order to escape those complications which might be found in the immediate vicinity of the Exposition. The convention is to be held August 31-September 2, and September 4-6.

THEY'RE NOT ALL ALIKE

—blood medicines. There's only one that is so far-reaching and so unfailing in its effects that it can be guaranteed to do all that's promised for it. That is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If that doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

It's not like the sarsaparillas or ordinary Spring medicines. They claim to do good in March, April, and May. All the year round, and in all cases, the "Discovery" purifies the blood as nothing else can. Every blood-taint and disorder, Eczema, Tetters, Salt-rheum, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Enlarged Glands, Tumors and Swellings—the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases, and the worst forms of Scrofula, are completely and permanently cured by it.

Buy of reliable dealers. With any others, something else that pays them better will probably be urged as "just as good." It may be, for them; but it can't be, for you.

For colic, cramps, and pains in stomach, nothing equals Dr. Pierce's Smart-Weed Elix.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

"Black Jack" Yattaw, one of the most prominent and "tough" characters of this city, died last week.

The Esquimaux families at the World's Fair, tired of the slavery to which they were subjected as "sights," have left the grounds.

It is only of late years that rheumatism has been treated as a blood disease. But that this is a correct theory is proved by the extraordinary success attending the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in this painful and very prevalent malady. It seldom fails of radical cure.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the veil of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1868—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb. 1877—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonials, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is induced, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

NATURAL DEVELOPMENT.

Hot-bed life or forced growth may bring early fruitage, but it also brings early decay. This may be admissible in the vegetable kingdom, but not in the animal. It is unnatural, and hence destructive to usefulness and longevity.

In the realm of mind the natural development is the only sure and satisfactory one. It is almost proverbial that precocious children seldom attain what they early promised. It is also noticeable that those of slower growth and ordinary mental powers have often come to surprising development and usefulness under the natural and wise directing of these powers of mind and heart. This is so little understood that a "smart" child is regarded as more desirable than a well-developed, though less precocious one.

The opening of the mind and life of the child should be like the blooming of a flower, which is full of new beauty and wonders at every stage. To open it ourselves would be to destroy it for a passing enjoyment. The child must be studied and fashioned according to its needs, rather than pressed in some things and crippled in others, or toyed with till it becomes perverted in mind and character.

The importance of keeping the little ones in the hands of those who will train them mentally as well as spiritually in God's natural way cannot be overestimated. Such training of children is the most sacred obligation of parenthood. The care of the body is also to serve this end.

Few realize that the most important time in a child's education is the first six or eight years in the home where father and mother are, or should be, the most trusted of teachers. Here developments may be carefully watched in normal conditions, and progress and character noted. How much this means to the future of the child cannot be realized. It lays a good foundation for a permanent structure. If this is neglected, nothing can make up its great loss to the child.

TIMELY HINTS.

"Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." 3 Jno. 2.

Look into your cellars and dark closets. Do not wait for sickness, but thoroughly clean everything, and be not sparing of lime.

Modern scientists are finding out the causes of disease; but simple, old-fashioned cleanliness is as good a preventive as has yet been invented.

Tight lacing has been asserted, by a noted German professor, to be the frequent cause of gall-stones in the liver. This is a most distressing disease, causing cramps and severe pain.

Those suffering from contagious or infectious diseases should be isolated from all but those who take care of them. It is better, if practicable, to have an upstairs room for a sick chamber.

Do not give the baby paregoric or soothing syrup. It is bad enough to give opiates to grown people, but much worse with children, as they are very sensitive to the drug, which often destroys the mind of a nervous child.

Do not let the bright spring days cheat you into doffing your flannels too soon. Better put on lighter outside garments and change again to heavier if the weather changes suddenly. The weather is very uncertain in the Eastern and Middle States in April.

Dyspepsia is usually caused by over-eating or by the use of too rich foods which cannot be assimilated. There is no need of any person becoming dyspeptic. Plain food, regularly taken, and daily outdoor exercise will keep the digestive organs in order.

It is better for invalids to be out of doors, if possible, rather than to stay indoors. Even if unable to walk, they can, with the assistance of friends, be helped out on some sunny, sheltered

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 18 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valence's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan," "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-Masonry's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disavow secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. I. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

FARM NOTES.

SOME AGRICULTURAL POINTERS.

By all means sow some clover this spring. Seed is high, yet we cannot well do without this useful plant. We need it in our rotations. We require it both to furnish the best of hay for our stock, as well as to maintain the fertility of the soils of our farms.

Try and get a good start with the spring work, and then keep ahead. The man who keeps ahead of his work does not labor as hard in the end as he who is behind. How everything drags, and how discouraging it is to perform every farm operation just a few days later than it should have been done! and how much loss such a practice entails! So it is good advice, though often hard to follow: "Push the work, and don't let the work push you."

Do not fail to prepare the soil properly for the reception of the seed. Fine up and pulverize until it becomes perfectly loose and mellow. This is the very foundation of farm work; and, when this is slighted, how can satisfactory results be reasonably expected? Then do not omit incessant tillage and cultivation throughout the growing season. Keep at it.

Do not turn out the stock to pasture too early. Spring is trying to the constitution. Winds and rains are prevalent, and these are precisely the right conditions for stock to take cold and become sick. There is no saving in this premature pasturing, for the grass has perhaps barely started. It contains much water, and cropping it early does cattle small good, and very likely diminishes the later yield. Furthermore, the ground being soft, is poached, and the sod badly injured. Make the change from hay to grass very slowly, and thus prevent disorders which are liable to occur.

Spring is the season for all kinds of transplanting and "setting out" work; so improve the farm by establishing orchards and small fruit patches, that will in future years provide the family with most healthful fruit, furnish a source of income, and improve the appearance and value of the farm. It seems paradoxical that so many farmers and their families scarcely taste fruit in any quantity. Rural people should certainly take hold of all the blessings which their lot affords.

Plant potatoes early. Blight and rot generally affect late plantings more seriously than the earlier ones. Commercial fertilizers are preferable to stable manures, as the latter seem under certain conditions much more favorable to the spread and propagation of the dread "scab". The ground for potatoes should be plowed deeply, and the seed put down pretty well, say four or five inches. Level culture is easier and better than the old-fashioned "hill culture".

Save all the manure from all the stock, —and by all is meant the entire fertilizing matter from both solid and liquid excrements. Manures are shamefully wasted, and our impoverished soils are cheated of their just dues and needs; and year by year they become more and more exhausted. What wonder that crops grow less and less, and we hear the complaint that "farming does not pay"! Turn over a new leaf. Employ absorbents, such as straw, meadow hay, land-plaster, sawdust, coal ashes, freely, and curtail this expensive waste.

There are advantages in special farming as well as in general farming. There are also disadvantages in each. In special farming there is more concentration of effort possible; but if the specialty fails, as all will occasionally, then there is nothing to fall back upon. If a man's land is particularly suitable for one crop, let him "go into it" extensively; but yet produce, to a secondary extent, some other crops as a partial dependence. —W. P. Perkins, in Farm, Field and Fireside.

SOME OTHER POINTERS.

A week is long enough for the hen house to go without having the droppings removed. Sprinkle sand, dry earth or coal ashes under the perches after removing the droppings.

Set or "break up" the broody hen at once.

See that the fowls have fresh water and pure air, but not damp quarters and drafts.

If the coops for little chicks are on the barn floor give them some fresh earth for a carpet.

Whitewash the coops before using them this spring. It gives an air of neatness and air of healthfulness—air full of health.

If you have to confine your fowls so that they have but a small run, be sure you keep it well spaded—that is, spade it often.

Little chicks want dry quarters, to do their best; but that does not mean that they should never touch anything but a board or stone floor.

Fowls like shade in summer. If you have no shed for them to air themselves in during the winter, a shade can be cheaply made, if there are no trees in their run or range, by using old boards or even poles with a few corn stalks or a little straw thrown over them.

Is the smell in your cellar all right? If it isn't, make it right. Get the bad air out and good air in, somehow. Fire is a great sweetener. Even when the cellar is too warm, a fire to change the air will leave the bees quieter as soon as it cools off.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Cease coughing, by using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It will cure you at once.

An interesting paper from our clear-headed contributor, "Nathan," on the second page of this issue, pleasantly shows how some of the difficulties which he found in Masonry were brushed aside by Masonic explanations. It is good reading.

We surrender most of our space this week to reports of reform work in New York and elsewhere. The one-day conference on April 25, in the great American metropolis, was an event of unusual interest, and, it is hoped, of important results in our reform.

The distressful news was received by friends in Chicago last week, that the youngest son of Rev. E. Hildreth, of Los Angeles, Cal., was drowned. The particulars we have not learned, but join with the many friends of the bereaved parents, and the readers of the Cynosure, in sincere sympathy for this loss to the household of the former treasurer of the N. C. Association.

President Cleveland, the Duke of Veragua, and their party of visitors to the Columbian Exposition, set a good example to some very reputable citizens of Chicago, by traveling so as to reach here on Saturday, and resting and attending church services on Sunday. Had the day been pleasant, the Fair grounds would have been, no doubt, as usual, thronged on that day with sight-seers.

Already the effects of the Columbian Exposition upon the cost of living among our citizens begin to be seriously felt in the increased prices of the necessities of life. It is not on account of any unusual scarcity, or the apprehension of any in the future, that causes this advance; it is simply the greed of the supply men, who are ready at every opportunity to avail themselves of the increased demand.

A. J. Millard, of Little Rock, Ark., one of the N. C. A.'s warm supporters, has been attacking Masonry manfully in about the last medium that one would expect—the Masonic Trowel, the official organ of the Grand Lodge in that State.

The Trowel characterizes it as a "curiosity," but makes no argument against our brother's article, except a flat denial of his charges. That is the customary logic of the fraternity.

The Lutheran Standard, for several weeks past, has been devoting a large space in each issue to a discussion of the evils of Freemasonry, by an intelligent contributor, who extensively draws his facts and figures from the history of the fraternity in Europe. There is probably no church on earth more persistently opposed to the evils of the oath-bound secret societies than the Lutherans, or one that so makes them a subject of ministerial investigation—particularly the German Lutherans.

It was intended, owing to the opening of the Columbian Exposition on Monday, to celebrate the semi-annual "Labor-day"—May 1—on Sunday, April 30, and the various unions of Chicago had about perfected their plans for a street parade in large numbers, with an afternoon outdoor gathering, to celebrate the event. Providentially a drenching rain, early Sunday morning and all that forenoon, compelled a postponement of the desecrating ceremonies. Man proposes, but God still rules.

The numerous conventions, congresses, and conferences which are to distinguish the Columbian Exposition this summer, are something wonderful in the variety of topics already underlined for discussion. Nothing of the kind has ever before been known on so extensive a scale; but if the different debates are conducted in an intelligent and Christian spirit, much benefit may accrue from some of them. The fine exhibit of the N. C. A., its June Conference, and its October Congress, will tend to greatly enlighten the public on at least one very important and interesting topic—the follies and dangers of secret societies.

The Converted Catholic of a recent date makes public some particulars concerning the last hours of General Sherman that are characterized by the General's brother, Senator Sherman, as an outrage. The General's wife, who died before him, was, as is well-known, an active Roman Catholic, and all her children were also members of her church. The General refused, always, to unite with it; and the story, as told by Father O'Connor, is this: When the General was dying, his children called in a priest, who sprinkled him with holy water. He was unconscious at the time and never regained strength to protest against this intrusion. It is not probable that its effect upon the dying hero was ever perceptible, except that it paved the way for his burial in "consecrated ground" beside his wife—a filial act that could not otherwise have been accomplished. There is an important lesson in it, however.

The great international naval review at New York, embracing twenty-seven war vessels belonging to England, Russia, Germany, France, Italy, Spain and the United States, with all the noise, pomp and circumstance pertaining to such a display, occurred on Friday, and was witnessed by immense crowds of sight-seers, the President of the Union, and a host of eminent statesmen and reputable citizens. It was undoubtedly the first time in history that there has been such a meeting of representative vessels for a peaceful and purely complimentary review, and it may properly be considered a tribute to our country's greatness among the nations of the earth. Not the least noticeable feature of the display were the three fac similes of the small Spanish caravels in which Columbus made his first voyage to the Bahama islands. It would be a source of great satisfaction to all Christians if they knew that these war vessels of mighty and rival nations would never be arrayed against each other in deadly conflict.

The Supreme Court of the United States, last week, handed down a decision in support of a law that favors the interests of saloon-keepers. Usually, the opinions of this final tribunal have been opposed to the dispensers of ardent spirits; but the case under consideration, in this instance, was peculiar. An attempt had been made by the Northern Pacific Railroad company to prevent the renewal, by certain county officers in Washington, of licenses previously granted to saloon-keepers. The ground of objection presented by the company was that the saloons in question were nuisances, and that the employes of the road, who must necessarily employ dynamite, steam, and other dangerous substances, in constructing the company's line through that country, were induced by the presence of these saloons along the route to become unfitted for the safe use of these materials, thereby causing delays in the work and loss to the company. The State courts had sustained the issue of the saloon licenses, and their decisions are now affirmed by the Supreme Court. This opinion is disastrous, not only to the interests of the railroad, but to all who have occasion to travel over it, exposed to the carelessness and vagaries of drunken workmen, armed with deadly explosives.

"O'ER THE REALMS OF PAGAN DARKNESS."

[The solo sung by Prof. J. A. Adams at the New York Anti-secrecy Conference, April 25, 1893.]

(Tune—Segur.)

O'er the realms of pagan darkness,
Let the eye of pity gaze;
See the kindreds of the people
Lost in sin's bewildering maze;
Darkness brooding, darkness brooding,
On the face of all the earth.

Light of them that sit in darkness,
Rise and shine, thy blessings bring;
Light to lighten all around us,
Rise with healing in thy wing;
To thy brightness, to thy brightness,
Let all men and nations come.

Yes, we trust the day is breaking—
Joyful times are near at hand;
God, the mighty God, is speaking
By his Word in every land;
Mark his progress, mark his progress—
Darkness flies at his command.

HOW THE CHURCH MAY RIVAL THE LODGE.

BY W. W. TEMPLETON.

[We commend this choice bit of sarcasm to those who deem the lodge more "benevolent" than the church.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

The church is sometimes compared with secret societies in regard to its benevolence and the care of its poor, to the disparagement of the former and the exaltation of the latter. The secret societies, it is claimed, take better care of their poor than does the church. But the church cannot compete with these associations until it adopts their methods.

1. The church will have to be more careful and discriminating in the reception of members. An initiation fee, larger or smaller, must be required of every person who is admitted to membership. Every member must also pay weekly or monthly dues, and thus establish a fund for the relief of the needy. It should also be understood that if any member becomes too poor to pay his dues, he will forfeit all right and claim to relief in case of need.

2. The church must be careful to exclude from her membership all who would be likely to need assistance. Every applicant must be sound in body. No invalids or cripples must be received. Every applicant should be required to bring a certificate of good health from some reputable physician, and must have some visible means of support. He must have a good trade or a prosperous business of some kind, so that he will not be likely to have to draw on the charity fund.

3. If the church would become as benevolent as the secret orders, she must not extend relief to any who are outside of her pale. Her charity must be confined to her own members. Perhaps it would be well to adopt a system of signs, grips and passwords, so as not to be imposed upon by any who are not entitled to her favor. Then, when she would find a man by the wayside, stripped, wounded and half dead, she could pass by on the other side. Not being able to give the signs, grips and passwords, he would not be entitled to any relief.

I can see no way by which the church can compete with the secret societies but by the adoption of the above principles.

Huntsville, O.

NOTE.—In last week's Cynosure it was shown, from Masonic authority, that the "benevolence" of the lodge is not a feature of its organization. Its charity is a personal privilege (not an obligation) on the part of its members, as individuals, to give what each pleases for the relief of brother Masons. It was also shown in the report of the Grand Lodge of Iowa for 1889, that it voted nearly $19,000 for its own expenses, salaries, etc., for the year, and $585 for charitable purposes. Is there a church on earth that can match this penuriousness?—EDITOR.

MASONIC INTRIGUE AT SCHUYLER'S LAKE.

BY ONE WHO KNOWS.

The Rev. Mr. T—— began spiritual life as a member of the Free Methodist church at West Burlington, and is supposed to have been as free from troubles as guile in that anti-secret denomination. Subsequently he became a member and pastor of the M. E. church. On being sent to the charge at Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., he first tolerated the presence of an Anti-masonic preacher in his pulpit and expressed a little of the reform sentiment of his former church; but on losing a few dollars in Masonic contributions, in consequence of it, and this being exaggerated into nameless terrors and still greater calamity, he, under the influence of an officious Freemason, a member of his church, showed a contrite spirit and a disposition to make amends to the injured and irate fraternity by favoring and being instrumental in the introduction of two Good Templar lodges in his charge, and becoming a member of one of them; although this institution, as is well-known, is but a stepping-stone or entering-wedge to a proselyting school or scheme for the Masonic lodge. The active trustee of the M. E. church at Schuyler's Lake, who professes Anti-masonry, but of a lukewarm and dubious character, acquiesced in the establishment of the lodges on persuasion of their beneficent tendencies, but objected to the permanent use of the church as a lodge-room on account of the injury to the edifice. This dissent, together with his previous admission of Anti-masonic speakers, excited the ire of the aforesaid Mason, who, however, in evident dissimulation, expressed a specious disapprobation of Masonry, and he, therefore, obviously resolved to rid the church of his authority and control by intrigue. Without giving the notice required by church rules in time and form, and disregarding other formalities, this Mason and his principal, the minister, had the obnoxious trustee removed by surprise and in his absence, and replaced by a Freemason outside the church; thus bringing the edifice under the absolute control of themselves and the Masonic lodge.

The dispossessed trustee objected to the informalities, and took counsel with a neighboring minister, who confirmed him in his position, and encouraged him in his attitude toward his opponents; and threats were made of bringing the matter before the conference. The Masonic intriguer had attained his object in removing his rival and arraying the church on the side of Freemasonry, but had also brought his principal into a disagreeable and vexatious dilemma; but this was a matter of indifference to him, as it is always expected that the cat's-paw will get burned.

The offending pastor, against whom the above-mentioned trustee has evidently other and secret objections, as he protests that he should not have been allowed to fill out the customary three years allotted to the ministers of his denomination, cast about him for some method of escape from his predicament. Perhaps he might have joined the Masonic lodge, which is a way sometimes adopted by persons in difficulty, and sometimes designed by the fraternity to recruit its numbers by rendering itself necessary; but he chose a different and unusual course. He again changed his faith, secured a reception in the Baptist church and resigned from the M. E. Thus his truckling to the lodge was without avail, and only resulted in perplexity and disgrace. Honor and clear conscience cannot be expected in the lodge and its alliances.

MASONIC DIFFICULTIES CLEARED.

A letter from an esteemed friend alludes to a recent conversation by saying: "I think you have some wrong ideas about the Masonic ritual."

I wish to reply to some things added in the same connection, and, as the points under consideration are liable to be of interest to others, I choose, as the medium of the reply, the Christian Cynosure.

I hope that answering through its columns, instead of by a letter mailed to him, will be acceptable to my friend. I would be sorry to find it otherwise, for he is one whose feelings I would regard with great consideration.

His opinion that my ideas are mistaken is worthy of serious attention for more than one respectable reason; for he is more than an intelligent man; he is an educated one, who has been in the active practice of two professions successively, and is now settled in an Eastern city as a physician.

He has also advanced so far in Masonry as to take all the degrees of the Commandery. He is an intelligent and experienced Mason, as well as a worthy man.

His opinion that I err in my judgment of Masonry is not to be lightly treated, even if less of personal regard than I feel for him would allow me to consider it lightly. I believe in his candor, and wish to match it with my own.

In his letter he continues from the sentence I have quoted: "The Commandery degrees are founded upon the Christian religion, and the life, birth, death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ are especially prominent and impressive facts in the degree of Malta."

"The early degrees carry you back to the old dispensation, but the later degrees recognize and honor Jesus Christ as heartily as does the New Testament itself."

"Masonic ritual is a growth, as well as the Bible itself; and while deism seems at first prominent, the new dispensation comes to the front later, and all the great facts of the Christian religion are emphasized duly and truly as you advance."

"Had you continued on, I think the whole thing would have cleared up, and the objections which you suggested would have entirely vanished."

I regard this as an honest statement of the opinion of a man intelligent enough to appreciate the expression of an opinion different from his own. As his own language is quoted, there is no danger of treating his opinions unfairly in a reply without giving a reader the means of detecting the mistake, and discovering how the reply fails to answer.

My first point is, that he recognizes my need of advancing beyond the Blue Lodge in order to have my objections "cleared up." This need is recognized in connection with the admission that "the early degrees carry you back to the old dispensation," and the one made a little later, that "deism seems at first prominent."

These admissions do not represent my own objections quite as exactly as I could state them; but all I care to mention here—because they seem to be all that are necessary in connection with what he says in this letter—are, that the Blue Lodge is religious, while yet it allows no profession of faith that is not deistical, and no ritual that is not pagan. I use these expressions without the vituperative meaning that one not a Mason might suspect. I only make the plain, simple statement of fact that the confession of faith is deistical, and the ritual is that of sun-worshippers.

I do not deny that, in spite of this, my friend does, in his own private thought, enlarge for himself the creed and sift the ritual. This, however, does not remove my objection.

I object that if he does this he must do it in spite of Masonry.

I object that other men, compelled by Masonry to be religious in some way, are sure to be so in a more or less Masonic way; and I count this a serious objection.

He allows that in order to have this grave objection cleared I need to advance beyond the Blue Lodge. That is not complimentary to the Blue Lodge.

It does not seem, for the moment, to occur to him that the "three symbolic degrees" of the Blue Lodge are all there is of true Masonry. He may never have read, from a high Masonic authority, a protest against so-called Christian degrees as sectarian and inconsistent with true, broad, charitable and universal Masonry.

It may not have fallen in his way to hear the Knights stigmatized by an enthusiastic devotee of genuine Blue Lodge faith as the "clowns of Masonry."

He forgets that the Council and Commandery are side-shows, and that nothing is needful to a complete Mason which he cannot get, and is not, in fact, compelled to receive, in the Blue Lodge. This, however, is an objection that might seem to him to have less force if Masonry were merely an object of contemplation. As such he seems, in fact, to be regarding it here, for he appears to regard it as a progressive system, satisfactory when contemplated as a whole.

But it is something besides a system to be studied. It is an agency. It is a practical, efficient working machine. The question is not what other machinery the Blue Lodge gears into, but what kind of work it turns out. If it teaches, what does it teach? If it influences men, what is its influence on them?

In answering such questions, I cannot forget his own statement that "deism seems prominent in the Blue Lodge." If it teaches deism, or if its influence is that of deism, then, surely I cannot but recognize this as an objection.

It is a serious one. It surely needs to be confessed, as it is in his letter, and then "cleared up," as he thinks it to be, by proceeding to the Commandery, or else, as I think it ought to be, cleared out.

This practical quality in the objection is emphasized by the practical fact that, whether Blue Lodge "symbolic degrees" were the sum of real Masonry or not, they would still be all of Masonry that a large proportion of the membership would ever see. How few in proportion to the mass enter the Commandery!

Blue Lodge religion is the religion of the larger class of Masons.

Still further, the Knights themselves continue to worship in the Blue Lodge, and even take part in initiating entered apprentices. Their having learned all about Christ's resurrection that my friend finds taught in the Malta degree, does not hinder their helping to bring Hiram Abiff to precisely the same resurrection as before.

If the ritual of the Blue Lodge, in which the great body of Masons find all their Masonic religion, and in which the Knights continue to worship, needs to have grave objections "cleared up," then that Masonry which is the largest part of Masonry, and which to many is the whole, is the Masonry that needs supplementing or explaining.

If this is so, the practical effect of this unexplained agent operating on the lives of men may need explaining, too.

Whatever may be the quality of the side-show called the Commandery, it does not redeem the deism or paganism of the Blue Lodge, in which the mass of Freemasons will forever abide. An ordinary Mason is none the less a deist because some one else, somewhere else, is, in some sense, a Christian.

Having tried to show that whatever the Blue Lodge may be as a mere object of contemplation, considered as a fragment of a system, it is still objectionable when operating as a complete and practical agency affecting the religious character of men. I turn to the claim which my friend makes for the Commandery.

He especially signalizes that degree of the Commandery called the Knight of Malta degree. The oath of this degree is taken with reference to the "sealed obligation" already taken in the preceding degree, so that it virtually reiterates that obligation. This obligation, peculiar to this degree, relates to the degrees by which a candidate must approach it. These are the three degrees of the Blue Lodge; with Past Master, Most Excellent Master, Royal Arch, Knights of the Red Cross and Knights Templar degrees. After these comes the Malta degree, which my friend thinks I rather need to clear up my difficulties.

But that eminent Masonic authority, Daniel Sickels, thinks otherwise. He says of the Blue Lodge: "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to insure him of the protection of the Deity, and guard him against ever going astray. These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more, which the soul of man requires."

Nevertheless, since my soul is found to require more, and since my friend has suggested something beyond this "perfect whole," let us look into this degree of Malta.

The various other degrees, by way of which it must be reached, according to the terms of its own obligation, some that postpone one's opportunities for availing himself of this means of grace. They must, at the same time, constitute a rather protracted and effective preparation. Between the Blue Lodge and this one, by its own showing, must come at least four more.

The fourth has already been found preparatory to the extent of furnishing the oath with the "sealed obligation".

It is enough to know that the "sealed obligation" cannot be duplicated outside of hell.

The ceremonies of opening the lodge include making the cutthroat signs of all the degrees, from the first to the present one. Devils would blush to make them. Then comes the Lord's prayer; and so the devilry begins to turn Christian, as the temptation of our Lord in the wilderness grew pious when the devil began quoting Scripture.

Here comes our new candidate, matured in the "perfect whole" of the three Blue Lodge degrees, where he has been ripened in the duty and privilege of construing all the "sectarianism," or Christianity, out of his religion, trained in the chapter to keep faith with criminals who appeal to him and help them, right or wrong, and a knight already under the suspended penalty of double damnation for his own sins and the unknown sins of the unknown dead man, from whose skull he drank the infernal fifth libation.

He comes right piously, entitled to admission by the pilgrim penitent's pass.

Having duly gone through the cut-throat drill, the lodge is duly and truly prepared to receive this penitent pilgrim, and accept his pass—"Golgotha". Again and again, at different stations, he repeats the word. What a means of Christian enlightenment this initiation begins to be! How my difficulties are clearing!

Again, the Lord's prayer: "Hallowed be thy name," sticks in my throat like Macbeth's "amen". But I enter fervently into the petition, "Lead us not into temptation."

And now, in connection with the sign of the degree, we get its name, Melita, and learn that it "alludes to the shipwreck of St. Paul". Rather sectarian for a true-blue Mason; but how the difficulties are clearing!

Here, indeed, is actually read the story of the viper shaken off his hand into the fire by Paul. There follows a performance which consists in acting Christ's interview with Thomas after his resurrection, when at length the "Eminent Commander" says: "My Lord," and the candidate, being prompted, adds, "and my God".

The grip taught in this performance has a name. That name is "Immanuel".

Who would think a Masonic grip could be such a means of grace?

How Christian this degree is! Why, even its very grip is called "Immanuel".

My difficulties are almost cleared. But the trouble is, I am collecting a heavy load of new ones.

NATHAN.

REV. T. B. MCCORMICK.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Through the kindness of James McCormick, editor of the Prohibition Era at Princeton, Ind., I obtained the accompanying cut of his father, Rev. Thomas Brown McCormick, who died at his home in Princeton, Oct. 2, 1892, aged 81 years. The Cynosure published his obituary soon after his death; but while I was at Princeton, recently, I heard so much about this good man that I wish to add another tribute to his memory.

In my youth nothing inspired me more than to read the lives of illustrious reformers. I write this in hopes of inspiring our young people with a deeper interest in those reforms for which our late Bro. McCormick sacrificed so much. The events in his life in brief are these: He was a native of Kentucky, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather was one of the Presbyterians who met in convention at Mecklenburg, North Carolina, May 20th, 1775, and signed a Declaration of Independence more than a year before Jefferson wrote the one of which he claimed to be the author. Mr. Bancroft says there is undoubted proof that Jefferson had this Mecklenburg Declaration before him and copied largely from it. Tucker, in his life of Jefferson, says: "Every one must be persuaded that one of these papers must have been borrowed from the other."

Mr. McCormick professed religion at the age of 20; and eight years afterward entered the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. In 1840 he removed with his family to Princeton, Ind., where he was pastor for a number of years.

When the slavery question became the burning issue in politics, and the fugitive-slave law was made a part of the United States Constitution, Mr. McCormick fearlessly espoused the cause of the Abolitionists. He had too much Scotch-Covenanter blood in his veins to allow himself to be made a slave-hunter for the South. In 1853 his Presbytery passed a resolution, by a vote of seventeen against three, forbidding their ministers to preach against slavery. Some years afterward they excommunicated Mr. McCormick from the church and from the ministry because he assisted fugitive slaves in their flight for freedom. Not satisfied with inflicting upon him this severest ecclesiastical penalty, they brought the civil law to bear upon him, by instigating Gov. Powell, of Kentucky, to require Gov. Wright, of Indiana, to deliver up Bro. McCormick, dead or alive, and offering a large sum for his arrest. He fled to Ohio, followed by the sheriff and deputy. They were almost upon him, when their buggy broke down, detaining them at a blacksmith shop. Following up the pursuit, they were again held in check by a heavy rain and a swollen stream, which enabled Mr. McCormick to reach the Ohio line in safety. The disappointed sheriff, who is said now to be an inmate of the Gibson county (Ind.) poorhouse, declared: "If ever Almighty God interfered in helping a man to escape, he did in that case."

Mr. McCormick afterward entered the ministry of the Congregational church, and resided at Oberlin, O., where his children were educated. He was endorsed by more than three hundred prominent ministers in the United States, and rose to national prominence as a lecturer for the New England Anti-Slavery Society, and went everywhere preaching the gospel of liberty against slavery. He was a candidate for Governor of Ohio on the Abolition ticket, and presided at the national convention that nominated John P. Hale for the Presidency.

The triumphant event of his life was in 1862. Governor Morton, of Indiana, then wrote him to return home to Princeton; and when a great mass meeting of the citizens of Princeton and vicinity was held in the court house that year, to celebrate President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, Mr. McCormick was the hero of the occasion, and was lifted over the heads of the people to the platform, amidst tremendous applause, when he made a thrilling address. What a change in public sentiment had been wrought in Princeton during those ten years; for only a few years before he was driven from the pulpit of one of Princeton's largest churches, and a reward offered by the Governor of the State for his arrest, obliging him to flee for refuge to Ohio!

After the slavery question had been settled by the war, he threw himself into the Anti-secret and Prohibition reforms, and never doubted the ultimate triumph of these movements. He lived to see almost as bitter opposition to these reforms as he had seen against the Abolitionists.

Before his death he attended services, most of the time, in the little Covenanter church of Princeton, sitting near the pulpit, for he was hard of hearing, and often nodded his assent to the points of the sermon. This church was the only one in Princeton that would open its doors for the discussion of the anti-secret question; and one of the largest churches in the place had sent away its pastor because he had allowed a woman to speak from the pulpit on the question of Prohibition.

Before Mr. McCormick entered the ministry, he joined the Freemasons; but a pious Christian woman was the means of opening his eyes to see the sinfulness of the institution, and he did not rest until he had renounced it as a dangerous enemy of Christianity. The Cynosure was his favorite paper, and he usually went on the street armed with it, and with anti-secret tracts. His testimony in public meetings was dreaded by time-serving and compromising Christians.

His son James now publishes, at Princeton, the Prohibition Era, the most reliable Prohibition paper in the State. He has inherited much of his father's devotion to reform, and should be sustained by all true friends of prohibition in the State.

There is a young people's reform organization in the Princeton Covenanter church, which cherishes the memory of Father McCormick.

"Our fathers to their rest have gone,
Their strife is past, their triumph won;
But sterner conflicts wait the race
That rises in their honored place:
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time."

SOME POINTED QUESTIONS.

An Eastern railroad secretary wrote to the Young Men's Era, stating that he and his companions would like to know "what sort of ideas the Western men grow." We at once set about attempting to collect some Western-grown ideas for the benefit of the Eastern men and all others interested. One result of inquiries sent out was the following letter from a secretary in the far West: "I believe we in the West have a good many ideas; the difficulty we find in carrying them out is what is troubling us—at least that is my difficulty in this place, where there are very few Christians, and those of a weak kind, and very little Christian sentiment. How can a good religious work be maintained at such a point? In a place where there is very little musical and literary talent, and dancing and card playing are the popular amusements, and these frequently furnished by church societies, how can a successful social work be carried on? In an association where the membership is so transient, the majority being on the change continually, how may workers be developed according to association ideas? How can one Christian association overcome the influence of twenty-two saloons and wide-open gambling hells in a town of 4,000 inhabitants? These are the questions which confront some of us in the West, which we would be pleased to have our Eastern brethren, and the Young Men's Era, discuss for us."—Young Men's Era.

ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE IN NEW YORK.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

This conference, originated and organized by Rev. W. B. Stoddard, was held in the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, in New York City, April 25, 1893.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, New England secretary of the National Christian Association, was chosen chairman, and Rev. F. M. Foster, secretary.

The chairman opened the proceedings with an interesting address, and was followed by several speeches from Rev. Mr. Martin, of Jersey City, N. J.; Mr. Cook, of Boston; Mr. A. Alexander, the secretary, and others.

On motion, the chair appointed the following committees:

Enrollment.—Rev. Messrs. Leave, Logan and Martin.

Resolutions.—Rev. Messrs. Foster, Parker and W. B. Stoddard.

Finance.—Elders Black and Alexander, and Rev. Mr. Steele.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard then explained various lodge charts, which elucidated the elements and character of Freemasonry.

These "chart-talks" of Bro. Stoddard, and not less the remarks of his son, Rev. W. B., were highly interesting and instructive.

At 11 A. M. the chairman introduced Rev. Stephen Merritt, who said that he had taken ninety-six (96) degrees in Masonry, and gave his reasons, in a forceful way, for leaving the lodge. His address was listened to with deep interest and close attention.

At its conclusion the conference took a recess until after dinner.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the conference reassembled. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Logan, of Brooklyn; after which the chairman introduced Rev. James Kennedy, D. D., who spoke of his experience, at the grave of a friend, with the rites of a secret society.

He was followed by Rev. Mr. Logan, who gave his reasons for opposing secret societies. They were strong, ably defined and well-received.

When he had concluded, Prof. R. L. Park gave a "chalk-talk," in his impressive manner; but a part of it was reserved for the evening session.

At this juncture an interesting episode occurred:

A Mason by the name of Class arose and objected to statements made by Mr. Stoddard, and insisted that Masonry was a good institution and stood to the church as did the Salvation Army. He manifested considerable spirit in his remarks, but refused to be catechized. This called out a number of speakers, and the chairman clearly and concisely answered his objections to the work of those who oppose the lodge, setting forth facts and arguments irrefutable in their exposure of the lodge system.

Another recess was then taken.

The evening service was opened with devotional exercises and a short address by the chairman on the necessity of a higher type of piety—a greater willingness to forego the things of time for those that pertain to eternity. He argued the necessity of taking Christ as our companion, and of following him in every work, whether popular or unpopular.

Rev. James Steele, pastor of the Twelfth Street Reformed Presbyterian church (new school), was then introduced to the conference. In his address he emphasized the idea of Christian people exalting the church, and the more so, at present as the energy which she should receive is now, in too many instances, given to the lodge.

The Committee on Resolutions reported as follows; and the report was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Societies, such as Masonry, Odd-fellows, and others similar thereto, whose fundamental principle is secrecy, are multiplying; are on the aggressive; are alluring into them multitudes of young men, who thereby, in the large majority of cases, are lost to the church and the work of Christ; and

WHEREAS, The growth, popularity, and aggressiveness of the various orders are largely due to the patronage and co-operation of professing Christians; to the unfaithful proclamation of the Gospel; to the failure to apply Bible truth and too often to actual participation in the lodge by the ministry; and

WHEREAS, Masonry, the parent of all similar institutions, leads multitudes to trust in it as an all-sufficient religion, when it is a Christless religion, accepted by the Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Chinese; and

WHEREAS, The oaths, laid as obligations upon candidates require them to swear away their liberty as free men in Christ, and under penalties which are as much the violation of divine law as suicide and murder; God having given to his creature no right to put up his life as the price of fidelity; and

WHEREAS, The principle of secrecy, as worked out in these many societies, is doing and has done harm in community, church and state, and is inimical not less to personal piety and saintship, than to citizenship; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That as Christians in conference assembled, as fearers of God and conscious of our accountability to him, we do call upon all followers of Christ to come out of and be separate from the lodge; and we do unitedly and unhesitatingly bear testimony against all societies founded upon and proceeding under the unscriptural and immoral principle—secrecy.

2. That we urge upon churches, whether great or small, the necessity of being free from these systems of darkness and iniquity, and we do call upon them to take a higher position in this great reform for the liberation and sanctification of souls.

3. That we condemn, as unscriptural and anti-Christian, the oaths by which these systems are held and perpetuated, and do urge upon those who have taken such obligations to repent, and would warn those who are urged to take them not to do so, lest their souls should be imperiled.

Rev. Mr. Parker, who was on the program for an address, was then introduced. He wields a faithful blade, and made a deep impression on his hearers.

The session was enlivened by a continuation of Prof. Park's interesting chalk-talk, and a solo by Prof. Adams.

At 10 P. M. the conference adjourned sine die.

As its sessions proceeded during the day, the interest in them had increased; and all returned to their homes well-satisfied, feeling that the seed sown will bring forth fruit in days and years to come.

REV. W. B. STODDARD'S REPORT.

228 W. 36TH ST., NEW YORK, }
Apr. 26, 1893. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Yesterday opened with a cold shower. As we wish the May flowers, we should welcome the April showers, though a different dispensation of providence would suit our plans better.

As New York friends have some grit to go with their grace, a goodly number gathered at the hour appointed for the opening of our conference, though we missed many faces that we had hoped to see. Had the people of New York known what they might have heard by attendance at this conference, there would not have been a church in the city large enough to have accommodated those who would have attended, rain or shine.

The conference was a success from beginning to end. Fifty-two dollars and twenty-five cents was contributed to aid in defraying expenses without special effort.

We noticed several in attendance from a distance. Rev. Mr. Scov, with a friend from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, and a gentleman and his wife from Philadelphia, were with us. He had united with the Masonic lodge, but his excellent wife, learning through N. C. A. publications of the abominations there practiced, helped him to leave. It is well to have wives posted, so that husbands wishing to obtain Masonic degrees can get them at home and save expense.

I may here give but a few of the practical thoughts presented, leaving a more detailed account to our secretary.

Brother Cook, a Christian worker from Boston, had become convinced by long observation that persons becoming interested in the lodge largely lost their vital piety and consequent interest in the church. He was glad to know more of our work.

Rev. Mr. Martin, of Jersey City, regarded the conference as practical. He inquired if the Black Knights of Malta were a part of Masonry. A Mr. Graham, belonging to that order, replied that they were not.

Rev. Mr. Foster spoke of the churches bearing testimony against secret societies, and hoped that the time would soon come when all churches should bear such testimony.

Mr. Black said that he was not a member of the lodge and had no desire to join, as he had something better.

Mr. Alexander believed in all contributaries; we should get down to foundation principles. Christ did this. A number of illustrations were given. Through the kindness and zeal of a former Sabbath-school pupil, he had been permitted to investigate Masonry. A book had been given him. He concluded from this book that the lodge had two aspects. It was both silly and religiously profane.

A surprise awaited the conference in the address of Rev. Stephen Merritt. Not being a short-hand reporter, I cannot give the Cynosure readers all the good news this brother had to bring. I wrote as fast as I could, and will give you, as best I can, what he said. He began by saying: "I feel rather strange. I scarcely know what to say. When Bro. Stoddard asked me to address you, something prompted me to say yes." Then, walking to the chart that father had been explaining, he said: "I think that Bro. Stoddard repeats, almost word for word, what I learned in the lodge. I went from the church to the lodge [pointing to the pictures of the church and lodge on the chart]. I found brethren who were doing this, and I thought I could do the same. I almost always go into whatever I go into with all my heart; so I went through all Bro. Stoddard has spoken of, and on beyond ⁷ took ninety-six degrees." He then expressed ⁸ surprise that father had given it so accurately, his belief that he had been there, etc. "I think I got my first set-back at the bedside of a brother. I called to pray with him. His wife was a Christian. When I spoke to him, he said: 'Worshipful sir, you made me a Mason. You taught me that if I walked upon the level and parted upon the square I would be all right. My wife is a Christian. She wants me to become a Christian; but I have followed your teachings. I am dying without God and without hope.' Then," said Bro. Merritt, "if ever I poured out my heart to God in prayer it was then. I prayed earnestly for the salvation of this brother, and then and there declared that I would have nothing more to do with the lodge." "I am trying to forget. Four years I went to school, night and day, to learn these things, and taught them to others. It has been brought back to my remembrance by the remarks of Brother Stoddard. I am glad I have been delivered from the lodge." Brother M. then spoke of the evil associations of the lodge, and remarked: "The lodge has made as many drunkards in our neighborhood as the Christian churches have made Christians. I have known Christian men to go into the lodge, and their lives go out in darkness. I could recall scores who have thus been led astray. While it helps with one hand, it cuts down with the other. A Mason opens a saloon. Brother Masons, members of his lodge, come into drink, to aid the brother, and secure other patrons to aid his business; so, I see, it dissolves men and leads them into darkness. Seeking light, they are led astray. I have in mind a Mason that has been to me thousands of times, trying to break loose from his lodge. If you have any sin in your heart you cannot have the indwelling of the Holy Ghost." Brother M. spoke of the reason why he went into Masonry so enthusiastically, as follows: "When I received my third degree, I was taken with the typhoid fever. My brethren of the lodge came and looked after me; they watched over and cared for me. When my life was given up they rubbed me, and I felt that to them, under God, I owed my life. My brothers in the church did not thus care for me. The members of the church did not, as they were afraid of the disease. I see now that this was the bait given by the enemy of all righteousness, thrown out to lead me astray."

Brother M. said that while he had spoken from his pulpit against the lodge, he had never, in a conference, spoke as he did to us. He said that he felt better; and I know that all Christians in the house praised God for his manly and true testimony, when I thanked him for speaking, and he thanked me for bringing him out.

A thorough baptism of the Holy Ghost is the only thing that will bring one out of ninety-six degrees of heathenish abominations to testify so faithfully. My heart warms whenever I think of this dear brother. May God bless him and make him even a greater power in pulling down the strongholds of Satan. It seems that he did not realize what the lodge was doing until called to the death-bed of one whom he had unintentionally led astray.

Rev. Mr. Kennedy spoke of the pleasure it gave him to attend the conference. He thought it was needed, and would do good. He referred to a funeral which he attended: "A man at the grave began to read some kind of a liturgy, much to his surprise. He was disgusted with it, and was led to pray most earnestly to Christ. Said the Doctor, 'I saw that man afterward, and inquired what all this meant; and, much to my astonishment, I found that he was not a Christian; that he was relying on Masonry to save him. I have no hesitancy in saying that Masonry is not only un-Christian but anti-Christian. Masonry takes the place of God's moral law. I asked a man to be a Christian, and he replied: 'I regulate my life on the square.' I asked: 'Where did you get your square?' The man did not know." The Doctor had looked up the definition of Freemasonry. He found it defined as beginning with imagination, continuing on fiction, and ending in absurdity. He thought this definition a good one.

Rev. Mr. Logan gave a telling address which he had evidently prepared with care. It was received with much applause. His reasons for testifying against the lodge were many. "They require men to violate conscience," said he; "anything which interferes with the proper exercise of conscience should not have an existence." Another prominent thought was "that secrecy is a just ground for suspicion." Reference was made to its coming between the husband and wife, which was contrary to the divine law. He found that in church work it greatly interfered. He thought statistics would show that but 5 per cent of the young men of our land belonged to the church. At least 75 per cent do not attend church. The question was then asked, where are these young men?

Bro. Logan is doing a grand work. It is to be regretted that his health is not the best. May he be strengthened for every good word and work!

But how shall I go on? There were so many grand addresses that I cannot report all. A young man, giving his name as Geo. B. Class, and stating that he was class leader in a large Harlem M. E. church, helped along nicely. This friend manifested a spirit and ability that I have seldom, if ever, met in a Masonic advocate. He had listened with great interest to what had been said. He was exceedingly grieved that we should be so ignorant of the subject that we were talking about. If we only knew the great, ennobling character of Freemasonry, he was sure we would not waste our time in such unprofitable discussion. We would do so much better to use our energy in showing the evils of cigarette-smoking, or something of that kind. Oh, how his heart had been uplifted to God in the lodge! His dear pastor was a member of the lodge to which he belonged, and he had been in the Worshipful Master's seat. He was now Senior Warden. A great number of the city pastors whom he named were active Masons. Of the signers of the Declaration of Independence all but three were members of the lodge, etc., etc. This called many to their feet and added enthusiasm to the conference. We were there for light, and wanted any that this friend might have to give; we were glad that he had come to us so generously in our benighted condition to set us right; but lo, and behold! he refused to be catechized. He found it necessary to decline to answer questions asked, but he would explain, in just a minute, very clearly, why Masonry omitted Christ. He would make it very plain to us. It was because Masonry was so much older than Christ. He had been told that there were beautiful degrees further on where Christ was recognized. We thanked the friend for his assistance, and passed on, praying that God would in love open his eyes in spite of his pastor and those who were so leading him away from Christ.

Rev. Mr. Steele spoke of the fact that we live in days when knowledge has increased in the earth. There must be specialists. He was glad that there were those engaged in this special work. The statement made regarding knowledge also applies to secret orders. Every man, every woman, has a certain amount of energy, a certain force, in the world. If this is dissipated it will harm the individual. We should magnify the church, and give our energy to it instead of organizations that detract.

Rev. James Parker related an incident. A meeting was being held in Marshalltown, Iowa. It was for men only—an evangelistic meeting. The first speaker commended secret societies. Evangelist Bunce, who spoke next, after enumerating a number of evils that young men should shun, prepared the way for what he had to say by stating that some would not like to hear what he was about to express. Then followed a denunciation of the lodge. He did not purpose to leave one evil (the Catholic church) to go into another. One thought impressed itself on Bro. Parker's mind. After speaking of the gamblers, saloon-keepers and others of like repute, he said: "These are men that are running the lodges!" How this tallies with Brother Merritt's testimony!

I must not pass without reference to Prof. Park's chalk-talks. They proved to be just the thing. In long sessions the mind tires in grasping so much. The pictures were both pleasing, entertaining and instructive.

Rev. F. W. Farr, who has charge of the training-school connected with Rev. Mr. Simpson's church, made some telling remarks at the conference, and extended a cordial invitation for father and myself to address the students. Father spoke an hour there this morning and reported that he could scarcely get away, the young people were so eager for the facts. God bless this dear brother and his noble work. Truly our God is marching on.

All appreciated the solo Prof. Adams so kindly gave us.

Time forbids more at this writing.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., on the train for }
HARTFORD, April 26, 1893.

After a busy week in New York City, I left there this afternoon, bringing with me many pleasant memories of persons and events. The conference, which closed last evening, will be fully reported by others. It was wisely planned, well-executed, ably addressed, and my opinion is expressed in the single word "Success."

Doors were opened for further meetings, but previous engagements in Connecticut prevented my accepting more than a single invitation before leaving the city. Vice-president and Prof. F. W. Farr arranged for me to meet the students of the "New York Missionary Training College" in the "Gospel Tabernacle," at 11 o'clock to-day, and speak to them. There were probably one hundred present, and by the aid of my chart I gave them some knowledge of how a man is made a Mason, and of the anti-Christian character of the secret society system. All were attentive. Many questions were asked, and as I was put in contact with consecrated souls, who are in training for fields of Christian labor in this, and perhaps in every land, I felt that the opportunity was one of deep significance. Further information was greatly desired, and the Professor assured me of a cordial reception whenever I could visit and speak to them on the subject.

Dr. Simpson is at present abroad, but his work is carried on successfully, by his able co-laborers, in his absence.

As in the past, and even more abundantly in the future, may God bless and prosper this work and those to whose care he has committed it.

REV. W. C. PADEN IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

AUGUSTA, Kan., April 25, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Wednesday, April 12, I attended the meeting of the Arkansas Valley Presbytery of the United Presbyterian church. I had hoped to address the meeting briefly, but did not gain an opportunity.

On Friday, according to previous arrangement, Mr. Coppock, Superintendent of the Chillico Indian Institute, in the Territory, came to Arkansas City to take me down to the Institute, six miles below, over the border. It was through the Misses Paxton, whom I knew a number of years ago, that this arrangement was made. I desired to visit the Institute, and, in addition, the Misses Paxton arranged that I should give the school an address on temperance, in the evening. The Misses Paxton are engaged in the work here.

I was very kindly received by all whom I met. I spent some time in the school-rooms. Those above the lowest grades are engaged in preparing work for their exhibition at the World's Fair.

I was surprised and gratified as I examined the work in the school-rooms in preparation for their exhibit. The work was commendable, and much of it beautiful, in point of penmanship, as well as in point of composition. The Misses Paxton showed me over many of the buildings, as did afterwards Superintendent Coppock. There are about 230 Indians at present in the Institute. The Institute has a reservation of thirteen sections, or 8,320 acres. It is a beautiful tract of land, as fine, says Sup't. Coppock, as there is in the strip. A certain portion of each day is devoted to labor by the Indians. Some work on the farm, under the head or assistant farmer; some work in the shoe-shop, under the shoe-maker; some work in the tailor-shop, under the tailor; the girls work in the sewing-room, etc., etc. Last year there were about 15,000 bushels of corn raised; 6,000 bushels of oats and 5,000 bushels of wheat. There is garden-stuff in abundance; and there were 25 acres in potatoes last year. There are a number of new and commodious buildings, in stone, now in process of erection. They are circumscribed in their quarters now, but are looking forward to larger room and enlarged facilities, and expect to have a larger number of Indians with them.

In the evening, shortly after 7 o'clock, over 200 of the Indians, with a number of the teachers and others, assembled in the chapel; and, after devotional exercises, I was introduced by Sup't. Coppock to address them on temperance. I talked to them pointedly for about half an hour, and seemed to have good attention and some appreciation. It was my first experience in addressing such an audience, but it was certainly an interesting experience. I hope that some seed was dropped that will take root. I am happy to record my earnest conviction that the children and young people are under good influences here. I had a very pleasant contact with the teachers and others engaged in the work. There is abundance of hard work being done here. It is no rocking-chair affair; yet I was impressed with the cheerfulness and good-will manifested on all hands. My prayer is that God's blessing may continue to rest upon the work and workers. As I heard the little ones recite, and examined the work of the larger ones, I was impressed with the thought that Pope's lines are no longer applicable:

"Lo, the poor Indian, whose untutored mind," etc.

Here, in this school, and in such government schools, we find an index finger pointing to one of the leading elements in the solution of the Indian question.

R. N. COUNTEE IN TEXAS.

GALVESTON, Tex., April 18, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wrote to you some few weeks ago from this, the "Lone Star State," and I desire now to let you and the readers of the Cynosure know how I find things in this part of the Master's vineyard.

Since I last wrote to you I have had cause to shed many a tear because of the condition of affairs as I find them among our churches. I tremble sometimes as I speak in the churches, and, out of them, privately and publicly, against the prevailing sins and iniquities all over Texas.

Leaving Dallas, where I had to fight whisky-drinking, cigar-smoking and secret societies among the pastors of the churches, and even in their own pulpits, I took the Houston & Texas Central R. R., and on Easter Sunday, or "Resurrection Sunday" (?) as they call it, I found myself in Calvert. I was cordially invited to preach and speak in three of the churches—two Baptist and one Methodist. I accepted the invitations; and on entering the Baptist church at 11 A. M. Sunday (Easter) I was filled with righteous indignation when I saw a basket filled with dyed eggs and the house decorated, and I spoke with no uncertain sound from Galatians 4:10: "Ye observe days, and months, and times and years;"

CORRESPONDENCE.

DON'T WANT THE LIGHT.

WENONA, Ill., April, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One of your subscribers, who takes an interest in circulating the Cynosure, inquired of a Gospel minister, recently, if he was receiving a copy. "Not now," he replied; "I did get two or three numbers, but wrote to them that I did not want the paper, and had not subscribed." "I intended to pay for your copy," replied the canvasser. "I furnished Bro. K— a copy, who was on this circuit before you. He was a Freemason, and, after reading the paper a few weeks, he became convinced that the ceremonies of Masonry are wicked in some respects; especially the mock-death and resurrection of the candidate. The result was that he forsook the lodge." "Well," said our minister, "I don't want to read a paper that abuses my friends. Many of my relatives and friends are in the Masonic lodge. They are good men. The Cynosure makes false statements about them. I found things in that paper that are not true." "In regard to what has it lied?" he was asked. "Is it to the revelation of lodge secrets you have reference?" "Well," answered his reverence, "the Cynosure tries to make it out that it is sinful to belong to lodges. I have every confidence in my friends who are in the lodge. They say there is nothing wrong in Masonry." "Now," replied our Cynosure man, "suppose that in your church there are two good men, as you designate them, who belong to the Masons. They both tell you, to-day, there is nothing wrong in Masonry. One of them begins to investigate the subject more particularly. After awhile he comes to you and tells you he is fully convinced that it is wrong for him to practice Freemasonry. Observe, now, one of your good men has changed his opinion. He requests you to interview his brother Mason and brother Christian in regard to the truthfulness of his statement. You approach him. He simply plays mum—will say nothing; or, perhaps, if you press the matter, will reiterate his old testimony, that there is nothing wrong about it. What would be your opinion now about the truthfulness of your two good men? Which will you believe?" "Oh, well," exclaimed his reverence, "that is only a matter of conscience." Now it here occurs to the writer that a man's conscience is a rather important factor in his make-up; and that spiritual advisers should be more ready to believe a penitent man than an impenitent one in reference to whether a certain action is sinful or not. A tender conscience is certainly more reliable than a hardened one. However, this is a digression.

"Some of our people are of opinion that you are a Freemason," suggested the Cynosure canvasser at this point. "Well, I have a right to be, if I want to. It is none of their business," replied the reverend gentlemen, with considerable emphasis. "Of course," admitted the other, "and a man has a right to go to hell if he wants to. This is a free country." "Yes," assented his reverence.

Upon reflection the Cynosure agent afterward admitted his position in regard to this matter as wrong. "Ye are not your own. Ye are bought with a price," is one of the plain declarations of the Gospel. Christ has a clear title to every man, and no one has a right to go to hell; no more right than has a preacher of the Gospel to act as a decoy to lead our young men into "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness;" but his plain duty is to "rather reprove them."

"I have concluded to join the Grand Army, if opportunity presents; and, if I find it all right, perhaps I can persuade you to come in," continued our religious adviser. "I have this to say in answer to that," replied the Cynosure advocate; "I would not take your word for it." Here the interview ended.

"What are we coming to?" some fastidious reader may exclaim while reading this. "Has it come to this, that men will show so little confidence in Gospel ministers?" It has, dear reader, so far as ministers who stand up as advocates of secret lodges are concerned; and, if you will investigate, the cause of this lack of confidence will be quite apparent. If they sow to the wind, they must expect to reap the whirlwind. It is right to manifest our indignation at the conduct of men who pose before the people as Gospel ministers and stoop so far beneath the dignity of their profession as to crawl into secret lodges. Whenever a minister forms an alliance with lodgemen and lodge principles, he does, in the very nature of things, divorce himself from that part of his congregation outside of his lodge. If the subject of secret societies is mentioned to him, by an outsider, he cannot talk with that candor that will be looked for by his listeners. A due reverence for his calling may check most persons from denouncing his lack of frankness, but a lack of confidence in his candor will exist just the same in their minds; for one, the writer is bold to say that, in talking with ministers who advocate and belong to secret lodges, he sees the same disposition to prevaricate and conceal the truth as is displayed by other men. How can we have confidence in men who go about claiming to have some valuable secrets that they are sworn to keep, and yet set themselves up as being called to preach a gospel, the Author of which, when asked by his opponents of his doctrine, said: "I ever spake openly to the world, and in secret I said nothing?" It is asking too much even of the most credulous. It is the greatest fallacy for defenders of secret societies to argue that all is right in these organizations because so-called good men belong to them. This style of reasoning is manifestly unscriptural. Christ says: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Lodge advocates reverse Christ's own logic by saying that by the good men ye shall know the fruit. Christ's rule is, that men prove themselves to be good or bad by their acts. Lodge advocates' rule is, that acts are proved to be good because good men perform the act. If some of these infallible lodge ministers had been in old Father Adam's place, it certainly would have been a very fortunate thing for our race. They could not have touched the forbidden fruit; or, if they had, they could have effectually concealed their action by swearing themselves not to tell it; and, when taken task by the Almighty, they could have pointed to their oath and said: "I would be a perjured villain if I revealed the secret." Evidently, if the theories of secret societies are correct, the inventors could have outdone the devil in circumventing the God of all creation.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Home and Country for April, the third issue under the adroit management of Mr. Jaros, shows increased improvement, and is rapidly augmenting in value and attractions. Since his regime commenced he has gathered around him about a dozen of America's competent literary lights, and, with the help of several able artists, is making his magazine a most desirable visitor. The frontispiece commemorates the interment of our Lord, in connection with "The Miracle of History," by Dr. J. J. Law, which is also otherwise finely illustrated. Among the other papers upon which the artists have displayed their talents, are some of the following: The Manhattan Club, by Henry M. Stevens; Mrs. Margaret Ray Wickens, Tenth National President of the Woman's Relief Corps, and A Work of Art—both by Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer; America's Spanish City (Santa Barbara, Cal.), by Edward Lathrop; The Wonderful Performances of Yogis and Fakirs, by Samuel Jaros; Columbian Bell of Freedom, by Minnie F. Mickley; The Boy who Sailed with Columbus, by Jay Ross; Food and Feeding, and Approved Cooking Recipes, by Julia R. Howard; Song for Boys and Girls, words by Rev. Newman Hall, with music by Griffith; Something About Dogs, by Ernest Whitton; Raspings on File, by Theophilus Rasp; A Study of Chiromancy, by Helen A. Johnson; The American Soldier, by Henry W. Knight; Sicilian Vespers, with music, by Charlotte W. Hawes; The Telegraph, and Wire-Tapping in War, by Lieut. Geo. W. Swift; Dress and its Science, by Mrs. S. S. Wood; with poems and stories, by several writers. Published by Joseph W. Kay, 96, 98 Maiden Lane, New York City.

The Cosmopolitan, in the improvement of its latest issues, is rapidly reaching that degree of excellence that will make it second to none of its contemporary periodicals. The April number, which concludes its fourteenth volume, is a fine specimen of American Magazine, presenting a choice repertory, both in literature and embellishment. The nine leading and illustrated papers are these: Sohul, by Sir Edwin Arnold, a poem; Lent Among the Mahometans, by Frank G. Carpenter; Purses, Pockets and Personal Receptacles, by S. Wm. Beck; The University of Chicago (with portraits), by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen; Historic Figure-Heads, by Robert G. Denig; The Great Florida Phosphate Boom, by Alfred Allen; Inaugurations and Coronations, by Fred. S. Daniels; Berliners, by Friedrich Spielhagen; Omega—The Last Days of the World (destroyed by a comet), a fanciful old idea renewed, by Camille Flammarion—Frenchy, but interesting. Other articles include: Democracy and City Government, by Edwin A. Curley; A Traveler from Altruria (continued), by W. D. Howells, and Dorastus, by Gertrude Hall. Published in New York City.

Worthington's Illustrated Magazine for May shows remarkable progress and growth on the part of this highly entertaining periodical. It has been enlarged by sixteen pages in order to give space for timely contributions. Good as all previous numbers are, the issue for May is the best of all. The number opens with an able and interesting paper by Lita Angelica Rice, entitled Some Women Artists of New York City. The numerous and beautiful illustrations are from original drawings, and from photographs made from the paintings. The second illustrated paper is A Summer in Hoch Tyrol, by Mrs. Jean Porter Rudd. It is a sketch of life in a typical Tyrolean village. Mrs. Livermore's fifth paper of her personal experiences in Ole Virginny—Fifty Years Ago, is full of incident and interest. Charles Lamb and His Letters is a most admirable paper, by Spencer Leigh Hughes, upon the private writings of the humorist, for whom all students of English literature feel a genuine interest, if not affection. The short stories will find interested readers. The poetry of this number is fairly good. The department matter is well chosen and interesting. Altogether, it is a choice number of a good magazine. Published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn.

Historia for April (the second number of the third volume of this illustrated monthly magazine of historical stories) is replete with instructive narratives of a sort to captivate the youthful reader and interest older ones. The Early Days of Napoleon; The Baron of Pentagoet (continued—A Scrap of New England History); The Man in the Iron Mask; My First Scout; Columbus' First Voyage, and Henry Bernard, a tale of the French Revolution, make up a varied list of contents for the month. Chamber of Commerce Building, Chicago; published by the Historia Company.

NOTES.

The May Century will contain an article on Relics of Artemus Ward, illustrated with a portrait of the great American humorist made at twenty years of age, and brought to light under peculiar circumstances. The photograph was taken in Toledo, Ohio, after he went from Tiffin, where he began his newspaper work. There is only one copy in existence.

Messrs. A. S. Barnes & Co. (New York) have in press a book entitled "Looking Within; the Misleading Tendencies of 'Looking Backward' made Manifest." As its title suggests, it is a reply to the suggestive plans in "Looking Backward" for a revolution in present social and governmental methods and ideas. The book is written in the form of a novel, a complete narrative of absorbing interest forming the principal artery through which its various characters expound and enlarge their ideas on the labor question, governmental control, etc. Exciting episodes of new and startling phases retain the reader's interest to the end, and the imagination is given full play, amidst scenes and events happening in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. The book will be ready about May 15th.

PAMPHLETS.

The American Citizen Co., 7 Bromfield street, Boston, publish in a fine pamphlet four lectures on "Romanism, the Evil and its Remedy, delivered in Music Hall, Boston, in 1892," by Rev. J. M. Foster. Some of these are familiar to our readers, and all are excellent. It may be obtained by sending to the above address.

We are indebted to the publishers, or some kind friend in England, for a copy of the London Lancet's report from its special sanitary commission of inquiry concerning the water supply of Chicago, reprinted from the Lancet of April 8, 1893. Although the report of these scientific gentlemen is not flattering as to the superior excellence of our drinking water, the amount of information relating to the sources of its supply and the operations of our water-system and its capacity, is large and valuable. It is worthy of preservation for reference.

The fifth annual report of the Bureau of Justice, in this city, covering the history of its transactions during 1892, has been received. This institution, at whose head are many reputable gentlemen, is engaged in a good work, as shown in the record before us. In the course of the past year the bureau investigated and brought to settlement 4,020 cases of injustice to persons in poor circumstances. These included unpaid claims for wages, wrongful taking of personal property, chattel mortgage matters, wrongs to women and girls, and crimes of various kinds. But for the intervention of the bureau most of the victims would have been powerless to secure their rights. It is also seeking to have the Legislature abolish the justice of the peace courts and their infamous fee system; it is urging the establishment of a loan bank for the people, so as to free them from the tyranny of chattel-mortgage sharks, and it is endeavoring to expose and frustrate the schemes of fraudulent intelligence offices, installment companies and mutual benefit societies. It hopes, with the help of the public, to accomplish much in this line in the future.

OBITUARY.

Died in the town of Waupun, Wis., April 16, 1893, DANIEL S. DEAN.

Bro. Dean was born in Queensbury, Warren Co., N. Y., September 25, 1821. He was the youngest of a family of seven—five daughters and two sons. Although brought up in the faith of his parents, who were Quakers, he was converted and joined the Methodist church at the age of fifteen.

September 19, 1848, he was married to Miss Martha Griffin, who died October 22, 1850, leaving an infant daughter, Jennie S., who married at the age of twenty, died at the age of twenty-two, and, with her little child, is now peacefully resting by the side of her father.

In November, 1857, Bro. Dean married Miss Adelia M. Goodrich, of Benson, Vermont.

In June, 1855, he came to Wisconsin, and settled on the place where he died. Sister Dean and their daughter, Mrs. Amadon, her husband and the little grandchild, have the sympathy of many friends, for we know they will miss him very, very much.

He was an even, steadfast Christian, and his greatest praise comes from old Christian neighbors who have been acquainted with him during his long residence in Waupun.

The funeral was held at his residence at 9:30 on Tuesday morning, the 18th of April. The sermon, in accordance with the request of the departed, was preached by Rev. W. R. Moon, pastor of the Free Baptist church of Waupun.

Bro. Dean and Bro. Ellis Whiting were united in friendship and the principles of reform, working, as it were, hand-in-hand to promote the interests of the National Christian Association here. They were not long separated, and the same dear brother reformers that knew Bro. Ellis Whiting will retain Bro. Dean also in affectionate remembrance; and God's own loving arms will surround them all. Bro. Dean had an exalted opinion of Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, and his powerful God-given influence. Some years ago, he said to me: "I pray to God to lengthen out the days of that powerful old Christian hero."

Only a few weeks ago, while returning from church, Bro. Dean met me, and with an animated countenance, radiant with smiles, requested me to write his obituary. I was somewhat surprised, as he was looking usually well; but he stopped in his carriage, and made that request. I did not answer him then; but considering the times his life had seemingly been lengthened out, I thought that perhaps he had a premonition that his earthly work was about finished. He called on us once after that and spoke about Bro. Ellis Whiting. I then told him that if I outlived him, I would write his obituary. He said: "I want but little written."

Many of us will miss his friendly calls and kind words; but we know that he contemplated death with a smile, and we feel that to him it was a bright door opening into heaven.

The friends will now know when calls are made to aid this important reform, and there is no response from Bro. Dean, that his kind, benevolent heart has ceased to beat, and that his work on earth is done.

We miss him now, but we will all soon

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1893.

SOME WORLD'S FAIR ITEMS.

The report of Director General Davis to the National Commission is, beyond all comparison, the most remarkable showing of the kind ever made. The number of buildings, exclusive of booths, at the Fair grounds is about four hundred, and the average space occupied is about an acre to a building. But the architectural grandeur and artistic beauty of the buildings are even more remarkable than the magnitude. The total cost of the Exposition, exclusive of the exhibits, is set down as $33,248,930.55. Add to these figures what the States have spent, and we have, in round numbers, $40,000,000. This total is not a grand total, the exhibitors, National and State, having expended millions more.

The celebrated "Liberty bell," which first rang out the declaration of the American colonies, July 4, 1776, that they would no longer be subservient to the government of Great Britain, has safely arrived at the Fair grounds, where it will form a conspicuous exhibit. Its passage from Philadelphia to Chicago resembled a triumphal ovation. Philadelphia has also generously sent her precious Independence Hall relics, which will find a place in the Pennsylvania State house and will make that building one of greatest interest to thousands of patriotic Americans. Some of these relics are a portrait of William Penn, a copy of the original charter of Pennsylvania, punch bowl used by Washington during the Revolution, portrait and plaster cast of the face of Washington taken shortly after his death, a sword of "Mad" Anthony Wayne, an ale mug that belonged to Paul Jones, manuscript of the first prayer in Congress in the handwriting of John Hancock; together with numerous other relics pertaining to the Revolution and the early settlement of the State.

Dates of the various congresses to be held during the World's Fair are announced by President C. C. Bonney as follows: May 15, The progress of woman; May 22, The newspapers; May 29, Medicine and surgery; June 5, Temperance; June 12, Reforms, social and moral; June 19, Finance and commerce; July 3, Music; July 10, Literature; July 17, Education; July 31, Engineering; Aug. 7, Government; Aug. 14, Horticulture; Aug. 21, Science; Aug. 28, Labor; Sept. 4, Religion; Sept. 28, Sunday rest; Oct. 13, Sanitary affairs; Oct. 16, Agriculture. The congresses will be held in the new Art palace on the Lake Front.

Chairman Peck, of the Finance Committee of the World's Fair corporation, says, in his report to the Executive Committee: "The recent act of Congress requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to retain 1,141,760 of the Columbian half dollars appropriated by the act of Congress of August 5, 1892, is a serious impairment of our resources, and is incomprehensible to your committee; and in the judgment of your committee is a violation of the conditions of the act of Aug. 5, accepted by the Board of Directors. The amount of the appropriation withdrawn thereby is more than one-fifth of the entire aid granted by Congress to your corporation, and leaves us lacking that large amount in meeting our obligations made upon the faith that the Congressional appropriation could be relied upon, and that the entire amount so appropriated and accepted by your board would be paid."

—Rev. P. B. Williams, of Portland, Ore., will give his entire time to our reform work in Oregon and Washington after the first of June. He has already secured twelve appointments for lectures on secret societies and their evils. Cynosure readers on the Pacific coast are urged to write to him. If new appointments for him cannot be readily made, let him feel that you are in harmony with him, and that he is remembered in your prayers and gifts to the Lord's cause.

—Among the noted individuals who have been attracted to Chicago by the World's Fair is the Duke of Veragua and his family, consisting of his wife, son, daughter and brother, lineal descendants of Christopher Columbus. Coming to America by invitation from the United States government, as honored guests, their visit to Washington, last week, was a special event. From the President down to the humblest private citizen, Washington strove to give them an appropriate welcome. It was particularly so, as the District of Columbia was named in honor of their illustrious ancestor. From Washington they went to witness the great naval review at New York, and then, coming to Chicago, they participated in the opening ceremonies of the Exposition, receiving marked consideration from citizens whose hospitable doors were opened to them. They seem to be very nice people.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn., keeps the light burning in that State. He is about to start out on a visiting tour to the churches in various localities. Those who would like to have him call on them should write to him at once, at 74 So. Robert St., St. Paul.

The N. C. A. cannot pay the agents only as it receives funds from the readers of the Cynosure. It has always been necessary for lecturers to take collections and donations from individuals, to supplement what is paid directly from the N. C. A. treasury. Rev. W. C. Paden has been laboring in Kansas during the last month, and although he preached two or three times acceptably on Sabbath, and lectured three times during the week, did not receive enough during the month to pay his car fare from place to place. It must be that the friends of Kansas do not understand the necessity of not only bidding him welcome but also of helping him and his little family to live. The laborer is worthy of his hire. There has been no complaint, only a statement, of the facts. Kansas is being overrun with the plague of secret societies, a hundred-fold more harmful to her welfare than the grasshopper plague that devastated her green fields. How careful ought we to be to help those who leave home for Christ's sake to warn us of our danger! Three hundred and fifty dollars ought to be raised in Kansas immediately. Bro. Paden has labored in that State for months, faithfully, and needs the money. If sent to this office for him it will be forwarded to him.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Optimist or Pessimist?—A bright example—Matters legislative—Vermont's liquor law—What are "the mechanic arts?"—Lucy Larcom.

"Is the world growing worse or better?" is one of the most common questions of the present day, and answered with "Yes" or "No," according as people hold pessimistic or optimistic views;—in other words whether they look through rose-colored or indigo-blue glasses. But I see no reason why we should look at the world through a colored medium at all; and if we, like wise people, use the plain glasses of literal fact, we shall find that our reply will depend much on the point of view. For instance, if we look at the recent instances of lynching at the South, the torturing and burning alive of Negroes at the stake, the Dark Ages could furnish us with nothing worse. And now a committee which has been investigating affairs at the Connecticut State's Prison has revealed a condition of things which, if it can be duplicated in other penal institutions—and I fear it may, in some at least—calls loudly for an American Howard to arise and work a reformation. The officials have managed until now to cover up their brutal inhumanity, and it is only a wonder that the day of revealing has not come sooner. In the management of the Massachusetts State's Prison there is certainly a screw loose, for attempted escapades, riots and explosions have come, in that institution, to be matters of common, everyday occurrence. The prisoners were allowed, under Warden Lovering, to have pets, and it is said that the spirit of revolt in the convicts has been roused by the summary manner in which these have been taken away from them with the advent of the new warden, lest they should utilize the wire of the cages for forging weapons of defense or escape. To deprive a prisoner of one of the most refining and humanizing influences that can be brought to bear upon him on the mere hypothesis that he may abuse the privilege, seems questionable as a simple matter of policy. Nor is it clear to the average reader why the Boston City Council should fight over the question of thanking Mrs. Alice Lincoln, and others who co-operated with her in the gift of rocking chairs to the poor women on Rainsford's Island; nor why Alderman Flood should class this lady, for her deed of philanthropy, among "fanatics." I fear we have not yet learned either how to prevent the making of criminals and paupers, or how to treat them after they are made.

But there is a brighter side to look at. Never was there so much devoted Christian philanthropy as now; never were there so many men and women whose lives make them walking Gospels; and, last but not least, never were there so many consecrated pocket-books in the world. A few weeks ago a single hat collection at the church of Dr. A. J. Gordon netted $8,000, and the collections of this same church for mission work the past year have amounted to $17,540. It adds greatly to the interest of this item that much of it was given by laboring people who had to work hard for every dollar they earned. Through the groans of this travailing creation, every now and then, pierces a note that tells of patient heroism, of martyr-like fidelity, of Christ-like self-abnegation; and he that has ears to hear can always discern it.

The Connecticut Legislature has done an excellent thing in passing the anti-pool law. It was originally intended to apply to betting at horse-races, but it is so stringently worded as to include all kinds of gambling in the way of bets and wagers. This is a kind of prohibition which, if properly enforced, will prohibit, and it is to be wished that every State in the Union would follow her good example.

A postal in the interests of the endowment orders of the Massachusetts Legislature, reflecting severely on certain members, and threatening all who continue to oppose them with political ruin. This shows the animus of that brood of vipers spawned by the mother-serpent of Masonry. They are at present "scotched but not killed," and have both the ability and the will to use their fangs with venomous effect.

The House has squelched the bill appropriating $5,000 for an investigation by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, upon the relation of the liquor traffic to crime, pauperism and insanity. Yet four times this amount was appropriated to fight the gipsy moth. Is a tree better than a man in the estimation of these astute legislators? One would think so. Madame de Stael once said of her bitter enemy, Napoleon, that she felt assured of his downfall as soon as she saw that "he no longer cared to know the foundation of things." The Massachusetts Legislature, as a body, seems to have fully reached this sublime pitch of Napoleonic indifference. It merely emphasizes the imperative need of a sprinkling of women among our law-makers. What would we think of the housekeeper (especially now that everybody is expecting a cholera year) who refused to have the dirty corners investigated, though so filled with disease-breeding filth as to be a stench in the nostrils? But this is exactly what these housekeepers for the State are doing in thus refusing to investigate the saloon business. Vermont solves the liquor problem by refusing to give any druggists' licenses, that prolific source of intemperance, and bane of all prohibition workers. In every town she employs one agent, who is paid a good salary, but allowed to sell only to those who can show a written certificate from a physician that it is to be used only for medicinal purposes. The same order cannot be used twice, and both agent and physician are liable to a heavy fine if they violate the law by permitting its sale otherwise than as a medical prescription. Vermont has found out that prohibition will never prohibit so long as druggists' licenses are issued, and, as a consequence, she has very little drunkenness, or its consequent crime, within her borders.

What are "the mechanic arts?" and what is the strict meaning of "industrial classes?" Most of us common people who never went to college think we know; but don't let us be too sure of it when learned men disagree. Yale College and the Storrs Agricultural School, also in Connecticut, are in a high state of antagonism over the correct definition of these terms. Storrs claims all the funds for that State provided by the Congressional act of 1890, "for the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;"

while Yale contends that she also teaches "the mechanic arts" and ought to have a share. To this Storrs very properly raises the objection that civil, mechanical and electrical engineering, which is all that Yale teaches, are not, strictly speaking, mechanical arts at all, and instances her own departments of instruction in carpentry, cabinet-making, and blacksmithing, as coming under that head. The grant expressly states that the fund "shall be used only to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes," by which the average mind understands the working people. Certainly Storrs is right in claiming that this is the true meaning, and that civil, mechanical and electrical engineers are not generally considered as coming under that head. It is strange how obscure and difficult of comprehension the plainest English will become in a legal controversy that involves dollars and cents, whether it is between institutions or individuals.

Next to the death of Whittier, we feel the recent decease of Lucy Larcom. Her name was a loved and familiar one even in my early childhood, and her "Hannah Binding Shoes," has been a classic for two score years. I doubt if any single poem by an American woman, unless it be Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic," has so touched the popular heart. Every line is a picture. You can see the "Mayday skies all aglow," and then when the shadows begin to creep over feel the chill at poor Hannah's heart as "the cold southwestern mischief brews round the rocks of Marblehead." She wrote years afterward a sequel, which, like most sequels, was not quite so good, and certainly never so endeared itself to the reading public; and yet it has the same exquisite, poetic touch; the same sad, sweet melody that seems caught from the very moan of the pulsing sea:

"Beverly bells
Bring to the tide as it rocks and swells;
His was the anguish a moment knells,
But the bitter wash of that life-long woe
Was left for the desolate heart to know,
When the years drift dead from their stagnant brim,
Thinking of him."

Lucy Larcom's place is sure in our American Parnassus. She was not only New England's sweetest poetess, but to her belongs the glory of the pioneer in being among the first to exemplify in her own career what the American working-girl may become.

supplementing this for the benefit of the pastor, with these words: "Art thou a master in Israel, and knoweth not these things?" John 3:10. I spoke forcibly, and uncompromisingly, denouncing such heresy in the house of God, and such heathen practices among Christian people. I told them that Christ did not rise on the day so many people call Easter. If so, Christ arose some years in March and some years in April. Easter was liable to come in March, and if it did not so come, was liable to dance about and pop up on the first, second, third, or fourth Sunday in April; and surely Christ did not rise on all of the Sundays Easter comes on. God grant that Christ's people will soon be free from popish influence. I also gave this people to understand that these un-Christian festivities grew in about the same way that the un-Christian lodge-worm grew that was gnawing the very vitals out of the Christian church.

At 3 p. m. I spoke at the Methodist church in the same strain, but more forcibly, on the subject of secret societies. The Odd-fellows and an organization (secret) known only to our colored people as the "U. B. F.s" (United Brothers of Friendship) appeared to rule everything in this place.

Coming on down the road we came to Hearne. Here the Baptists have an academy, and here we learned that the people on Easter Sunday had a mock sepulcher and candles burning around it; and at 4 o'clock Sunday morning they all met at their church, and the pastor preached a sermon to them on the Resurrection, having on the previous Friday night preached on the sufferings and death of Christ, leaving him in the grave until Sunday morning, when he (the pastor) would come and preach him out. I could but weep when I learned of these things. I learned that our Bro. Hinman had visited this locality and had left the preacher "almost persuaded". In the Academy, however, I found the president, or principal, an outspoken anti-secretist, having been converted in our New Orleans meeting some years ago. I gave them at this town some strong talk, and before a congregation of nearly eleven hundred I spoke for over an hour, and God blessed our effort.

Leaving this place I visited Bryan and gave one talk there. Seeing that my pocket-book was getting very thin (for I find that men will not contribute very freely for the Gospel that does not tickle the ear), and being desirous of visiting this place, and then making my way homeward, I resolved not to say anything more about secret societies, but preach so that the people would be pleased and give me some money. I arrived here on last Friday, and some of the brethren met me gladly. I was invited to preach on Sunday, at 11 A. M. and at 3 P. M. I consented, and God was with me. I forgot my resolution, and I preached as never before; for my soul was stirred within me when I saw some ten or fifteen pastors with Masonic and other secret society emblems on. (They were holding a missionary meeting in this place.) When I had finished my discourse the pastor came to me and almost embraced me, saying to me in the presence of the entire congregation, "God sent you here to help me." He then related his experience, telling how he six months ago had been ordered to leave Galveston, by the secret society people, and how he had received letters from them giving him ten days to leave the city or be killed; but he had stood his ground. He related how they had called him an "old ignorant Negro fool," and tried to force him to resign his church; "and now," said he, "God has sent this brother to help me." I knew none of the things which he related until I had preached. So you see that God undoubtedly took charge of me on this particular occasion. He it was that directed my thoughts, and thus spoiled my resolution. And now I have made another one, which I read after this manner: "Money, or no money, I shall speak out in His name;" for in some way or other the Lord will provide.

At 3 P. M. I preached to another congregation of about 200, and nearly the entire number were secretists—pastor and all. The oldest colored minister in the city sat in the pulpit with me, and he wore a loud Masonic emblem, and prayed a loud Masonic prayer, "That the Supreme Architect of the Universe might bless the dear strange brother, who would speak to us on this occasion." "No man can serve two masters," was the subject of my discourse. God helped me, and gave me the courage of my olden days; and here, surrounded as I was, I poured out God's message of truth, and God sent conviction home to the heart of the preacher, and many of his members believed.

On Monday night I gave an address, and received $3.00; hence I have enough to pay my way to the next city—Houston; and from there I shall go (D. V.) to Austin, where I shall stay (or at least I hope to be able to stay) three weeks, or until May 20, and from there I will return to Memphis and arrange to move to Kansas.

You do not know how much I have wished that I had a big share of this world's goods, that my family might be cared for, while I would give myself to the work of the Master against secret societies, especially in this State, for the next six months. The condition of things here is sad. I have met some very fine young men, graduates of Bishop College, and other good schools; but they are novices, and need some one to help them make a strong fight along this line. I sometimes feel a little timid, and I quake with fear for myself, but while I talk God takes all my fear away. I shall be here until the 28th, and shall speak six or eight times more before I leave the city. I have been invited to speak again in each of the churches in which I have already spoken.

I shall write you again, in a few weeks, informing you of my success. I do not think or dream of failure, for the work cannot fail. It is His, and I go forth in His name.

I have just received a letter from my wife, who is in Memphis, informing me of the illness of our youngest child, a boy of thirteen years, who just three weeks ago gave himself to the Saviour. I ask the prayers of all for his speedy recovery, and for strength to continue in His work.

Yours for truth and righteousness,

R. N. COUNTTEE.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.
2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.
3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

—The Columbian Exposition of 1893 was inaugurated with impressive ceremonies on Monday. Mud spattered everywhere, but rain ceased for a few hours during midday. If we may make any judgment from the weather, God means to rebuke some of man's boasting, which a more successful opening would have inflated. It is not a hard thing for him to teach men not to forget his authority. It is often hard for them to learn the lesson.

—The N. C. A. exhibit suffered, with the vast majority, from the delays incident to the crush of business in Chicago during the last week. Orders given a month and six weeks ago, to be filled by the middle of April, were hardly complete by Saturday; and instead of having our quarters in attractive and handsome appearance on Tuesday, they were only ready to receive unpacked goods. Hastening as much as possible, it took three full days for a load to go by express wagon from the N. C. A. office to the northwest corner gallery of the Manufactures building.

—The exhibits that were ready to receive visitors on Saturday night last were a very rare exception. The American Bible Society was one. The corner occupied by this noble cause is richly ornamented with carved oak cases, costing $3,000. Let us be thankful that the rarest gem in the Fair, the Word of God, has so fine a setting. Some vast spaces are hardly touched by way of preparation in the main building; this is especially the case with the women's department, the Denmark, and other foreign exhibits.

—Thanks to the kindness of Mr. R. L. Park, of Philadelphia, who is as skillful in the plastic art as with chalk, the N. C. A. exhibit has a handsome copy of the Morgan monument. The kind offer of Mrs. Bishop, of Chambersburg, Pa., was not accepted by the committee, as the model in her possession is of the statue of Morgan, surmounting the monument, instead of the whole. Through the generous efforts of Mr. Park, the cost of the model, which promised to be beyond our means, was about one-tenth the amount of several early estimates.

—The renewal of the Sunday-opening agitation in Chicago has caused some apprehension; but, whatever a few men intend who are ready to defy heaven and earth, the law of the nation, expressing the will of the people through President and Congress, must stand. The Chicago management are, in their intent, covenant-breakers and violators of law. The executive committee of the Directory have declared, with great show of authority, that Congress has violated its pledges, and therefore nobody is holden by them. It seems not to have occurred to these gentlemen that they are hardly the body to decide such a grave question. The Daily Record, the morning paper of largest circulation, and the only one refusing to publish a Sunday edition, has a brave and decided editorial condemning the revival of the debate as dishonorable to Chicago, defiant of the nation and its authority.

THE HOME.

TEACH ME THY WAY.

O thou unseen, eternal One,
Whom myriad worlds obey—
Whose being is—whose will be done,
Where'er the rays of stars or sun
Through the wide realms of ether run:
"Teach me thy way."

At morn, when first thy golden beams
Thy glorious works display,
When o'er the hill thy sunlight streams
And earth with life and beauty teems,
Like some bright isle in happy dreams:
"Teach me thy way."

At evening, when thy shadows fall
Around departing day,
And lowly vale, and mountain tall,
And stream, and lake, and forest, all Grow sombre with their mantling pall:
"Teach me thy way."

Nor less, when in life's solemn hour,
Are sleeping silently
The weary bee, in tiny flower,
The wildbird in his greenwood bower,
And souls 'neath thatch or princely tower:
"Teach me thy way."

When by the smile of summer blest,
The fields and woods are gay,
All in a robe of verdure dressed;
When the wild winds have sunk to rest,
Thy waves are still on ocean's breast:
"Teach me thy way."

Or when thou stretchest forth thine arm,
In awful majesty,
In wintry skies, or climate warm,
Robing about the unseen form
With clouds and darkness, fire and storm:
"Teach me thy way."

Maker of all—earth, sea and air,
Ruler of night and day,
Long as I live beneath thy care,
While goodness keep and mercy spare,
Be ever this my heartfelt prayer:
"Teach me thy way."

And when life's fleeting hours are past;
When in eternity
The undying soul on thee is cast,
Oh, take me to thyself at last,
And through that endless, unknown vast,
"Teach me thy way."

THE SEPTIC SOUL-COURSE.

I.

"Septic" is defined as "a substance that promotes the putrefaction of bodies."

Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, of the Salvation Army, has published a little book, entitled, "The Curse of Septic Soul-Treatment." It is a lesson in surgery, applied to the work of caring for convicted sinners.

There are many who destroy a sinner's chances by applying something that will neutralize, putrefy, the work which the Holy Spirit has begun in his heart.

Mrs. Booth's first lesson is, that the spiritual surgeon must be free from infectants himself. Visiting a surgeon in the operating room she says: "I had not seen him for months, and on entering the room, while he was making his hands aseptically clean, we exchanged greetings. He said, turning to me: 'Excuse me, but your hand is unclean.' I knew what he meant. Should he have shaken hands with me, he dare not operate on the patient awaiting him, for, surgically speaking, I was unclean; and it would mean to him the labor of again preparing himself for his work. So there are many hands stretched out to help God with his mission, to whom he must say: 'No, I cannot use you; you are unclean.' And, alas! some of those who were clean and ready for use, have become contaminated by shaking hands with the world, touching 'the unclean thing;' and remember, but one touch will disqualify for service."

Again: "Who dares offer to the soul"—but the septic soul-surgeon, alas! is constantly making this huge mistake—"unconditional pardon . . . the idol is still clung to, or the sore-spot still uncovered?"

"One mode of septic soul-treatment which has long been in vogue, and which I fear has been the cause of more misleading of souls, and salving over of spiritual wounds 'with untempered mortar,' than any other disregard of the laws of soul-asepticism that I could mention, is the application indiscriminately of the 'only-believe' remedy. The word 'believe' can only be safely uttered to the soul which is in a fit state to exercise saving faith; and when offered to the unprepared heart as the 'one thing needful,' it becomes a curse, a misleading fallacy, the planting of a new source of trouble in the already diseased soul."

II.

In the two special meetings that Cleveland holiness people have lately been advantaged in attending, and while listening to very much that was helpful and inspiring, we were pained to recognize some septic-salve, some things which were poison at that time, and tended to putrefy rather than purify.

In one case there was an alluring description of the mighty Spirit-Baptism; but with it exceedingly little to show that this comes only when the "exceeding sinfulness of sin" is seen, deplored, and given up.

At another time, somewhat similarly, the requisite of self-sanctification, the human side in heart-purification, was announced, but was so very meagerly handled, and so little pressed home in the might of the Spirit, that no heart but one already well-prepared, would or even could get to God for divine purification.

The "believe, believe!" style was worked sometimes—we think innocently, yet disastrously. Even head-faith is rather an uncertain thing, and is often felt to be unsafe, until the great deep of the heart is thoroughly broken up by the power of God. And when this breaking up does take place, and there is a thorough yielding up at every point, then head-belief and heart-faith are both easy and both satisfactory, and salvation streams into the soul.

III.

Some few will get to the cleansing whether the directions are the best or not. They get so hungry that they meet the true conditions by Spirit-leading. But how many more would get there if proper expression was made by teachers, so the Spirit could use it!

It is no part of our business to plaster with septic, and to generalize, as against the cleanest and most specific directions to the seeker after God—whether in justification or entire sanctification. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

Apropos to this subject are words of Bro. Hiram Ackers, in a letter written amid the activities of the work in Michigan. He says: "Our cry here is, 'Repent, and believe the Gospel,' to sinners; and to believers, that are live Christians, 'Seek God for a clean heart, by separating from inbred sin, and the gift of the Holy Ghost shall come upon them.' The old Calvary gospel of repentance after a godly sort brings life from God to the soul. And a loathing of inbred sin, and desire for heart-purity, above and beyond the desire for all other things, bring the soul where God can baptize the seeker with the Holy Ghost and fire; and that fire burns up the old man of sin."—The Harvester, Cleveland.

THE CLEANSING OF THE BLOOD.

CONFIRMING TESTIMONIES.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, PRESBYTERIAN.

"I was satisfied that the doctrine of sanctification in this life, and entire sanctification in the sense that it was the privilege of Christians to live without known sin, was a doctrine taught in the Bible, and that abundant means were provided to secure its attainment.

"He enables me now to rest in him and let everything sink in his perfect will with much more readiness than ever before the experience of that winter. . . . It seems to me that I can find God within me, in such a sense, that I can rest upon him and be quiet, lay my heart in his hand, and nestle down in his perfect will and have no carefulness or anxiety."

REV. EDGAR M. LEVY, D.D., BAPTIST.

After making mention of his clear conversion, call to the ministry, and growing conviction of the need of complete cleansing and indument, he adds: "The blessed baptism came. I seemed filled with all the fullness of God. I wept for joy. . . . The fountains of my being seemed broken up and my heart was dissolved in gratitude and praise. My soul seemed filled with pulses, every one thrilling and trobbing with such waves of love and rapture that I thought I must die from excess of life."

FRANCIS RIDLEY HAVERGAL, EPISCOPALIAN.

"First I was shown that 'the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin,' and then it was made plain to me that he who had thus cleansed had power to keep me clean; so I just utterly yielded myself to him and utterly trusted him to keep me. . . . He has brought me into the highway of holiness, up which I trust every day to progress, continually pressing forward, led by the Spirit of God."

D. L. MOODY, CONGREGATIONALIST.

Referring to some ladies who earnestly prayed that he might enter into this experience, Mr. Moody says: "I did not like it at first; but I got to thinking it over, and after a little time I began to feel a desire to have what they were praying for. The result was that at the end of three months God sent this blessing upon me. I would not for all the world go back to where I was before. Since then I have never lost the assurance that I am walking in communion with God, and I have a joy in his service that sustains me and makes it easy work. . . . I have done three times the work I did before, and it gets better and better every year."

REV. DANIEL STEEL, METHODIST.

"Upon the promise I ventured with an act of appropriating faith. For several hours I clung by naked faith. Suddenly I became conscious of a mysterious power exerting itself upon my sensibilities. My physical sensations, though not of a nervous temperament, in good health, alone and calm, were indescribable—as if an electric current were passing through my body with painless shocks, melting my whole being into a fiery stream of love.

"I am conscious of errors, grievances, infirmities and defects which, though consistent with perfect love and loyalty to God, need and by faith receive, every moment, the merit of Christ's death."

REV. B. CARRADINE, M. E. SOUTH.

"Sanctification has saved the writer from all irritability of temper and disposition. Regeneration has saved him from giving vent to it in speech and act, but did not alienate the dark destroying spirit from the heart. Sanctification, glory be to God! has done this blessed interior work. The hot, impatient flash, the quick nettled feeling, the hasty impulse to angry speech, the gunpowder expression of thought and word—all have been taken away in a moment of time by the blessed Son of God."

MADAME GUYON, ROMAN CATHOLIC.

"I had an inexpressible satisfaction and joy in suffering and being a prisoner. The confinement of my body made me better relish the freedom of my mind. . . . The stones of my prison looked in my eyes like rubies; I esteemed them more than all the gaudy brilliants of a vain world. My heart was full of that joy which Thou givest to them that love Thee in the midst of their greatest crosses."

The following facts are true of each of the witnesses above mentioned:

1. They had in the first place a definite experience of conversion.
2. After this, with no backsliding, they found themselves just as clearly convicted for complete cleansing and indument as formerly for pardon.
3. They sought this definitely and earnestly.
4. They consecrated all fully and forever to Jesus.
5. They then trusted him to fulfill his promise and completely cleanse and fill with his Spirit.
6. God answered and made them just as conscious that the Holy Spirit fully sanctified as that Jesus fully forgave them.
7. They all became witnesses to his power to fully save.
8. Through this new experience they each, like the Apostles at Pentecost, became equipped as never before for service.
9. They each have retained the blessed life and have since been shining with increasing brightness—some in this world, others translated to the brighter constellation above:

"A cloud of witnesses around
Hold thee in full survey;
Forget the path already trod,
And upward urge thy way."

—The Revivalist, Cincinnati.

"THE MOTHER OF THE SALVATION ARMY."

Little Catherine early developed unusual intellectual gifts, together with a spirituality and loving-heartedness equally remarkable. Her sympathy for suffering was keen, and the little girl was the unfailing champion of ill-used animals. This trait characterized her through life.

If, in her walks or drives, Mrs. Booth happened to notice any horses left out to graze which looked overworked and ill fed, she would send around to the dealers for a bushel of corn. Then when evening fell she would sally forth with a child or a servant, carrying a supply of the food to the field in which the poor creatures had been marked, watching with the utmost satisfaction while they had a "real good tuck-in." The horses were soon able to recognize her, and would run along the hedge whenever their benefactress passed by, craning their necks and snorting their thanks.

While driving out one day with a friend, Mrs. Booth saw a donkey beaten with a hammer. She jumped out of the carriage before it could be stopped, received a severe fall, but picked herself up and ran to the rescue, and after persuading the donkey driver to cease, and to give up the hammer to her, she fainted away with excitement and exertion. She taught all her children to be friends of animals. Her young daughter Emma, walking out one day in Brighton, saw a donkey cruelly beaten. She broke away from her nurse and ran after the driver, calling to him to stop. He whipped up, but she pursued him in tears a long way, finally caught up with him, and snatching the whip from him, laid it vigorously about his head and shoulders, exclaiming, "How do you like it?" The donkey-boy, a big fellow, who could have felled her with a blow, was so impressed by the little girl's grief and her earnestness that he succumbed, promised better behavior, and, expressing sorrow at having brought her so far out of her way, offered to drive her back. She climbed to the seat beside him and rode back into Brighton, chatting with the boy, praising the little donkey, and engaging him to be kind to it in future.

Even as a child, Mrs. Booth rejoiced in the speculations of Wesley and Butler as to the possibility of a future life for animals. Her husband, in his address at her grave, spoke of her kindness at heart, and said she suffered more in her lifetime through her compassion for dumb animals than some doctors of divinity suffer for the whole world of sinning and sorrowing humanity.

"Life is such a puzzle!" she used to say, "but we must leave it, leave it with God. I have suffered so much over what appeared to be the needless and inexplicable sorrows and pains of the animal creation, as well as over those of the rest of the world, that if I had not come to know God by a personal revelation of him to my own soul, and to trust him because I knew him, I can hardly say into what skepticism I might not have fallen."—Woman's Journal.

A CHRIST-LIKE ERRAND.

The Well-Spring tells the following story of a real hero who wore the gray during the war:

The day after the battle of Fredericksburg, Kershaw's brigade occupied Mary's Hill, and Sykes' division lay 150 yards ahead, with a stone wall between the two forces. The intervening space between Sykes' men and the stone wall was strewn with dead, dying, and wounded Union soldiers, victims of the battle of the day before. The air was rent with their groans and agonizing cries of "Water! water!"

"General," said a boy-sergeant in gray, "I can't stand this."

"What is the matter, sergeant?" asked the General.

"I can't stand hearing those wounded Yankees crying for water; may I go and give them some?"

"Kirkland," said the General, "the moment you step over the wall, you'll get a bullet through your head; the skirmishing has been murderous all day."

"If you'll let me, I'll try it."

"My boy, I ought not to let you run such a risk, but I cannot refuse. God protect you! You may go."

"Thank you, sir," and with a smile on his bright, handsome face, the boy-sergeant sprang away over the wall, down among the sufferers, pouring the blessed water down their parched throats. After the first few bullets, his Christ-like errand became understood, and shouts instead of bullets rent the air.

He came back at night to his bivouac, untouched.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

THE OLD STONE BASIN.

In the heart of the busy city,
In the scorching noontide heat,
A sound of babbling water
Falls on the din of the street.

It falls in an old stone basin,
And over the cool, wet brink
The heads of thirsty horses
Each moment are stretched to drink.

And peeping between the crowding heads,
As the horses come and go,
The "Gift of Three Little Sisters"
Is read on the stone below.

Ah! beasts are not taught letters;
They know no alphabet;
And never a horse in all these years
Has read the words, and yet

I think that each thirsty creature
That stops to drink by the way,
His thanks, in his own dumb fashion,
To the sisters small must pay.

Years have gone by since busy hands
Wrought at the basin's stone;
The kindly little sisters
Are all to women grown.

I do not know their home or fate,
Or the name they bear to men,
But the sweetness of that precious deed
Is just as fresh as then.

And all life long, and after life,
They must the happier be
For the cup of water poured by them
When they were children three.

—Susan Coolidge.

TEMPERANCE.NATIONALIZING THE DRINK TRAFFIC.

There is quite a strong movement now in favor of taking the drink traffic out of the hands of private individuals and assuming direct State control of it—nationalizing it, as some like to term it. The Nationalist party, which is becoming strong in some parts of the United States, is strongly in favor of such a measure. In South Carolina the entire liquor-selling business is to be assumed under State control after the first of July next, each locality to have a public official to dispense the liquor, who shall have no pecuniary interest or profit in the sales.

In Massachusetts some of the leading temperance people propose a similar measure for those towns where the license system is still retained, allowing those who reject license to remain under prohibition, as they now are. It is claimed in this way that at least the important element of personal gain to a horde of liquor-sellers will be got rid of; but the fact remains, the supplies are accessible for all who want them and the temptations that have been the means of destroying so many still remain in the way.

The New England Home, a leading Massachusetts temperance journal, thus writes of the proposed movement for State control:

"If this plan is to be tried, we shall abide the issue with confidence. The propositions that alcohol has no place in the healthy human system, and that when taken into the system with any degree of frequency it is sure to produce physical degeneracy, are propositions which we believe to have been established beyond question by experience and by scientific investigation. If they are true they show to intelligent citizens the reason why the alcoholic drink traffic in any form is sure to prove a public nuisance, which for the general welfare must be suppressed. We are quite prepared to believe that the plan of State control without private profit or public revenues from liquor will achieve a great advance against the present power of the drink evil in the nation, but it will be only so far as the people, when facing the question on its merits in their own communities, shall suppress the beverage traffic entirely and without compromise.

"Just in so far as the beverage traffic is tolerated, just to that degree will it produce national plague spots, which will act as fearfully burdensome leeches upon the body politic. We frankly say that we do not expect to see these leeches removed without heroic action; for the liquor leech never gets surfeited, but 'grows by what it feeds upon.'

"In brief, then, State control will mean progress in so far as it means prohibition, and failure in so far as it means toleration. The inevitable question, the 'irrepressible conflict,' will remain, but with lines more clearly and more closely drawn. But meanwhile the tolerated evil is eating its way into the vitals of the republic. Every hour that it is tolerated it gains strength. Even if crippled by withdrawing its financial incentive, it still grows by the very nature of alcohol. The citizen who realizes the truth about alcohol has no reason in conscience or intelligence to tolerate the alcoholic drink traffic in the least degree. To do so is to predicate his action upon convictions and knowledge other than his own, and thus to be unfaithful to the obligations of his own manhood and of his elector's oath."

THE HYGEIA OF INTEMPERANCE.

The sins of the fathers, in connection with liquor drinking, are visited on the children to the third and fourth generation to a greater extent than with most other sins. Recently, in England, about 50,000 children in connection with 105 schools were examined by competent physicians, and over 30 per cent of them were suffering from physical or mental defects, attributable mainly to the drinking habits of their parents. If all the children of all the schools of the country were examined, and a truthful report furnished, what a terrible indictment it would make against a business sanctioned and protected by the laws of our nation! All these thousands and thousands of children must go through life impaired, and in many instances ruined, not because of any fault of their own. The loss to the whole country because of such defective citizens is tremendous. And yet some will persist in claiming that if a man drinks it is his own business.

Medical men are becoming more and more alive to the important fact that many men are now dying of drink who were never drunkards and possibly were never once drunk. The moderate use of alcoholics produces undue stimulation and irritation of the brain, the stomach and other organs and thus bring about disease and death. Many "a visitation of Providence" is brought about by a constant and quite moderate use of liquors. Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson is acknowledged to be one of the best medical authorities in England on the nature and effects of alcoholics, and he says: "A man may be considered by his friends and neighbors, as well as by himself, to be a sober and temperate man; he may say quite truthfully that he never was tipsy in the whole course of his life; and yet it is quite possible that such a man may die of disease caused by the alcohol he has taken, and by no other cause whatever. This is one of the most dreadful evils of alcohol, that it kills insidiously, as if it were doing no harm, or as if it were doing good, while it is destroying life."—Hamilton (Can.) Templar.

Bishop Vincent, of the Methodist Episcopal church, has handed down a decision in the case of Frank W. Palmeter and William C. Briggs, druggists, of Jamestown, Chautauq county, New York, who were charged with violating the discipline of the church in doing business under a store-keeper's license. The Bishop finds that the accused have not violated the rules of the church. He holds that as the church recognizes the propriety, under certain conditions, of the sacramental and medicinal use of wine and other alcoholic liquors, it would be unreasonable to refuse to a Christian druggist the right to conduct a legitimate business, so held by state and church. He says that the fact that the State has enacted license laws, liable to abuse by unprincipled men, is not a sufficient reason for refusing a Christian the right to conduct a legitimate business.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The difference between a wise man and a fool. Vs. 1-3. They who accept instruction, though it may be conveyed in the form of bitter and painful experiences, are wise; but "he that hateth reproof," who fails to learn any lesson from the necessary discipline of life, who is not made a better man by sorrow, is "brutish." He is like the animals, who are incapable of mental improvement or moral progress. We are here, on earth, like pupils in a school, and a really successful life is to be measured, not by the material prosperity it has brought us, but by what we have learned from it, and the practical application we are making of its lessons. "A good man obtaineth favor of the Lord." How much is included in that phrase, "a good man." Note the antithesis between this and the succeeding clause: "but a man of wicked devices will be condemn." Such is a man who in underhand ways tries to secure his advantage to the hurt of his neighbors, a man of plots and intrigues. This is only one of many passages which by implication condemn secret societies. The "good man" has no use for secret grips and signs, but "the man of wicked devices" takes to such things as to his native element.

2. The difference between the righteous and the wicked. Vs. 4-13. The man who gets rich by cheating his fellow-men, or by carrying on some iniquitous business, builds on the quicksands. There is no element of permanency in it. "But the root of the righteous shall not be moved." He will be like the cedars of Lebanon. The storms may twist and tear his branches, but they cannot touch the roots. So with him whose soul is established in the eternal principles of truth and righteousness. They grasp the foundations which cannot be moved. "A virtuous woman is a crown"—a glory and source of continual joy—"to her husband," but she that is of the opposite kind "is as rottenness in his bones." She is like some slow-working, insidious disease that undermines the constitution and saps all its strength and vigor. "The thoughts of the righteous are just." He is not simply just in his outward conduct, but he harbors no covetous desires; he plans no evil against, nor does he think any evil of his neighbor. His heart is right, and so his actions are right. An uncontaminated fountain will send forth pure water. So the opposite is true. "The counsels of the wicked are deceit." He is continually planning to overreach, or in some way mislead and deceive his fellow-men. This is pre-eminent true of the rum-seller and the gambler. "The words of the wicked are of lying in wait for blood." The writers of "blood-and-thunder novels," which work so much mischief among the young, with their corrupting stories of murder and crime, deal in this kind of words. The initiation ceremonies in Masonry, especially in some of the higher degrees, seem calculated to familiarize the candidate with the idea of assassination. Theatrical advertisements are, many of them, aside from their indecent character, lessons to the young in brutality and crime, and should be forbidden by stringent laws. "But the mouth of the upright shall deliver them." Shall speak words of comfort and counsel that will save the souls of the tempted, and encourage good men when persecuted for conscience' sake to hold on to the end. "A man shall be commended according to his wisdom." The path of wisdom is the way to all true honor; but "he that is of a perverse heart," prone to crooked dealings, or vicious habits, is despised even by those of his own class. "Better is he that is lightly esteemed," etc. This verse applies to many people at the present day who sacrifice comfort to sham gentility, trying to make a great deal of show with a small income. Better be lightly esteemed by the fashionable world, and make no pretensions to a style of living that we cannot afford without defrauding ourselves or others. "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast." Men who have no regard for the sufferings of a brute will have none for the sufferings of a fellow-being. Kindness to all dumb animals should be one of the first lessons taught to every child. A youth who takes pleasure in torturing dogs or kittens is likely to end his career behind prison-bars. As we cannot love God and hate our brother, so we cannot love God and be cruel to the humblest creature he has made. "The wicked desireth the net of evil men." The righteous "hate every false way," while such are eager to seize on iniquitous ways of getting money; but the fruit of a good life is more to be desired than all their ill-gotten wealth.

3. Foolish self-confidence. Vs. 14, 15. Verses 13 and 14 have virtually the same meaning. If we think right thoughts, we shall speak right words, and it is by our words we shall be justified and by our words condemned. "The way of the foolish is right in his own eyes." But how many foolish boys think themselves wiser than their parents or their teachers! It is not through want of good counsel that the young go to ruin, but through lack of a teachable spirit which will hearken to the advice of older people.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The revival meetings in La Salle, Ill., conducted by Rev. J. D. McCord, have been a great blessing to the church and to the twenty-five converts. The services closed with an all-day fellowship meeting. Mr. McCord then went to Spring Valley for five days, and then to Peru.

—The church at Granville, Ill., was supplied morning and evening, April 16, by Prof. Fischer. Though the church has been called on to give so liberally for its beautiful new building, the claims of Wheaton College were not disregarded, and a liberal contribution will help make up the $100,000 fund.

—The annual meeting of the General Theological Library, Boston, has just been held. The invested funds are now $31,000. There are 1,165 members. The library contains over 32,000 books and pamphlets, and these have been circulated in eighty-two New England towns during the year.

—The question of securing the services of Evangelists Mills and Chapman at Boston and vicinity in February of next year is under consideration.

—Three religious gatherings are to be held at Northfield this year, instead of two as heretofore. The third is to be an International Conference of Young Women. This will be held June 20-28; the Students' Conference, July 1-9; and the Christian Workers' Conference Aug. 1-13. D. L. Moody will preside at all these meetings.

—Dr. Chapman has just concluded evangelistic meetings at Saginaw, Michigan, in which he has disarmed all criticism and secured remarkable results. Among the most marvelous of his meetings were two for men only, in which an ex-Senator, a prominent and wealthy politician and one of Michigan's best-known architects, were among the converts.

—It is already demonstrated that even Milwaukee, as well as other cities, can be touched and moved by a great Mills evangelistic effort. Nearly fifty churches are in the combination, and perfect harmony prevails. The city is already stirred as never before.

EVANGELICAL.

—Evangelist B. Fay Mills began a series of meetings in Milwaukee the first Wednesday evening in April. They were first held with the churches on the East side, then on the South side, and then on the West side. Wednesday evening, April 26, they began in the Exposition building, where they are to continue for two weeks.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. Dr. W. F. Short, who has since 1874 served as president of the Illinois Female College, has been appointed superintendent of the State Institution for the Blind, one of the finest of the kind in the country.

—Among the interesting Methodist exhibits at the World's Fair will be a family Bible, bound in velvet and ornamented with brass trimmings, which was the only book saved when the Book Concern was destroyed by the Chicago fire of 1871.

—It is reported that a Methodist church in Kansas has dismissed Rev. V. H. Biddeson, the Populist chaplain of the State Senate, because of the prayers made in the Senate last winter, in which he is alleged to have called down dire maledictions upon the Republican party. One day he is said to have prayed God to "palsy the brain and still the heart of the treasonable conspirators."

—A noonday meeting is held in the lecture-room of the First M. E. church, corner Clark and Washington streets, Chicago. It is conducted by prominent Methodists, and during the World's Fair will be led by prominent ministers from abroad.

—"Cold storage" Methodism. In his remarks before the Chicago preachers' meeting Dr. W. A. Spencer said: "I know of a church in New York City which recently sold its property for $300,000. It now proposes to put $700,000 with the $300,000 and erect a large Methodist cathedral, where it shall stand as an iceberg to freeze out all the other churches in the vicinity.

—The New York Advocate announced that Bishop Vincent would sail on Saturday for Europe, to preside over the several annual conferences in that country.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The International Missionary Union will hold its tenth annual meeting at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 14-21, 1893. This union is in the nature of missionaries' clubs, and includes in its membership all returned missionaries of every denomination. The meeting is, however, open to the public, but free entertainment is provided only for those who have been workers in the mission field.

—The assertion that the theological seminaries are turning out too many ministers does not find confirmation in the statement that there are 1,138 vacant churches in the Presbyterian denomination, and that their supply of ministers is running short at the rate of about fifty a year.

—The Rev. Dr. Arthur Mitchell, formerly of Chicago, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, died at Saratoga, N. Y., on Monday, aged fifty-eight years.

—The Presbytery of Philadelphia overtured the General Assembly to strike out the section of the confession on "elected infants."

—The position of the Presbyterian church, relative to the work doing by such men as Professors Briggs and Smith, is indicated by the esteem in which their theological seminaries are held. The attendance at Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, has formerly averaged some forty to fifty students a year; but since the Smith business has come to the front, there has been a great falling off, so that the catalogue for this year gives the whole number at seventeen, while the catalogue of the McCormick Seminary, at Chicago, which is not affected by Briggism, gives the whole number two hundred and twelve. The same thing may be seen, in a less degree, at Princeton and Union. Princeton is gathering the students from Presbyterian churches, while Union gathers a heterogeneous company from all quarters, a considerable proportion of it Congregationalists.—Journal and Messenger.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church will assemble at New Castle, Pa., beginning on the 31st of May.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The thirty-fifth annual convention of the Illinois State Sabbath-school Association will be held in Quincy, Ill., May 16, 17 and 18, in the Vermont Street M. E. church. The first session will begin at 10 A. M. Free entertainment to all delegates.

—The growth of the church in Washington State is excellent for the effort and money expended. Ten years ago there was not a church in the State, and now there are five and the sixth starting, and two or more places that should be occupied at once. Some of these congregations will soon be self-supporting.

—Rev. R. A. MacAyeal has notified his congregation of his intention to resign his charge at Lawrence, Mass. However, his congregation is making a united and vigorous remonstrance against his release by presbytery.

—The Mid-Continent says: "The movement in the United Presbyterian church to transfer the care of the theological seminaries from the synods to the Assembly is destined to encounter strong opposition. The influential Presbytery of Allegheny has taken a decided stand against it."

—Delegates to the General Assembly to meet in the First church, Monmouth, Ill., May 24th, 1893, will please send their names without fail and without delay to Thos. H. Hanna, at that place.

—The Covenanter Church in Scotland has issued a statement relative to the proposed re-construction of the Scottish churches. Presbyterianism in Scotland is greatly divided.

WESLEYAN METHODIST.

—The fiftieth session of the New York Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America will begin at Chichester, N. Y., on the 9th of May, at 7:30 P. M. Opening sermon by Rev. H. H. Perry; alternate, Rev. W. S. Schenck.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—An anonymous gift of $25,000 enabled the Young Men's Christian Association of London to pay a debt on its building, Exeter Hall, which has been a burden to the association for some time.

—A dispatch from Rome reports that Pope Leo will soon reply to the reports of the American bishops on the school question in a special document settling the matter with the utmost clearness. This reply will be looked for with interest.

—An attack was recently made on native Christians by the Literati at Te Tsui, China, ninety miles from Amoy. The Christians were assembled for worship when attacked. One woman was killed, her husband and two sons being seriously injured. Others present were hanged up by ropes and then beaten. A few days later the leader was arrested in a district city. The magistrates have had to give protection to the Christians.

WOMAN-HOOD has its own special medicine in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. And every woman who is "run-down" or over-worked, every woman who suffers from any "female complaint" or weakness, needs just that remedy. With it, every disturbance, irregularity, and derangement can be permanently cured.

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nerve, and the only medicine for women so safe and sure that it can be guaranteed. In periodical pains, displacements, weak back, bearing-down sensations, and every kindred ailment, if it fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. Is anything that isn't sold in this way likely to be "just as good"?

Most so-called Catarrh cures only make matters worse. They drive it from the head to the lungs. But, by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy permanently cures the very worst cases.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

President Cleveland reached Chicago Saturday at 12:07 and was escorted by the military and citizens through dense crowds that cheered for the President from the Union depot to the Lexington Hotel, which was his home while in the city to participate in the ceremony of opening the World's Columbian Exposition. He visited the grounds in the afternoon.

The Duke of Veragua, lineal descendant of Columbus and an honored guest of the American people, while celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the greatest event in his renowned ancestor's life, arrived in Chicago Saturday morning. He was given a welcome in every way befitting the dignity of a Spanish grandee of the illustrious house of the great discoverer.

William C. Goudy, one of the most prominent lawyers of this city, died suddenly of heart disease, while in his office, on Thursday last, aged nearly 69. He had been for many years general counsel for the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, and highly respected.

The Chicago Dock and Investment Company, a corporation newly organized under the laws of Virginia, has acquired title to more than 3,500 acres of land on the outer and inner belt lines in Cook county, Ill., and Lake county, Ind. The capital stock is $12,000,000, and, it is stated, a bond issue of $6,000,000 has already been placed, secured by a mortgage on the property to a trust company.

The First Regiment (I. N. G.) Armory, with the military outfit, arms, etc., was burned, involving a loss of $208,000; insured. To be rebuilt at an early day.

A bronze statue of Columbus getting his first view of the new world, was presented to the city by the Columbian Exposition Directory on Tuesday last, with imposing ceremonies. The statue is of colossal size, being twenty feet high. Ten tons of bronze were used in its casting, which was executed by the American Bronze Company. It stands on a granite pedestal, thirty feet in height. It adorns the lake front.

In the Canadian dairy exhibit in the agricultural building is the biggest single cheese ever made. It is twenty-eight feet in circumference, six feet high, and weighs 22,000 pounds, or ten English tons. It took 207,200 pounds of milk to produce this monster cheese, an amount which it is estimated it would take 10,000 ordinary cows to produce in one day.

COUNTRY.

The Michigan Senate has passed a bill authorizing the organization of lodges of Loyal Orangemen, after restricting its membership to members of the United States and prohibiting any teachings in conflict with the laws of the United States or the State.

The financial situation in this country has perceptibly affected the value of American silver coin and silver certificates in Canada, and dispatches from Halifax, Montreal, and Toronto show that at all the banks silver is taken at a discount. This feeling was provoked by the announcement made by Secretary Carlisle that the bonds of 1890 were liable to be redeemed in silver if the gold surplus was exhausted.

An interesting feature of the next Chautauqua season will be the presentation, from different standpoints, of the mooted question as to the relation of the workingmen and the churches. Mr. Thomas J. Morgan, a socialist of Chicago, will discuss "The Attitude of the Workingmen Toward the Churches," and Prof. Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, will describe "The Attitude of the Churches toward the Workingmen."

The Citizens' Industrial Alliance (the secret half-brother of the Farmers' Alliance), at Pittsburgh, Pa., has issued a call for a convention of all labor organizations, to be held in Chicago, on July 4, "to formulate demands as a basis for a permanent political union for the better protection of the industrial classes of America."

The State Committee of the Prohibition party of New York has filed with the Secretary of War a strong protest against the continuance of the sale of liquors at the post exchanges of the army.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from April 24 to April 29:

J B Robinson, T Gilmor, Mrs H M Cole, Mrs C K Wood, J W Modlin, A Raymond, Geo M McClelland, J P Aikin, Rev E Barnetson, N Martin, J M Johnson, Dr I N Brown, Rev P B Williams, Rev J McLean, Mrs A C Lane, I K Morris, I B Benedict, J E Shaw, H Myer, Mrs O R Strong, Rev J K Glassford, C A Webb, T Hudson, A R Rinear, I Sanders, S Blanchard, I Crane, Mrs R Leggett.

Election at Harvey.

The election at Harvey, Tuesday, passed off very quietly. There had been no excitement previous to the election from the element in the village of Harvey, and the question of prohibition was not raised, although the successful ticket, headed by Mr. P. B. Lamb (which was called the Harvey Land Association ticket), was pledged to prohibition so far as the town of Harvey is concerned, and against the saloon. The fact is that a very large majority of the citizens of Harvey are against the saloon, but the question of prohibition as a political factor, so far as Harvey is concerned, is of very small moment, from the fact that it is impossible for saloons to get into the town as all deeds for lots sold by the Harvey Land Association contain a covenant that no saloons shall ever be erected upon or occupy the property, and is made a condition of the sale.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSE-CLEANING FOR HEALTH.

House-cleaning in the fall, although far less prominence is given to it, is of quite as much importance as the spring cleaning of which we hear ad nauseum. Especially is this the case when, as often happens, the house has been closed for the summer, on the one hand, or, on the other, has been filled with a constant succession of visitors. A thorough setting to right is then needed, and if the house has been closed, the use of disinfectants is absolutely necessary.

Every one knows that malaria is more active in the early fall than at any other season, even in the heat of summer. There is in the air an excess of humidity, and this, with the heat of the sun, is just the condition favorable to the decomposition of both vegetable and animal matter. Mephitic germs are slower in coming to a head, and thus linger longer about a house. Gases gather in out-of-the-way corners, and when fires are started rise in the warm air, carrying with them the seeds of disease and death. For this reason, if whitewashing can be done but once in a year it should be done preferably in the fall, and free use of disinfectants should be made. The cellar should be well looked to, and decaying vegetable matter should be banished as deadly poison. It is criminal to store the winter's supply of vegetables in an uncemented cellar, where more or less fermentation must take place, and whence poisonous gases must perforce find their way into the living rooms of the family. The barn is the proper place of storage. —Selected.

PROPER FOOD FOR INVALIDS.

When a person has a temperature of 101° or over, he should be fed upon liquids only, writes Elisabeth Robinson Scovill in the first of her valuable papers on "Life in the Invalid's Room" in the April Ladies' Home Journal. The power of the stomach to digest food is impaired, and there is no use in filling it with a mass of solid food which, in its weakened state, it is not able to take care of properly. Beside this or because of this there is usually little appetite, and the sufferer turns away in disgust from delicacies that would seem irresistible in days of health.

It is a common idea that a person who is being fed upon fluids is receiving very little nourishment, and, in fact, is in some danger of starving. Those who cherish this belief do not know that all food is converted into a liquid state before it can be absorbed into the system. In giving a sick person fluids we are only trying to save nature trouble, and to relieve her from extra exertion at a time when it is necessary for her to husband her strength and resources. We do this by presenting the food to the stomach in such a form that it can be easily acted upon by the digestive organs. It must be digested and assimilated before it can nourish the body, so it is useless to give more than can easily be disposed of. From a quarter to a half pint of liquid food once in every two hours is ordinarily sufficient.

SULPHUR CURE FOR GRIP.

Since the grip made its appearance in this vicinity a few years ago, I have been seriously ill with it four times, and probably since the first attack have never been entirely free from it until lately. My last attack during the last winter was not the most violent I have had, but yet stubborn. And the worst of it was that it was accompanied with, not serious or alarming, but very annoying symptoms of erysipelas, which it seemed nothing could wholly overcome; until of late my perseverance has been rewarded, and I believe I have conquered it. My mother, if she had been living, and had known my necessity, would have said: "Take sulphur." But that is what I never could do, as she used to mix it with molasses, and all of the family were required to take it in the spring of the year. She used to be tempted to whip me because I could never swallow it. She said it was the same with her when she was a child, and her mother used to punish her and compel her to take it, whereas the children would stand around and wait for the cup in order to scrape it. Her own experience was all that saved me from the punishment that she would otherwise have supposed was deserved. Still, the use of the article as a medicine must be good. Both grandmother's and mother's children who lived to maturity were numerous, and might well have been named "the rosy cheeked family." I am sure now that the difficulty with me was simply in my sense of smell, which was always very keen. The sulphur has an odor of its own, and then, to add molasses, in my case, was a mistake. It would always turn my stomach. I lately thought that a little stewed apple instead of molasses was what I needed with the sulphur. I have used it freely without the slightest unpleasantness, and am satisfied that I have gained the victory. For the little outward irritations I have used a mixture of lard and sulphur and am thoroughly relieved. —N. Y. Witness.

FARM NOTES.

CULTIVATION OF SMALL FRUITS.

Mr. M. A. Thayer, of Sparta, one of the most successful cultivators of small fruits in Wisconsin, has issued what he terms a "Berry Bulletin," in which is condensed valuable conclusions and judgments that have cost him much time and money, which we present to our readers:

Select well-drained land on which some hoed crop was grown last season, potato ground being best.

The soil should be deeply plowed, enriched with fine manure and harrowed until fine and mellow.

Large crops are never produced from poor soil and careless cultivation.

Fruit rows long and straight are easily cultivated and kept free from weeds.

Strawberries—Warfield (P), Crescent (P), Haverland (P), Dubach (P), Jesse (S), Michel's Early (S), Captain Jack (S), Parker Earl (S).

Black Raspberries—Homaha, Ohio, Palmer.

Red Raspberries—Harlboro, Cuthbert, Shaffers.

Blackberries—Ancient Briton, Snyder.

Currants—Red Dutch, White Grape, Victoria, Bay.

Gooseberries—Downing, Houghton, Industry.

Grapes—Moore's Early, Worden, Delaware, Brighton, Concord.

Many other varieties are worthy a place in every garden, and some of the newer kinds are very promising.

Select plants as carefully as you would seed grain or breeding stock. Select well-tested varieties, such as do well in your climate and on your particular soil.

High-priced novelties in small fruits are generally disappointing; leave them to the professional grower.

Never buy poor plants because they are cheap.

Strawberry plants from old beds should never be used.

Buy plants from your nearest responsible grower.

Those grown in special plant beds are best.

Order direct from the grower, thereby procuring better plants and true to name and at less price.

Never expose the roots of plants to wind or sun.

When received keep in a cool place until set in the ground.

Remove all old leaves, cut back long roots and broken roots and branches.

Strawberries are set in rows forty-two inches apart and two feet apart in the row.

Blackberries and raspberries in rows seven feet apart and three feet in the row.

Currants and gooseberries in rows from five to seven feet apart and three to five feet in the row.

Grapes eight to ten feet apart each way.

Strawberry plants are either pistillate (female) or staminate (male); every third row should be staminate to insure good fertilization.

The roots of all plants should be spread out in their natural position, and dirt pressed firmly about them.

The crown of strawberries should be kept just even with the surface of the ground, neither too deep nor too shallow.

Set all plants with care; no work in the fruit garden is more important.

Cultivate the ground often and keep free from weeds.

Subscribe liberally for good papers, study their horticultural columns well, and notice with care the results of your own work.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING.

The following facts relative to the use of wagons and the increase or decrease of draft through proper adjustment have been determined by experiment:

When the load was placed over the hind wheels it drew ten per cent easier than when it was placed over the front wheels.

Higher front wheels will reduce draft.

The change of the angle of draft as applied from the end of the pole varied the draft very markedly, and the relation of the draft of the front to the rear wheels. A long hitch or such a hitch as occurs when lead horses are used, increases draft on account of the angle of the hitch.

Draft varied with the varieties of grease used from nothing to 17 per cent—lard proving the best.

The draft of varying roads and condition of roads varied very markedly—being between the best and the poorest classes of local roads nearly 300 per cent in difference.—Inter Ocean.

A GOOD GRAFTING WAX.

Professor Budd, of Iowa, concludes that linseed oil, as at present manufactured, contains chemicals injurious to vegetation, and that as an ingredient of grafting wax it is unsuitable. According to a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, a much better wax is the following: Melt one pound of common resin over a quiet fire, add one ounce of beef tallow, stirring it well. Take it from the fire and let it cool a little; then stir in a tablespoonful of spirits of turpentine, and, after that, seven ounces of alcohol. Then put the vessel (any tin or iron vessel will answer to make it in) over the fire, stirring constantly until the compound begins to boil. Then remove, and the wax is ready for use.

It is also excellent for curing wounds on trees. If the compound becomes too thick, warm and add a little more alcohol.

SURFACE CULTIVATION.

It is seldom we find more of fact and reason in little space than in the following from George T. Pettit, of Kansas, in the Farm, Field and Fireside, on the shallow cultivation of corn: "By frequent, shallow cultivation, beginning early with the smoothing harrow, following later with spring-tooth, disk, or eagle-claw, we keep the surface clean and mellow; avoid ridging the land and mutilating the feeding rootlets which occupy the warm, fertile surface soil; hinder evaporation, prevent washing, hasten maturity; decrease labor, the effects of drought and cost of production, while increasing capillarity, yield and profit."

WEANING YOUNG PIGS.

The following method is successfully practiced by many breeders: If, at five or six weeks, the young pigs are eating and growing well, they increase their feed, giving them all that they will take, and decrease the feed of the sow gradually for nearly two weeks. At the end of this time the two strongest youngsters of the litter are taken away; again, after two days, another pair, and so on until all are weaned. This tends to even up the different pigs of the litter, if there is any variation in size, and uniformity in a lot does a good deal when it comes to selling, be they sheep, cattle, or hogs. By following this method the sow is given the very best chance, and any danger of spoiling her milking qualities is prevented, which is very important if she is to continue to be a brood sow.—Canadian Live Stock Journal.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

Is as important and needful to the average Man, Woman, and Child during the months of March, April, and May, as good digestive organs are to an appetite for breakfast, dinner, or supper. If, therefore, your system has become disordered from any cause whatever, take AYER'S Sarsaparilla, and take it now. It is the best of all Spring Medicines.

TAKE IT IN preference to any other blood-purifier. It is the medicine you need. Hundreds of Physicians say so, Thousands of Druggists say so, and Millions of Patients say so. There is positively no other remedy which will so thoroughly build up your system, strengthen your nerves, invigorate each organ, and help you to resist successfully the stormy, blustering weather of MARCH as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It will help you because it will purify your blood. Because it will destroy as well as expel from your system the poisons which, unless removed, produce weaknesses and disease. Because it changes the body from a condition of feebleness and affliction to one of health and strength—a change which is both radical and permanent.

TAKE IT IN cases of Scrofula or Scrofulous Humors. It will cure you of Salt Rheum, Eczema, Tetter, and Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, and Bowels. It quickens the appetite and acts upon every vital function, making food nourishing, sleep refreshing, work pleasant, and life enjoyable. There is no medicine that can set a man on his feet so quickly, firmly, safely, surely, and economically as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. If you have not taken it in March, take it in APRIL The approach of warmer weather brings with it warnings of Cholera; and other ailments which may all be easily avoided by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take it for Dyspepsia or Indigestion. It never fails. In taking it you lose no time nor deny yourself any food that nourishes.

TAKE IT IN cases of Debility, for that Tired Feeling, for Loss of Appetite, for Rheumatism, Old Sores, Chronic Ulcers, or Unhealed Wounds. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has, for 50 years, sustained a reputation for effecting cures, such as cannot be claimed for any other blood-purifier in the world. It is the Superior Medicine—always the same in strength, taste, and effect. This well-known, wonderful medicine is as good for the blood and effects a cure as easily in the pleasant month of MAY as it does if taken in December. It is the best all-round remedy for ailments originating in impure blood. It is the scientific enemy of disease, and is always to be depended upon for just what it is recommended.

A PRISONER OF HOPE.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Between Two Opinions," "Holden With Cords," etc., New England Correspondent of the "Cynosure," and Editor of the "Home Light."

This very interesting and helpful story by this popular writer, who is well-known to the readers of this paper, will begin in the issue of

Messiah's Herald

for April 5th. The heroine of the story is a cripple, who has been advised to try different methods of healing. The story tells how she was at last healed, but while showing how this was accomplished, the author also deals with certain erroneous ideas concerning bodily infirmities. In writing this story Miss Flagg has done her best work, and it is sure to win praises everywhere. It will have a GREAT RUN, and it is evident that the papers containing the earlier chapters will be soon exhausted. The story will be copyrighted, and will appear in no other periodical. Those who desire to secure the complete story should send in their orders at once. The story will be continued several months, so that the better way to secure it entire will be to subscribe for a year. The Herald is the oldest prophetic journal in the world, and is opposed to

Rum, Romanism, and All Evil.

It supplies sixteen large pages of the best reading matter every week. Terms: $1.50 per year, with Conwell's Life of Spurgeon (price $1.50) free, postpaid; six months, 75 cents, without the book. The book alone is worth the price asked for both it and the paper for one year.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking Powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 15th page).

President Cleveland, after consultation with his Cabinet, decided to send the American representatives to the International Monetary Conference to Brussels on the date adjourned to May 30 1893. The sentiment of the Cabinet was opposed to the proposition made in Europe to postpone the meeting until fall.

The Republican National League Convention is to be held at Louisville, Ky., May 10, 11.

The present condition of the Treasury seems to justify the confidence with which Secretary Carlisle has maintained that there was no reason to fear any serious financial disturbance.

A new organization has been formed at Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of making the Sunday law of 1794 odious by its strict enforcement. The president went to Homestead on Sunday and found 800 men at work in the steel mills. It is proposed to prosecute toll collectors on the bridges and every person engaged in worldly employment.

At an early hour Saturday morning the country northwest of Alton was visited by a severe hailstorm. At Melville a hailstone was picked up that was 1 7/8 inches in circumference. The average size of the hailstones was as large as an orange. The storm crossed from Melville to Godfrey. At the Monticello Seminary 300 window lights were knocked out. The seminary is damaged perhaps $300.

The inhabitants of East Carondelet, Mo., are becoming more frightened as the river continues to rise. Already the bottoms north of the little town and opposite Carondelet are inundated, and present the appearance of a vast inland sea, which seen through the tree tops from the bluffs in Carondelet, looks like another river east of and parallel with the Mississippi. A greater rise will drive the residents of East Carondelet to the second stories of their houses.

The most terrific cyclone that ever visited Texas devastated Cisco and Eastland county Friday night at 9:40 o'clock, laying waste everything in its path, which was about three-fourths of a mile wide. The storm destroyed all but about fifty houses in Cisco. Not a church or school house is standing and but one house is intact. At this writing the amount of damage to property and life can not be estimated. There are several killed and a great number more or less injured.

FOREIGN.

The war office at Vienna is planning to increase the Austrian army. Twenty-eight new batteries are to be added to the field artillery and the infantry is to be considerably increased.

The German Army bill, whose fate has been watched with so much interest, has been defeated in committee, a sure indication that it cannot pass in the Reichstag.

Artillery experts in Germany have been testing a new explosive invented by Dr. Weiss of the Gera dynamite factory, to take the place of gunpowder in the German army. The explosion of the new substance is not caused by a shock or spark, but by contact with another chemical compound, and is comparatively noiseless and almost unaccompanied by smoke.

China has at last been stirred up to make vigorous protest against the aggressions of Russia in Central Asia. After all, Russia, with her hundred million people, is but a pigmy in comparison with China; and, should they go to war, aided and encouraged by England, and taught and led by Englishmen, the Chinese might prove more than a match for Russia.

The wife of Captain Roberts, of the White Star steamship Naronic, which has been missing since Feb. 11, when the vessel sailed from Liverpool for New York, and the wife of Chief Officer Wright, who was second in command, have both gone insane through despair caused by the loss of their husbands and have had to be placed in an asylum for the insane.

William Townsend, aged 38, an opponent of Irish Home Rule, on Thursday last fired a revolver at an officer who was watching him as he ascended the steps of Mr. Gladstone's house in London. Papers found upon Townsend show that he probably intended to kill the great statesman.

News from Russia, April 27, show that cholera is decreasing in the empire, owing to cold weather. In the first week of April the total cases were 586, with 162 deaths.

"The German Emperor and Empress made an unofficial visit to the Vatican which lasted over an hour. In leaving, the Emperor took the hand of the Pope, intending to kiss it—thus showing his respect for the venerable head of the church. But his holiness waived the courtesy and warmly shook the Emperor by the hand, instead. The Emperor of a powerful nation thus recognizes the superiority of the Vice-gerent of the Universe—the King of kings."—Western Catholic News.

The Ulster party of law and order have replied to the recent victory of the Home Rule members in Parliament by handing over the town of Belfast to a band of rioters. Defeated in Westminster, the Unionists have triumphed in their stronghold over the Catholic workmen, factory girls, and guardians of the peace in that city.

It has practically been decided that quarantine in ordinary form shall be abandoned as a means of controlling cholera in Europe this summer. The English system of inspection and registration without detention will be substituted for it.

The Arrival of Spring.

When Spring arrives, the importance of taking some good blood-purifying, strengthening medicine, is recognized by nearly everybody. For at no other season is the system so much in need of, or so susceptible to, the benefit imparted by that reliable medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. It expels from the blood all the impurities which have accumulated in the winter, cures sick headache and dyspepsia, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and drives away THAT TIRED FEELING which may be the consequence or forerunner of disease.

"In the spring my whole system was completely run down. Two months ago I began to use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using two bottles I find my appetite restored, my nervous system toned up, and my general health greatly improved. I therefore take pleasure in telling about Hood's Sarsaparilla, and several persons to whom I have recommended it all speak of it in glowing terms. I consider Hood's Sarsaparilla has no equal." WHY

KNOW ABOUT

HARVEY.

The triumphant success of any great industrial enterprise, having for its object the financial and social improvement of twenty thousand people, ought to be of interest to every man, woman and child in America.

To you, for one.

For you may be one of the fortunate twenty thousand.

The Harvey enterprise in two and a half years' time has so benefited five thousand five hundred, and before the close of the century will benefit four times as many more.

By giving them pleasant homes, plenty of work, moral surroundings, nearness to Chicago, and scores of consequent advantages.

There is but one Harvey; the model manufacturing town of America.

Its history is unique, interesting, illustrated; it has helped hundreds to such a start in life as they never got before.

Don't you want it—the History? The start?

Then say so in a letter to THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, 819-825 The Rookery, Chicago, mentioning this paper.

You will get the History by return mail; the start—that depends.

More than a thousand German-American workmen united in an eight-hour parade on Sunday last, with music, badges and banner. The picnic proposed in connection with the parade was, however, abandoned until a more convenient season.

Dwight L. Moody, with Ira D. Sankey and Major D. W. Whittle, on Sunday opened their six-months' evangelistic campaign, by services at the Chicago Avenue and First Congregational churches. The meetings attracted immense crowds, and the interest is likely to increase, as branch services are to be established in all divisions of the city. The results of this Christian campaign must surely be beneficial in this sin-cursed city.

The recent shameful outrage upon students by a Greek-letter fraternity at the Wesleyan University, in Ohio, leads the Wheaton College Record to say:

After the death of young Rust, who was killed by the D. K. E. at Yale a year ago, that society, we are informed, promised the faculty that they would hereafter abstain from initiations and simply impose an obligation. It is reported that this promise on their part is already broken and that they are initiating in the old, idiotic, brutal fashion. If they are not doing it now, they will certainly do it by and by, if they are permitted to continue in existence. It used to be said by heartless people that the only good Indian was a dead Indian. This we do not at all believe, but we are perfectly satisfied that the only good secret society is a dead secret society. And although to the eye of unbelief these organizations seem now, in some respects, stronger than ever heretofore, those who believe in God and in the triumph of his truth wait with perfect assurance that in the end all these sources of evil will be abolished, and the example of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who said nothing in secret, prevail throughout the whole world.

Details of these outrages are printed on page 3 of this issue of the Cynosure.

"Unfortunately for the Cynosure, like the Pope, it opposes Freemasonry solely because Masons will not bow at its altar and put dollars in its treasury, and to that extent it also is an enemy to true civil and religious liberty."—Voice of Masonry for May.

The Cynosure covets not Masonry's money, which is an evil thing, wrung from ignorant applicants who attempt to enter its lodges. We say ignorant, because the great mass of novices who make application to its "sacred mysteries" have to pay from twenty-five to one hundred and twenty-five dollars for information that the N. C. A. can sell them for a dollar—and quite as correct in all particulars.

The World's Fair gates were closed all day on Sunday last, in accordance with the Congressional contract of the management in connection with the gift of $2,500,000. None but guards, workmen, exhibitors, and a few other favored persons were admitted; but it is estimated that at least 100,000 persons (sight-seers) were denied entrance. Thus the managers of the Fair kept their trust faithfully, and Chicago was saved the disgrace of a seven-days' exhibit during the first week of its existence. The opposition to Sunday closing is very wide and strong; but it is to be hoped that the management will not falter in its duty to God, the Christian world, and our national interests.

The city daily press, or that portion of it that is not financially interested in the profits of the Columbian Exposition, last week made full exposures of the exorbitance manifested by the concessionaries—the people who had paid for the privilege of charging whatever prices they please for the common necessities of life within its enclosure. Thus there were numerous restaurants—perhaps a hundred, or more—where the most ordinary meals were costing from two to four times more than in the city and literally robbing the public from whom they derive their support. The director of the Exposition, while not directly responsible for this rapacity, but indirectly accountable for not providing against its exercise when it made its contracts with these greedy caterers, was obliged to interfere and reduce the rates, which are still very high. There is but one way for visitors to circumvent this rapacity with any satisfaction, and that is to carry with them a food supply sufficient for the day.

The revised Chinese Exclusion law of the United States is now in force. It forbids, like the previous statute, Chinese immigrants coming into this country, and requires all those now here (numbering 103,000) to procure a certificate of residence within the year, under penalty of expulsion. Fresh immigrants entering the States in violation of the law are punishable by arrest, imprisonment, and, finally, a forced return to their native land. Supported by that powerful organization, the Chinese Six Companies, who oppose the law, the bulk of the Chinese residents have neglected to register. To arrest and imprison them under the law would be comparatively easy, but the imperfection of the statute places our government in a dilemma, for Congress provided no appropriation of money to pay for returning them to China. It certainly is very un-American to arrest men who are guilty of no moral crime and imprison them; and as the law cannot be fully satisfied until they are sent away, it looks as if the government had a very lively and large elephant on its hands.

Speaking of the inquiry made of the initiate in the first Masonic degree—"Do you believe in God?"—the Midland does not deem that belief any "test of the moral or religious character of the candidate, but merely his fitness to take an oath." That is all; and its scope, when answered in the affirmative, is broad enough to admit to the lodge Jews, Unitarians, professing Christians, Mohammedans, Indians, most of the heathens, deists—all, indeed, who acknowledge the existence of one divine ruling power, if they are sound in health and limb, including even the devil and his angels, who "also believe and tremble". The Midland thinks, however, that there is one whom Masonry (if consistent) would reject—the fool who "hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'" It would seem that almost anyone who is not a fool, or maimed, or halt, or poverty-stricken, or a dotard, or a woman, is eligible for initiation into the mysteries of the fraternity. Indeed, this characteristic forms a large percentage of Freemasonry's boasted "benevolence" and the brotherhood of man.

The "antiquity" of Masonry, of which so much has been said and written by its adherents in its praise, is a modern affair, originating in its adoption of the ancient mysteries of the pagans—its only claim to that distinction—after its organization in a London ale-house, in 1717. At a numerous meeting of the citizens of Boston and vicinity a committee of twelve was appointed to inquire into the origin, nature and principles of Freemasonry. In the report of this committee to the president and professors of Harvard University, November 4, 1829, it is stated: "They find the Masonic institution to claim an origin of much greater antiquity than is supported by any well-authenticated history that the undersigned have yet been able to meet with. They have discovered no book on Freemasonry written prior to 1723.... The Masonic writers which the committee have yet seen on the antiquity of Freemasonry appear to rely on tradition. But tradition is not asked for." But the fraternity still goes on manufacturing history founded on tradition, and boasting alike of its antiquity and "charity".

THE SITUATION IN THE SOUTH.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER.

A meeting of fifteen governors of Southern States was held at Richmond, Va., not long since, to devise means for increasing the immigration to that part of the United States. Having spent the winter forty or fifty miles south of Richmond, I was much impressed with the difference in the position of the unoccupied land there, and that of the land which is being so rapidly settled up in the Northwest.

The old plantations have not been divided into farms of suitable extent; and a very small portion of the land is under cultivation. A field of corn, a few acres of winter oats, and a little wheat, is the common mode of farming now, with a wide range of pasture for whatever stock is kept on the plantation.

Under this system, the southern portions of Virginia have become overgrown with forest trees; and flocks of wild deer roam over the valleys and on the hilltops. The land becomes a wilderness in a few years; being covered with a growth of what is called rough pine. The seeds of it are blown about by the wind in every direction, and take root in all unoccupied ground.

The only product which was raised for export, that I noticed, was tobacco; and but a small crop, comparatively, of this; for it could not be grown without fertilizers.

There are three or four small houses scattered about on most plantations, which are occupied by the old freedmen or their descendants, who pay one day's work a week as rent for their privileges; and the wages of laborers are very low.

The present current of immigration flows constantly towards the new lands in the West and Northwest; and there is no doubt that this movement is wise. But the time may come when all these lands will be occupied; and then the vacant places of the South may be required to supply the demand for tillable soil.

One great barrier in the way of immigration to the Southern States is the social question: Are immigrants, there, received into society on an equality with the other population? No; not unless they become converted to the old Bourbon spirit, and hate the Negro, and look down with contempt on all manual laborers. To such strangers they are very hospitable. But many settlers have gone to the South, only to find themselves deprived of all social standing or influence; and, being frozen out, they soon departed to more congenial climes, where they could be men among their fellow-men.

In civil government and political affairs, the condition of things is much the same. The old-time, slave-holding bosses maintained their position with the bowie knife and pistol. The same spirit prevails still, but with less display of force. Unfavorable or unpleasant votes are thrown away and never counted; and immigrants, to the fourth generation, can hold no office, unless they can sing the song of the old slave-holding aristocracy.

It is plain that there is no real repentance in the hearts of the people of the South for the crime of buying and selling their fellow-men; and they hate the freedmen, as mankind are wont to hate those whom they have wronged. And they hate those who have plucked the prey out of their hands, and who steadfastly condemn the wrong that was done. Such immigrants are not made welcome within their borders. Taking all these things into consideration, is it any wonder that the stream of immigration does not flow southward?

Kingston, Ill.

THE MORAL PIVOT.

All is not gold that glitters, all is not true religion that is religious, and all is not genuine, well-balanced morality that moralizes. Every moral system, whether genuine or pretended, has some pivotal point. Change this point, and you unbalance the whole. Change it for a new pivotal point, and the system, newly-balanced, becomes in effect another system.

Our Lord set the balance of Christian morals permanently when he fixed the pivotal point at LOVE. He who loved God lived a life truly poised, as related to one set of principles and commands. He who loved man could not live a life ill-balanced, as to his relations to men.

Pivoted at the point of supreme affection, Christian morals preserve their equal poise, and move with perfect balance and even tenor.

It is the trick of evil systems to preserve the show of morals, but to pivot the system newly. In effect, this is done when half the prop is knocked away, and thus both the law and its support are broken. In this case, love to God being removed, and love to man ostensibly left, the balance is lost, and half the double support is often found unable to stand alone.

Another method, which is not another, is to change the pivot so as to make each half take the other's place. Then the first and great commandment is to love the neighbor, and the second is like unto it, namely to love God. But, in practical effect, both these attempts are one. Little love of God abides in the heart of those who hate his law so much as to wish it changed.

The pivotal point of morals is shifted in the dark for the hoodwinked victims of the lodge. Now the pivotal principle is secrecy; and again it is obedience to the doctrines and commandments of men. However the ritual or lecture may prate of fraternity, seeming thus to assure the blindfolded dupe that the moral balance is unchanged, in practical effect the pivotal point is really another one. If his moral nature adjusts itself to the new balance, his views and principles are set ajar. Then his words will betray the new adjustment. His conduct, also, will develop some surprising change.

This readjustment of moral balance is not the least interesting study that engages the attention of the student of Freemasonry. He encounters its phenomena in places where they are least expected. Clear-headed men show symptoms of moral lunacy. Good men give expression to principles that have been held the exclusive property of criminals. Absurdities, self-contradictions, misstatements of palpable facts, and a strange unbalancing of moral sentiments, not to say intellectual conditions, perplex the looker-on. It is as if the sun had changed his place in the solar system, and the planets were lost from their true orbits, while, as yet, they had hardly settled into new ones. This result of Freemasonry must have impressed every one who has made the lodge and its occupants a study. He early learns to put a large grain of salt into every cup they offer him.

They seem to see everything as those who look into convex mirrors. Nothing is natural or true to them. They appear almost insane. Incredible things they fully believe, but obvious things they cannot see. They have lost the moral balance of both feeling and opinion.

No wonder, for the pivotal point is wrong.

CRUCIFER.

MASONRY AND HEATHENISM.

The heathen religion, of which I propose to speak more particularly, is that of a race of people who inhabit parts of Western Asia. They are called Nusairiyeh, from one Nusair, who founded the sect many generations ago. They are said to be descended from the heathen tribes that Joshua drove out of Palestine when he took possession of that country, and much of their doctrine and practice tends to the confirmation of this opinion. They are, in fact, heretical Moslems, claiming Mohammed to be the prophet of the Lord, but, instead of following the Caliphate of Abu Beker, the immediate successor of Mohammed, they follow that of Aly, who was slain by Abu Beker, or, at least, by his permission. As a consequence of the death of Aly, his followers were persecuted, and, through fear, a secret religion was established by them, which seems to be a conglomeration of the worst elements of all the religions upon the face of the earth.

In order to maintain their religion a profound secret, they bind themselves by the most horrid oaths, engaging to submit to a most fearful death should they violate their oath and reveal any part of their religion. In this respect, as well as in many others, the comparison between them and the Freemasons is very close indeed, as will appear in the sequel:

The religion of the Nusairiyeh people was revealed by one of themselves, Sheikh Suleyman, of the city of Adana, in the province of Cilicia, Asia Minor. He gives a detailed account of his own initiation, and afterwards speaks at length of the religion of his people.

He begins by saying: "Praise be to God, who hath brought us out of darkness into light, who has delivered us from doubt, rebellion and blight; who has led us to his Holy Word, which is the true merchandise; who has sent his Son as salvation to those who believe in him, and who restrains us by his grace from believing every deceiver. But he who is enriched by the treasures of his Almighty Lord, even Suleyman of Adana, having forsaken the heathen faith, and now, embracing Christianity, says that he was born in the city of Antioch, in the year 1250 of the Hegira (A. D. 1833), where he lived about seven years, when he removed to Adana; and when I was eighteen years of age my people taught me the secrets of their religion, which they reveal to no one who has not attained to the age of eighteen or twenty.

"That same day a great multitude of chiefs and common people gathered together and sent for me. (None but the initiated are permitted to attend these meetings, as in Masonry.) They then gave me a cup of wine. Then an officer (Prompter), who stood by my side told me to say: 'By the secret of your benevolence, O my lord, and the crown of my head, I am your disciple, and I will carry your sandals upon my head.' When I had quaffed the cup of wine the Imaam (chief officer, sometimes called Lord,) turned to me and said: 'Will you put the sandals of all present upon your head as a mark of respect for your lord?' I answered, 'No; but the sandals of my lord only.' Then those present laughed at my refusal to comply with the rule. They then commanded an attendant to bring my lord's shoes, when they uncovered my head and placed them upon it. Then the Prompter offered a prayer on my behalf, that I might receive the mystery; and after they had enjoined silence upon me with reference to what had thus far been done, they dispersed.

"Then, after forty days, they met again and sent for me. (This interval was allowed to expire, to test the candidate's ability to keep a secret.) The leader (Imaam) took his place beside me, gave me a cup of wine and told me to repeat the mystery of 'Ain,' 'Meem,' and 'Seen.' These are three Arabic letters. The 'Ain' refers to the Aly, being the first letter of his name. He is also called the 'Meaning.' The 'Meem' refers to Mohammed, being the first letter of his name. He is sometimes called the 'Curtain,' or the 'Veil.' The 'Seen' refers to Suleyman, the Persian, being the first letter of his name. He is also called the 'Door.' The three letters, taken together, form the word 'Amas'; and I was told that it was incumbent on me to pronounce this word five hundred times each day. (We have here a close resemblance to the Christian Trinity.) Again they commanded me to observe silence, and then dispersed. (Freemasonry, also, at each step of the initiation, solemnly warns the candidate to maintain silence.)

"Then, after seven months—ordinarily nine—they again gathered again, and sent for me. They placed me at some distance from them. (The ceremonies are becoming more solemn and important as they approach nearer the revelation of their great secret.) Then three officers arose, each one having in his hand a cup of wine, and, advancing toward the Imaam, singing a hymn, of which Husain, the son of Hamdaam the Khushbite, is the author. Then they advanced toward another officer, singing the following words:

'I asked for the honorable, where they dwelt,
And some of the people sent me to you.
By the truth of Mohammed, with those of his house,
Have mercy on me, who would kiss his hands.
I come to you, hoping acceptance to find,
And to-day would be counted among your guests.'

"Then they placed their hands upon the officer's head and sat down; but he arose and took the cup from the hand of one of the officers, and then knelt down and read the sixth chapter of their ritual, which is a prayer addressed to the heavenly bodies. One sect of the Nusairiyeh claims that Aly, to whom they pay divine honors, dwells in the sun. Another sect claims that he dwells in the moon, which he created for that very purpose, just as a man builds a house or makes a chair for his own use. They say that the dark part of the moon is Aly in a sitting posture, and it may be that this belief of theirs is the foundation of the idea that there is a man in the moon. This part of their ritual is doubtless copied from the ancient worship of Baal and Astarte, the representatives of the sun and the moon, respectively."

In Masonic lodges there is something similar to this. They have what is termed "the rite of circumambulation." In this rite the candidate kneels, and prayer is offered for him to the G. A. O. T. U. The Senior Deacon then takes him by the right arm and conducts him once, twice, or thrice, around the room, according to the degree he is taking,—first, second, or third. The origin of this ceremony is accounted for by Mackey, according to Edmond Ronayne (Master's Carpet, pp. 269, 271), as follows: "The circumambulation, among the pagan nations, refers to the great doctrine of Sabaism, or sun-worship. Freemasonry, alone, has preserved the primitive meaning, which was a symbolic allusion to the sun as the source of physical light and the most wonderful work of the Grand Architect of the Universe. The lodge represents the world. The three principal officers represent the sun in her three principal positions—at rising, at meridian, at setting." Doubtless, then, Masonry is the ancient worship of Baal, and the heathenism of Asia Minor revamped; and when Bro. Mackey states that Masonry is the only institution that has preserved this principle, he is slightly mistaken.

But to return to our Asiatic candidate.

"After the officer had read the sixth chapter of the ritual, he raised his head and read the ninth, which consists of a prayer addressed to (the Nusairiyeh Trinity) Aly, Mohammed, and Suleyman. Then he drank the cup of wine and read the seventh chapter (which is very similar to the ninth, and contains many vain repetitions.) Then the officer arose and advanced toward the Imaam, saying: 'Grace, grace, grace, my lord the Imaam.' Then the Imaam said: 'Grace unto you and those around you. Thou hast done what this assembly did not do, for thou hast taken the cup in thine hand and hast drunk and worshipped, and to God be the glory. And now what is your desire, and what your request.' The officer answered, after some further questioning: 'I met with one by the way who wishes to be instructed by you.' Then the Imaam asked: 'Who directed him to us?' The officer answered: 'The Ancient Meaning, the Great Name and the Precious Door.' (The candidate is then exhorted to be courageous and fear not, because what follows is fearful and terrible.)

"Then the Imaam said: 'Bring him here, that we may see him.' Then the officer took me by the right hand and presented me to the Imaam, who gave me his hands and his feet to kiss. Then he said to me: 'What do you want, my lad?' The Prompter then arose and came to my side and told me to say: 'I wish to learn your mystery, oh, companion of the believers!' Then he looked at me frowningly, and said: 'What has induced you to jeopardize yourself by asking from me this mystery, which is crowned with pearls and jewels, and those who revealed it were a favored angel and a commissioned prophet? Know, my son, that there are many angels, but none know this secret except the highly favored; and there are many prophets, but none know this secret except the commissioned; and there are many believers, but none know this mystery except the tried.'

What follows savors so strongly of Freemasonry that it needs no comment.

"Will you agree to have your head, hands and feet severed from your body if you ever reveal this great mystery?' I answered 'Yes.'" (He would not be much after that.) "Then the Imaam continued: 'You must bring one hundred guarantors.' Those present then said: 'The rule, my lord, the Imaam.' Then he said: 'For your sakes I will be satisfied with twelve.' The officer then arose and kissed the hands of the twelve guarantors, and I did likewise. Then these guarantors, or sureties, arose and said: 'Grace, my lord, the Imaam;' and the Imaam said: 'What do you want, oh, honorable ones?' 'We came,' they said, 'to guarantee this lad.' The Imaam then said: 'Should he reveal this mystery, will you bring him here that we may cut him to pieces and drink his blood?' And they answered, 'Yes'. Then the Imaam said to them: 'I am not satisfied with your guaranty. I want two responsible persons to guarantee you, also.' Then one of the guarantors ran, and I after him, and we kissed the hands of the two additional guarantors; after which they arose and laid their hands upon their breasts. Then the Imaam turned to them and said: 'Good evening to you, oh, ye pure and honorable guarantors. What do you wish?' They replied: 'We have come as security for these twelve sureties, and this person also.' Then said the Imaam: 'Should he desert us before he learns the prayers, or should he reveal this mystery, will you bring him that we may destroy his life?' They answered, 'Yes'. Then the Imaam said: 'Sureties pass away, and sureties of sureties pass away, and I want something that will not pass away. Come near me, my lad.' I did so, and he asked me to swear, by all the heavenly bodies, that I would not reveal this mystery. Then he handed me the book of assemblies (a book of poems and traditions), and the Prompter told me to say: 'Swear me, my lord, upon this great mystery, and thou shalt be free from my sin.' Then he received the book again, and said: 'My son, I do not swear you for the sake of gold and jewels, but only for the sake of the mystery of God, as our chiefs and rulers swore me.' This was repeated three times, and I placed my hand on the book of assemblies three times and swore that I would not reveal the mysteries confided to me as long as I lived. Then the Imaam said: 'Know, my child, that the earth will not receive your body in burial if you publish this mystery, and you will never again enter the human form, but will pass into the body of some vile beast, from which you will never escape.'

This is a reference to the transmigration of souls, which is a part of the Nusairiyeh religion. For example, they believe that the educated Moslems enter the bodies of asses when they die; that the Christian doctors enter the bodies of swine; that the Jewish rabbis enter the bodies of apes; but the wicked of their own people enter the bodies of clean animals, or the bodies of persons who belong to sects other than their own; while they hold that the genuine followers of the Nusairiyeh religion reappear in the same form and capacity in future generations, or are transported to take up their abode in some of the heavenly bodies. The Freemasons do not seem to have incorporated this belief into their body of doctrine as yet, but may do so as they make progress and receive new light; and should they think favorably of the idea, I assure them that this suggestion is entirely gratuitous.

Moreover, there is at least one sect of the Nusairiyeh that is said to practice the worship of Baal Peor, the abominable worship of the Moabites, by which the children of Israel corrupted themselves. Past Grand Master Mackey, in speaking of the point within the circle, says that it is derived from the ancient sun-worship, and is, in reality, of Phallic origin (Master's Carpet, p. 324). Again, the same writer says (Manual of the Lodge, p. 56): "The point within the circle is an interesting and important symbol of Freemasonry; but it has been so debased in the interpretation of it in the modern lectures that the sooner that interpretation is forgotten by the Masonic student, the better it will be. The symbol is really a beautiful but somewhat abstruse allusion to the old sun worship, and introduces us, for the first time, to that modification of it known among the ancients as the worship of Phallus" (representing the male organ of generation). It would seem that Freemasonry, in observing ceremonies of this nature, is performing a retrograde movement instead of advancing, and has descended to the vilest and most abominable worship upon the face of the earth.

But to return from this digression to the initiation of Suleyman.

"The ceremonies were concluded by drinking wine, by placing the girdle, or zennar, upon the candidate, and by giving him a seat among the initiated. The zennar, in this case, would seem to coincide with the cable-tow of Masonry. After the candidate had been finally admitted, the process of instruction began and was carried forward as fast as the novice was able to absorb the great mysteries of this occult religion. But the course is rather long and tedious to mention here. However, I would state that the first lesson relates to the very important matter of cursing, which is a component part of their prayers. The Nusairiyeh curses Abu Beker, the reputed slayer of Aly, his god. He curses all the followers of Abu Beker, the true Moslems of to-day. He curses the Christians, and all others who do not believe in Aly and worship him as God. They are more prolific of curses than anything else; and if their withering maledictions were effective, there would not be a soul left on the face of the earth but themselves."

A word, in closing, with reference to the civilizing tendency and elevating influence of Freemasonry, as is claimed for it by some writers (Freemasons' Guide, by D. Sickels, p. 57; M. C., p. 233), saying that "Freemasonry was one of the earliest agencies employed to effect the improvement and enlightenment of men." Should we be permitted to take the present condition of the Nusairiyeh people as an example of the results achieved by the lodge system, then our fellow-mortals who resort to such means for enlightenment and culture do not have a very enchanting destiny before them. The Nusairiyeh have been practicing the religion partially described in this paper for a period of 1,300 years, and they are, to day, among the most—if, indeed, not the most—degraded peoples of all Asia. They are cowardly and deceitful, to the last degree. The Nusairiyeh is so treacherous that he will betray a friend as soon as an enemy, provided he thinks it will inure to his personal advantage. They are atrocious and blood-thirsty, and take peculiar delight in torturing their enemies and in visiting the death-penalty upon anyone who has revealed any part of their religion. Suleyman, to whom we are indebted for our knowledge of the Nusairiyeh religion, was put to death in a manner much more horrid and brutal than his oath required. He was buried alive, except his head, and was thus abandoned, although under surveillance, to prevent relief, a prey to the scorching sun and the vultures by day, and the wild beasts by night, until death finally came to his relief. This is the very refinement of cruelty, but it is the legitimate fruit of the influence of the barbarously savage oath of death by mutilation which is administered to the candidate for initiation into the mysteries either of the East or of the West.

Just one more comparison, and I have done. The Nusairiyeh do not reveal the mysteries of their wonderful religion to women. The Masons resemble them in this regard; but whether it is for the same reason I know not. Possibly it is. The Nusairiyeh refuses to admit his wife to the mysteries of his religion, because he claims that the devil created her out of the sin of man; that she has no soul, and consequently cannot comprehend religion; and, furthermore, has no need of it because she has no future. If, therefore, the Freemasons exclude women from their lodges for some other reason, and in their search after light should be looking for a stronger one, I cordially recommend to them the reason just mentioned, which they are at liberty to use without charge.

May the Lord enlighten the darkened understanding of the heathen of our own land as well as of foreign lands!

MISSIONARY.

BARBAROUS COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

DETAILS OF THE DISFIGUREMENT OF STUDENTS, MALE AND FEMALE, AT THE OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, DELAWARE, OHIO.

Brief mention of one of the meanest and most barbarous outrages by Greek-letter fraternities ever perpetrated, at Delaware, Ohio, April 19, has already appeared in the Cynosure. From various exchanges we are enabled to give our readers minute details of this diabolical affair.

Our first extract is from a special dispatch, dated Delaware, April 20, printed in the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette on the following day:

The vandalism was manipulated by some of the pious students of the Ohio Wesleyan University, one of the greatest religious institutions of the State, and was such a deed as would have made the Indians of North America ashamed of themselves, even in their most barbarous state of existence. The Ohio Wesleyan University has among its students what are known as Greek fraternities, which are secret social organizations, and to which most of the better class of students belong. The practices and customs of these class fraternities are such as would make the blood freeze in the veins of the most courageous, even on a hot July day. The most lawless of their practices are their initiations. It was this, together with one of the most brutal hazings ever heard of in college history, that took place here last night.

Last night the junior class fraternity, called the S. Z. N. (Sigma Zeta Nu), concluded to initiate a student named P. A. Wilson, who is a junior, but who has not yet received his rank. It so happened that the sophomore class fraternity, called the D. O. A. (Delta Omicron Alpha), had also intended to initiate the same man. About 11 o'clock the juniors, four in number, with their initiate, went to the Chi-Phi hall to show their victim the secrecies of the organization. At about 12 o'clock, while they were going through the most heated part of the ritual, the sophomores, twelve in number, and big, raw-boned fellows at that, having procured a key, burst into the hall, and, like a lot of hungry hyenas, pounced upon the little juniors and gave them one of the worst treatments ever heard of in this part of the country. For fully fifteen minutes the juniors did all in their power to withstand the horrible blows, and then went under, senseless and bleeding.

It was certainly one of the most atrocious and bloody fights that ever took place within this city. The juniors were then at the mercy of their conquerors, who, like raving maniacs, proceeded to inflict on their victims some of the most excruciating tortures ever before heard of. They were first stripped of their clothes and whipped with ropes until they bled all over and fell exhausted to the floor. Then they were each laid on the floor, tied, with their faces up, and the letters "D. O. A." printed on their cheeks and chin with nitrate of silver, and also little horns on each temple. The caustic was allowed to stay there until it had burned clear through the skin, thus branding five bright young men like Texas steers for life. Not being satisfied with this, they stood them up and with red-hot shovels burned their bare backs and legs into blisters. Four of the victims were then bound hand and foot and gagged, and left in the hall. They were Messrs. Bert Rogers, M. W. Brown, Albert Austin and O. R. Harm; and the other, Mr. Will Wallis, was gagged and taken about two squares and bound in a stall with a cow, from which place he was extricated this morning when the man came to milk.

The others lay in the hall until some passer-by heard one of them groan, and, on going up, let them loose. The young men are confined to their beds to-day, and some of their cases are very serious. They are ruined for life. No action has as yet been taken on the assailants, but they will probably be arrested to-morrow. The college faculty have done nothing yet, nor are they likely to, because the perpetrators are the sons of wealthy parents, and stand well with the college authorities. The citizens of the city are very indignant, and may take it in hand. It is certainly a disgrace to the college, as well as to the young men, who should be made to feel the full extent of the law.

Next week we purpose to resume this subject, introducing an illustration showing the wretched disfigurement undergone by the victims of this barbarity.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The wonders of Astronomy.—The Massachusetts bishopric.—Old colonial days.—Old-time furniture and old time virtues.—Masonry and Romanism.

Half a million suns in the Milky Way! Such is the wonderful "latest result" of science, aided by photography; but how do we know how far that stream of "tangled star-dust" extends. Does it touch the shores of Infinity, breaking in waves of fiery splendor farther than mortal vision can ever reach? Think of it. Every one of these half-million suns—and there is a certainty that this estimate does not begin to cover the countless numbers that even the great Lick telescope fails to bring within the range of human vision—the center of a planetary system of its own, which is, either at present or destined to be in the future, the homes of happy, intelligent life. It does us good occasionally to read such things and take in the sense of largeness and space as we take in deep breaths of the morning wind that has swept over miles of hill and plain and comes to us with an unworn freshness on its wings. Death is contraction; life is enlargement. The words spoken so long ago among the hills of Galilee modern astronomy is writing on the heavens: "In my Father's house are many mansions".

"The sun is in a state of great disturbance," so say observers of the recent total eclipse. And yet who would think as he rides in such tranquil majesty through the heavens that his surface is the scene of vast magnetic storms, of whose fury we can have but the faintest conception, and to which our wildest tornadoes and cyclones are as a summer breeze. It was during one of these, no doubt, that the meteoric stone was cast out which recently struck off an arm from the John Brown statue. Prof. Totten considers this another link in the chain of prophetic evidence that "judgments are determined" upon our guilty land. It is certain that many of us who cannot follow the learned professor to the extreme verge of all his mathematical demonstrations, felt a certain ominous chill go over us when we read of this strange freak on the part of "the powers of the air". I know there are some people who are so afraid of being suspected of the least tinge of superstition that they see in such things "only a coincidence"; but I believe the old heathen were, according to their light, wiser when they ascribed them to direct heavenly agency.

It is rather singular that the diocese of Massachusetts should have to go begging for a man to fill Bishop Brooks' place. Bishop Hare, of South Dakota seemed as eligible a candidate as any, for, aside from his noble personal character, his missionary experience seemed to stamp him as physically equal to a post whose onerous duties, it is said, were the chief cause of the death of its last two incumbents.

The tombstone of Rev. Wareham Williams, a leading minister of colonial times, was recently found in Waltham, Mass., by workmen who happened to be digging in Main street, its busiest thoroughfare. He was one of the children in the charge of the brave Hannah Dunstan, whose heroism in rescuing her little party of captives from the Indians at the time of the Deerfield massacre, in 1703, forms one of the most stirring chapters in our early records. There his bones have laid all these years, trampled over by the careless multitude, until his final resting-place was unearthed by the pick-axe of some son of Italy. How far away seem those times that were once so terribly near and real, when the settler, no matter whether it was week-day or Sunday, dared not, for all his scalp was worth, plough or sow, or go to meeting without his trusty flint-lock gun by his side; and the women were all Debrahs and Jaels, because obliged to be by that stern Necessity, which is as often the mother of heroines as she is of inventors!

By the way, I wonder if this present revival of the antique forms in furniture means a corresponding revival of the old-time virtues? Somehow the straight-backed chairs of our great grandmothers' day, with their stiff, unbending lines and abundance of "timber," seem to figure forth the solid characters and stern integrity of the men and women who used to sit in them, while the frail reception chair, modeled after a Louis XIV. design, always brings before my mind a vision of occupants whose morals were equally frail—courtly roues and painted, be-ringed dames, such as Madame de Sevigne makes us acquainted with in her famous letters. I am rather disposed to think that sham furniture is conducive to the making of sham characters, and that one of the first steps in bringing about a renaissance of the old-fashioned virtues is to give us back the massive proportions and dignified grace of the old-time furniture, not picked out in white and gold, and therefore too nice to use, nor tied with ribbons to make them look as if they were masquerading. A foreign art-critic says: "I like not lamps dressed up like ladies." And who, with any true taste, does like it? A ribbon does very well to adorn a hat or bonnet, or a fair lady's neck, but is altogether out of place when used to decorate the chair she sits in.

If the Yale and Harvard authorities would follow the example of the Ohio Wesleyan University, and abolish the secret organizations, they would save themselves much disgrace and scandal, and would graduate more students and fewer rowdies. It is a point to which the authorities of those institutions will have to come eventually, and in reform, as well as in religion, there is no time like "Now".

"Romanism and secret societies are ruining our country." This is the testimony which comes in a private letter received last week from a Christian worker in Washington. Here is fresh evidence that our capital is "in the lap of Rome," which she had herself from the lips of a lady, now a converted Catholic and in government employ. I quote from her letter, adding as a supplement another instance nearer home, which shows that New England is almost as completely in her shining grasp:—"She told me that a colored woman here in the city kept several houses of prostitution, the proceeds of which go into the Romish church; but when, sometime previous to her coming out, she spoke to Cardinal Gibbons about it, he assured her that it was all right for the proprietress of these places (she was a colored woman) to get the money in that way; that it mattered not how it was obtained if it went into the church. The power, he added, was in their hands, and they would use it; that they would have the money of the Protestants and the Protestants, too," etc. And this is the man with whom Cleveland hobnobs, and whose receptions held for the Pope's representative, Satolli, even prominent Protestant ministers and their wives think it no shame to attend.

But now for the instance nearer home. Have we really freedom of the press in New England? If so, how such could an incident as the following happen in a New England city? A large sum of money was bequeathed to a certain religious association. The disappointed relatives tried, on very weak grounds, to break the will. When the case was taken into court the jury failed to agree, and the counsel for the association told them it was a hopeless case; that they would never succeed in getting a jury who would agree, or at least decide in their favor, and they had better compromise. And why? Simply because the paper which is the organ of this association is outspoken against Romanism and Masonry! I believe they have refused a compromise, so the final outcome is yet to be seen. I am not allowed to give names—only to state these facts, which speak for themselves. Who shall say that there is not a Pilate and Herod agreement between Rome and the secret empire?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 3, 1893.

The much-talked about Geary Chinese Exclusion law provides that all Chinese residents of the United States who shall not register, as there-in provided for, on or before May 5, 1893, shall be returned to the country whence they came; but no orders have been issued by the officials of the Treasury department for the arrest of these Chinamen who have failed to comply with the law—only a very small percentage of them have done so—and none are expected until the Supreme Court passes upon the constitutionality of the Exclusion law, which it will shortly do, May 10, having been named by Chief Justice Fuller as the time for hearing arguments. Even if the Supreme Court upholds the constitutionality of the law, there is an obstacle to the deportation of the Chinese, in the absence of an appropriation to pay the necessary expenses.

The Atlantic Conference of the German Evangelical Synod closed its successful sessions on Monday evening, and on Tuesday the spring meeting of the Unitarian Conference of the Middle States and Canada began a two days' session. Last night Rev. Robt. Collyer, of New York, preached a special sermon to the conference, which closed to-night.

As the subject of polygamy in Utah is still more or less discussed, the following remarks by Mr. J. L. Rawlins, at present in Washington, delegate-elect from that Territory to the Fifty-third Congress, even if not altogether in accord with reports made by disinterested parties, are interesting: "Whatever you may hear to the contrary, you may take my word for it that polygamy is dead. Of course, here and there, it is possible to find a man who has gone back to one or more of his former wives. When convicted he is sent to the penitentiary. The younger men of Mormondom were anxious for the abolition of plural marriages long before the church leaders gave in. They have put away their women, and are acting in good faith. In frequent cases they are still supporting them and the children, but they are not living polygamously. There has been an utter change in this respect. It would be as impossible to re-establish polygamy in Utah as to re-establish slavery in the South. It has gone, never to return. The men who, five years ago, were loudest in denunciation of the policy of the government, see most clearly the benefits to be derived from monogamy and the single family grown from one man and one woman, which is the basis of the State." It is hardly necessary to add that this statement was made by Delegate Rawlins as an argument to show that Utah is now in a position to be admitted to the Union of States, which is one of the benefits the Mormons "see most clearly."

"From Greenland's icy mountains, From India's coral strand," come the servants of the Master, to tell what Christianity has done for them, and to encourage the faint-hearted to aid in extending and continuing the good work. Last Sunday Rev. S. V. Kainarkai, of Bombay, India, preached to a local congregation on "India and the Gospel," and if his sermon lacked the well-turned periods which have made many pulpit orators famous, it contained a fiery earnestness that is often lacking in our greatest preachers. He told of the hard experiences of his father, who had been converted to Christianity when he was a teacher in a Bombay school. He was a high caste Hindoo, and his conversion to Christianity was followed by the complete social ostracism of himself and his family. But he was not discouraged; he became a missionary among the poor of his race and spent his life explaining to them the great truths of the Gospel and pointing out to them the true way to live, a task which the son has taken up. Mr. Kainarkai and his wife are the guests of Rev. Dr. T. S. Hamlin, of this city.

The Good Templars, Rechabites and Sons of Jonadab have entered into an agreement to publish a monthly temperance paper under the suggestive title of "No Compromise." Its editors are to be selected from those organizations.

A mass-meeting of all the temperance organizations is to be held on the 12th inst., for the purpose of forming an anti-liquor league. Everybody opposed to the liquor traffic is eligible for membership in the league.

Rev. Mr. Miller, of Reading, Pa., founder of the "Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip," an undenominational organization of young men, formed for Christian work, addressed a large meeting last night, held under the auspices of the three Washington chapters of the organization for the purpose of explaining its objects and increasing its membership. It is expected that the result will be the formation of several new chapters. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., May 1, 1893.

I am enjoying the bracing atmosphere and comparative quiet of this enterprising and beautiful New England city. - I am advertised to give a "chart-talk" in Mission Hall, at 7:30 this evening, on "Not this Man, but Barabbas," or, Christ rejected.

I attended four services here yesterday, and may remain for a second lecture on Tuesday evening should the interest seem to warrant it.

An event of last week was the departure of a company to exhibit some of the industries of Willimantic in the World's Fair. Parties were in that company who had never seen the inside of a sleeping-car, or been outside of the "Nutmeg State". Anticipation was of course "on tiptoe," and their curiosity to "catch glimpses" of the little strip of this "wide, wide world" sketched along the pathway of their "flying steed," to see the face of old Niagara and hear the "thunder of his voice," to breathe the air of Her British Majesty's Dominion, and to "take in" some of the many mysteries of the "Windy City" and of her guest, the mammoth fair of all "nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues under the whole heavens," will doubtless be realized during their six-months' contemplated absence. The companies represented are deserving of commendation for paying not only every expense, but generously increasing their per diem for the entire trip. Let this be placed to the credit of Willimantic capitalists, and remembered whenever the "labor bosses" advocate a strike.

The three weeks since I left home have been crowded full of events more or less significant, in the direct line of our work. Some of these have appeared in reports of the New York Conference, and all are written down in "His book of remembrance". Stephen Merritt's appearance in the conference, and his assertion that the "lodges in his neighborhood are making more drunkards than the churches were saving souls," is a fact that cannot fail to deeply interest, and which ought to stir the sluggish blood of every indifferent temperance advocate, inside or outside of the lodge. At Florence Mission I received a most cordial welcome from good Mother Prinall and her aids in rescue work, and accepted an invitation to dine with her and her numerous family, all of whom call her by the endearing name of "Mother". This servant of Christ has many cares and "labors abundant," but many stars will adorn the "crown of her rejoicing".

Bro. James Mathews, in mission work at No. 22 State street, has grown older since I clasped hands with him before; but many who have listened to his eloquent words and witnessed his zeal for the truth will be glad to hear that neither his physical, intellectual or spiritual force seems one whit abated.

Two calls upon Bro. James O'Connor, at his commodious headquarters, No. 142 West 21st street, reassure me of his sympathy with our cause in general, and of the loving, gentle heart of this escaped priest from the galling yoke which neither he or his former confederates are able to bear. The temptation of one in his position is to tolerate the so-called "patriotic orders," as exceptions to the general rule. The times call for men who, "walking in the light," have no dark side and are willing to use God's weapons in God's way and leave the cellars and garrets and "tyled recesses" and awful mysteries to the devil and those who love darkness because their deeds are evil.

The attendance at my lecture in the Swedish Congregationalist church in Hartford was estimated by the pastor to be about 125, though the Courant of the following morning reported about forty Swedes present. The New York Tribune was more accurate and respectful in its report of the conference; and I am confident that many will rejoice while they read the account, prepared and forwarded by the secretary, of what the Lord hath done in the commercial metropolis of North America.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

HOME HOTEL, Pittsburgh, Pa., }
May 5, 1893. }

A wise man, inspired by the Holy Spirit, exclaimed: "Doth not wisdom cry?" In the light of passing events, we may well reiterate this exclamation. The papers daily tell us of wrecked lives, ending in folly and shame.

Frank Ward started in business as a milk-deliverer in the city of Washington, D. C. His bright, attractive manners brought friends. Business ability brought money. Dairy lunch-rooms brought wealth. He became a Freemason; patronized the saloon; shot a man while crazed with liquor; was tried as a murderer; was believed to have been cleared by Masonic brethren; signed the pledge; soon drank with old companions; money gone; was killed by an electric car, as he fell intoxicated before it; a widow and interesting family thrown on the charities of the world. All this in twenty years.

Last Sabbath, in the same city, the remains of lawyer Cahill were buried. The papers say that one of the most brilliant of the district lawyers has gone. He was the Supreme Exalted Ruler of a secret society called Elks, and was buried with what honor and display they could give. For years he has been noted as an available lawyer when liquor-dealers wished an advocate. He drank the liquor extended by his professed friends. At the age of 44 he finds himself a drunkard and drops into a suicide's grave. His widow and children are left to struggle on alone. "Doth not wisdom cry?" Yet how few comparatively listen to her warning voice!

During the past week I have been traveling, passing two days in New York, one in Philadelphia and Conshohocken, Pa., one in Baltimore, Md., and the rest of the time in Washington, D. C.

I spoke twice on Sabbath. In the afternoon I attended a meeting for the promotion of holiness. As I have attended this meeting several times and never heard the sin of the lodge alluded to in the public meeting, nor had I spoken of it myself, I thought this would be my opportunity. The sin of drunkenness is frequently mentioned; the cold and lukewarm condition of many of the churches is constantly alluded to; Divine healing is advocated. In this very meeting a sister was reported as having had her sight restored in answer to prayer, and the doxology was sung, indicative of the joy of those present.

I told the audience that I had some good news to bring. I had just come from a conference in the city of New York, where the secret society evil had been discussed, and where Bro. Stephen Merritt, among others, gave a grand testimony regarding his deliverance from the lodge. I then went on to relate his experience as given in the last Cynosure. This seemed to give new life to the meeting. Several wished to speak at once. A friend on the platform got the floor, and declared himself a Mason, though he had some thoughts of taking a demit. He thought outside questions should not be introduced in a holiness meeting. The sister in charge of the meeting tried to calm the troubled waters. She did not believe in secret societies, but thought the best way to deal with them was not to speak of their evil, but get people filled with the Holy Ghost, and quoted the passage, "And he (the Holy Ghost) shall teach you all things."—John 14:26.

I am frequently told by persons who do not wish to have reform questions mentioned in their churches: "We preach Christ and him crucified," only. These statements are on a par, both put forward as excuses for not doing duty. How can you preach Christ crucified and not hit the sins that crucified him? How can the Holy Ghost teach us all things without human agency? God's Holy Spirit speaks through human lips. Being filled with the Holy Spirit does not make people allwise. Why do not these friends act consistently and oppose the mention of all other forms of evil, leaving the Holy Ghost to lead into truth regarding them also? God greatly blessed me in giving this testimony, and several who had belonged to the lodge and found deliverance thanked me for it at the close of the meeting.

Sabbath evening I fulfilled a promise made some time ago, and preached for Bro. S. Alexander in a Baptist church at Georgetown. The church was full of attentive listeners. I have spoken for this brother many times, and am always welcome to his pulpit. Though there are many secret society members in his church, he preaches against them, and tells me to be perfectly free to say what I think best.

I had scarcely registered last night when I was approached by reporters representing the Gazette and Post. I see a respectful notice of our interview in this morning's Post.

Any who wish to have lecturers in Western Pennsylvania can address me, general delivery, Pittsburgh, for two weeks.

W. B. STODDARD.

The following is the Pittsburgh Post's report of its interview with Bro. Stoddard:

Rev. W. B. Stoddard, of Washington, D. C., is in the city. The object of his visit to Pittsburgh is to work against secret societies. Mr. Stoddard was here and took an active part in the anti-secret society convention which occurred in Carnegie Hall some time ago. He is a preacher in the Congregational church, and has been in New York for some time past working for the extinction of Gotham's secret organizations. Last night he said to a Post reporter: "While in Pittsburgh I shall co-operate with the 'Western Pennsylvania State Association Opposed to Secret Societies.' My work for the most part will comprise a series of lectures in nearby towns against secret societies. I am opposed to such institutions because they are injurious to church, home and state. They foster a religion which is in many respects anti-Christian; they bind a man to share with his brother lodgeman a confidence which he dare not entrust to his family, and they are frequently the direct means of preventing justice. Our Association has induced hundreds of members to withdraw from their societies, and it is preparing to pursue its labors upon a much broader basis."

ODD-FELLOWSHIP IN THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

AUGUSTA, Kans., April 29, 1893.

I am on my way to Douglass, where I will preach to-morrow morning and address a union temperance meeting in the evening. I shall return to Augusta on Monday and address a mass temperance and prohibition meeting in the Opera House in the evening.

I attended an interesting meeting on last Wednesday evening in Valley Center. As is well-known, April 26th is a gala day in Odd-fellowship. This year it is the seventy-fourth anniversary of the founding of Oddfellowship in this country. Rev. Mr. Warner, a Campbellite minister of Wichita, gave the address at Valley Center. One week before I had given an address in that town on Odd-fellowship. At the conclusion of that meeting I gave opportunity for any to ask questions or make remarks. One Odd-fellow, the Noble Grand of the local lodge, took advantage of the privilege and made a few remarks, and in conclusion announced this meeting on the 26th and invited us to be present, that we might learn something of Odd-fellowship.

I made it a point to be present. The speaker remarked that "Odd-fellowship is not a secret society." Query:—Why are our secret society people so afraid to have their fraternities called or considered secret societies? Why juggle with names? If Odd-fellowship is not a secret society what is a secret society? To characterize it by no stronger term, it is childish to make such affirmations. No one who thinks beyond the end of his nose is deceived by them. Facts cannot be changed so easily. They remain in spite of a thousand affirmations to the contrary. Make a remark adverse to Odd-fellowship and you are asked if you are an Odd-fellow. To your reply that you are not the answer is returned: "Then you don't know anything about it." Ah! How is that? Because it is a "secret society".

The speaker affirmed, several times, that the church is the greatest institution in the world, and that he loved the church the best. But these declarations, I am sorry to remark, were always a

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LETTER FROM REV. J. M. FOSTER.

BOSTON, April 26, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last Monday the Boston Journal celebrated its sixtieth birthday by a mammoth paper of fifty pages, the largest ever printed in the world. This paper is of a high moral grade, and issues no Sabbath edition. It has witnessed, in its three score years, the marvelous development of this country. Then there were only 10,000,000 people, but now 65,000,000. Then the horseback post was the best; now the lightning express, the telegraph and telephone bring all parts together. The flail has been supplanted by the steam thrasher, and the sickle by the steam reaper. Mountains have yielded their stores of gold and silver and copper and coal and oil and gas; forests have fallen, and cities have risen in valley and plain. This country is capable of sustaining and enriching one thousand million of people. But unless the morals of society are developed and the religious spirit cultivated, the material greatness of our nation will only increase her greatness in crime.

Our nation made a fatal mistake, in the beginning, in ignoring the God of national blessings. The secular Constitution of the United States has resulted in debasing political virtue, political integrity and political morality. It pollutes whatever it touches. During the Presidential campaign we sent President Cleveland a copy of our book: "Reformation Principles," and, in an accompanying note suggested that Chapter XII., on "Christ the King of Nations," might furnish a justification for his calling the attention of the nation to the claims of King Jesus upon this people in his Inaugural Address. We also suggested that Chapter III., on "The Moral Responsibility and Accountability of Nations," might afford ground for his urging upon Congress, in his annual message, the duty of submitting to the people the Christian amendment to the United States Constitution. But when his Inaugural appeared "there was nothing but leaves"; only a bare recognition of a Supreme Being, such as any Jew, Mohammedan, or deist, would make.

Why is it that a Christian man, who believes in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, who recognizes him as "the desire of all nations," and the source of national as of individual blessings, will studiously avoid any reference to the name that is above every name when becoming the chief magistrate of a people whom He created, purchased, organized and clothed with governmental authority? The only answer is: The Constitution of the nation is the supreme law, and when a conscientious man swears to support it he feels that he is prohibited from officially recognizing the King of nations.

I have been reading a book bearing the strange title: "Letters from Hell". The writer pictures the lost as forever engaged in what they delighted in here, but with no satisfaction; and when Satan appears, to view his guests, all hell is moved; a pall of fear and dread falls upon every one. So the U. S. Constitution spreads its pall of secularism over all—legislative, judicial, executive—and all are brought under the spell of political atheism. This cannot continue for long. Light cannot dwell with darkness. Christ and the devil cannot co-operate. The kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of hell cannot join hands. Christ's children cannot be united with Satan's followers. So a Christian nation cannot keep a secular constitution in peace. Wendell Phillips said: "This land is not large enough to contain slavery and freedom together." It is not large enough to contain Christ's people and Satan's dominion. They are antagonistic and mutually destructive. One or the other must yield. But in the meantime it does seem plain that Christ's children should repudiate the political atheism of our national compact and prove their sincerity and loyalty to the King of kings by refusing to swear to support it as their supreme law. It was a great sin on the part of President Cleveland to swear to support a constitution which interferes with his allegiance to the Saviour-King. It was a greater sin for him to offer an open and public affront to the King of nations by observing silence respecting his crown-rights and royal prerogatives. And it is the greatest sin of all for this Christian nation to deliberately, persistently and knowingly ignore the authority and law of the King of kings in her supreme law.

But we do not despair of the republic. The hand of God is manifest in the history of this nation. His providence has made this nation great. He laid his hand upon us in judgments, and compelled us to put away the sin of slavery. He will lay his hand upon us again and compel us to put away this political atheism and recognize Christ as King of nations. The time for this is near at hand.

Last Saturday several columns were devoted to Mrs. Gardner of Beacon street, Boston, the social queen. The scenes of her regnancy are the ball-room, the theatre and the banquet hall. Her money is spent lavishly on costumes imported from Paris. What a record! We think of Brainard, the missionary to the Indians, whose body lies at Northampton, Mass. He spent his life traversing New England forests, and climbing the mountains, visiting Indian villages, preaching the word of life. He came to the home of Dr. Jonathan Edwards, where he took ill and died. Listening to his prayers and talk determined Dr. Edwards to resign his congregation and go out as a missionary. A cobbler in England read Brainard's diary, and was led to go as a missionary to India. That was Wm. Carey. What a contrast between rich Mrs. Gardner and poor Brainard! A young man went as a missionary to China. He soon adopted the Chinese dress, and sent his photo to his sister. When she saw it she wept, and wrote: "What a gulf this change of dress has placed between me and my dear brother!" He replied: "What a gulf was placed between the Father and his dear Son, when Christ clothed himself in human nature and suffered and died. But Christ crossed that gulf for us; and should not I cross this gulf for the Chinese?" "If Christ laid down his life for us we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

As Dr. Gordon says, it is the post-crucifixion and post-resurrection life of Christ we are to imitate. A Unitarian declared his confident expectation to be saved by imitating the life of Christ. His friend replied, "You must not only imitate Christ's meekness and patience and industry, but his crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection, 'that ye may know him and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable to his death.'" An artisan missionary, Leonard Dobson, the Moravian, said: "I determined if only one brother would go with me to the West Indies I would give myself to be a slave, and would say to the slaves as much of the Saviour as I knew myself." He and his fellow-laborer, David Nitchmann, shared the hut and crust of the bondmen. The governor of the island was moved by their devotion and invited them to his palace to live. But they soon left it and returned to the cabin and crust of the slaves, that they might win them to Christ.

At a memorial meeting Rev. Mr. Swan said: "If there was any defect in Wm. Carey's character it was that he was too easy." Carey said: "Bro. Swan, I am not fitted for discipline: I never could say no. I began to preach at Moulton because I could not say no; I went to Leicester because I could not say no; I became a missionary because I could not say no." This meant that he could not say no to Christ's call. Blessed weakness! One such man is worth a universe of social queens who live for pleasure and display.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Century for May begins a new cover-design of great beauty, by Stanford White, and opens appropriately with the subject of the World's Fair, there being two prose contributions, one by Mrs. Van Rensselaer with practical suggestions how best to see the Exposition; and the second, by W. Lewis Fraser of the Century Art Department, on Decorative Painting at the World's Fair, with full-page illustrations. Mrs. Van Rensselaer's article is illustrated with large drawings, by Castaigne, of the principal buildings at the Fair, pictured with reference to remarkable atmospheric effects, and from interesting points of view. One of these, Looking North from the Lion Fountain, is the frontispiece of the number. These papers are followed by the text of Mr. Gilder's poem, The White City, which was read at the Burnham banquet in New York. Throughout, the illustrative department of the Century leaves little more to be desired, as to quality. Among the other illustrated papers, we notice concluding chapters of Mrs. Burton Harrison's Sweet Bells Out of Tune, and Mr. Janvier's Embassy to Provence; also, Personal Impressions of Nicaragua, by Gilbert Gaul; The Chevalier de Resseguier, by Thos. Bailey Aldrich; Joseph Bonaparte in Bordentown; Leaves from the Autobiography of Salvini; The Queen and the Duchess, by M. O. W. Oliphant; John Muir, by John Swett; Mr. Gadsbury's Brother; Relics of "Artemus Ward," and Writing to Rosina. Additional papers are: The Knight of Pentecost, by Harriet Prescott Spofford; Recollections of Lord Tennyson, by John A. Symonds; Benefits Forgot, continue, by Wolcott Balestier, and An Inside View of the Pension Bureau, by A. B. Casselman, with poems by several hands. The customary departments are replete with interest, and the whole number is excellent. New York: The Century Co.

St. Nicholas for May "comes up smiling," like the month that brings it to our desk, and makes its usual hearty appeal to its thousands of youthful readers, which will meet with a cheerful response. Always in the front rank of its class, and improving with its increasing years, it presents a fine array of literary and art talent. In view of the opening of the Chicago Fair upon the first of May, there is a general survey of The World's Fair Palaces, by Tudor Jenks. It is a rapid summary for children of the characteristics of the grounds and buildings, and is excellently illustrated. Mrs. C. V. Jamieson begins a new serial, Toinette's Story, with the scene in New Orleans. Other articles, "with pictures to match," are: How Bert Killed a Jaguar, by Herbert H. Smith; Polly Oliver's Problem, concluded, by Kate D. Wiggin; Columbus at La Rabida, by Ensign Ellicott, U. S. N.; A Night with the Poachers, by Tappan Adney; The White Cave, continued, by Wm. O. Stoddard; The Secrets of Snake Charming, by G. R. O'Reilly, and The Story of Monkey Moke, illustrated by Dan Beard. Poems, and other pictures, enliven its pages, and the editorial departments evince a disposition and a power to please. New York: The Century Company.

The May issue of Scribner's—the "Exhibition number," par excellence—is probably as fine a specimen of American magazine-making as is ever seen in America. The Exposition at Chicago is the basis of all the beautiful things that it contains, and is put forth as a representative publication to show the literary, artistic and mechanical resources that its publishers command. Presenting nearly a third more matter than usual, it offers a prime attraction in the abundance and richness of its illustrations, including twenty-five full pages, with two in colors. The opening article is an (hitherto) unpublished autograph narrative by Washington, describing the Braddock Campaign, written for a friend as a part of his own biography. The Country Printer, by W. D. Howells is the well-told story of a personal experience, which finds a counterpart in the lives of many to whom such a life was familiar sixty years ago. Among other contributors of note are Walter Besant, Thos. Hardy, Bret Harte, Henry James, Geo. W. Cable, H. C. Bunner and Sarah Orne Jewett. Mrs. Burnett continues her youthful experiences; Robert Blum writes picturesquely of an Artist's Impression of Japan. There are also several other attractions, which add much to its excellence.

The May Arena concludes its seventh volume. The genial portrait of Louise Chandler Moulton adorns the frontispiece, and her pen contributes Four Strange, True Stories to the letter-press. Ignatius Donnelly and Prof. Felix E. Schelling each furnish opposing closing arguments in the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. Other papers and contributors are: The American School of Sculpture, by Wm. O. Partridge; Evolution of Christianity Prior to Dr. Abbott, by Prof. Orello Cone, D.D.; Women Wage-Earners, by Helen Campbell; Suicides and Modern Civilization, by Frederick L. Hoffman; How to Introduce the Initiative and Referendum, by W. D. McCrackan, A. M.; Railway Tariffs, by James L. Cowles; Some Economic Features of Public Libraries; Industrial Schools in the Netherlands, by Myra A. Dooley; The Brotherhood of Christian Unity, by Theo. F. Seward; Practical Theosophy, by Kate Buffington Davis, and The Answered Prayer, by Gerald Massey, while the editor pleads for Room for the Soul of Man. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co.

The Preacher's Magazine for May, designed for the use of preachers, teachers and Bible students—the English edition edited by Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory, but re-published, with American additions, by W. B. Ketchum, 2 Cooper Union, New York City, contains its accustomed variety of suggestive topics, ably presented. Present-day Preaching—Lightness in Religion, by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, is the opening paper, followed by Mark Guy Pearse's tenth study in the Life of Moses and Its Lessons, touching the institution of the Passover; Balaam, by Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet; How to Begin the Study of Hebrew, by Rev. J. T. L. Maggs, B. A.; Exploring the Bible; The Apostolic Churches, their Doctrine and Fellowship; Homiletics; Notes and Illustrations, and others of general interest.

OBITUARY.

MR. JOSEPH P. BARTLETT

was born in Campton, Grafton county, N. H., Jan. 16, 1810. He was one of a family of nine children, two of whom (a brother and sister) survive him.

He came west, reaching Chicago June 23, 1838. From that city he went to Rockford, where he was engaged in various occupations until 1843. At this time he married and settled on his farm near Elburn, Ill., where he lived and labored for fifty years. His wife and three of his five children have preceded him to the other shore, his wife dying in 1876.

He died Tuesday, April 18, and was buried from his home on Thursday, the 20th. Services were conducted by President Blanchard, who spoke briefly from the words, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years."

He was, throughout his whole life, an earnest and faithful friend to all good causes. His testimony against the use of tobacco, the use of intoxicating drinks, and membership in secret societies, was not received by his generation, but was a true testimony, and will be in the end justified by God's providential dealings with men. He was a faithful friend to Wheaton College, and, so far as he was able, cared for its interests. His children were, several of them, pupils with us at times and are still bearing their father's testimony before the world. We have no definite information as to his church relations; we do not even know that he was a member of the visible church on earth. We trust that he was, but respecting this matter are not able to speak positively. The gathering of neighbors was quite large; and even those who would not accept his testimony, had no choice but to respect his character, and will do so, we believe, increasingly as years go by. C. A. B. Wheaton, Ill.

LODGE NOTES.

SOME MASONIC DECISIONS.

(By Grand Master Look, of Michigan.)

"A candidate who is afflicted with partial paralysis of the vocal organs, who can speak in a distinct whisper so as to be heard a distance of ten or twelve feet, is not disqualified; such a person can receive and communicate."

"(a) The loss of the left arm above the elbow disqualifies. (b) A candidate who cannot kneel on both knees is disqualified."

"I am compelled, by the decisions of four Past Grand Masters, as adopted by Grand Lodge, to decide that the loss of an eye, the other being good, disqualifies. I sincerely doubt the soundness of this law."

Grand Lodge approved these decisions; approved the one-eyed decision, and, of course, approved the Grand Master's doubts about it being a sound law.

Grand Master decided that a lodge could not convene in a room over a saloon, and then indulged the following:

"A member who engages in the saloon business is not guilty of a Masonic offense. The saloon business is a legalized business."

"A lodge has no right to permit any other outside society to occupy its lodge room."

"Smoking should not be allowed in a lodge room while the lodge is at work."

"A brother who persists in using profane language in the lodge room is guilty of a Masonic offense, and charges should be preferred against him."

Insomnia is fearfully on the increase. The rush and excitement of modern life so tax the nervous system that multitudes of people are deprived of good and sufficient sleep, with ruinous consequences to the nerves. Remember, Ayer's Sarsaparilla makes the weak strong.

Word comes from all quarters that the neatest and most satisfactory dye for coloring the beard a brown or black is Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1893.

THE "A. P. A."

Referring to the "American Protective Association," about which society considerable information was given in a recent Cynosure, the editor of the Free Methodist remarks as follows:

This is said to be a "purely Protestant secret society, opposed to all papal encroachments, or interference with any and all American institutions; no papist to be employed in any public school, or to fill any public office. The necessity of operating under the cover of secrecy is argued from several considerations.

We are asked if it would be legitimate for a Free Methodist to unite with this association. To this question but one answer can be given. While Free Methodists may, to a certain extent, be in sympathy with the A. P. A. in its opposition to the aggressions of Romanism, still they cannot consistently co-operate with any movement which, by its secrecy, "invalidates its claim to the confidence of open and honest men." If the usurpations of Romanism are to be checked it must be by open Christian methods. We hold firmly to the position that associations claiming the co-operation of Free Methodists on Christian grounds must do so with open face. They must lift the veil while demanding our salutation, or we cannot salute them by the way. Therefore, all secret societies are to be eschewed.

This is truly a Christian view of the question, and entitled to a hearty endorsement. If the A. P. A. is nothing more than the antagonist of Roman Catholic encroachment upon American institutions, let it openly resist these aggressions, which may be known by all men who watch the trend of Roman Catholicism in this country. It designs to rule America or ruin it—to hold it in the same dismal bondage that is now shared by all European countries upon which its heavy hand has been laid religiously and politically. Let the Jesuits and the papal hierarchy resort to secret intrigues to effect their ends, but let no true American stoop to such infamous and hidden methods. If, as alleged, our free institutions are in danger from this source, it should be widely understood and the danger averted, before it is too late, by the energy and zeal of a united and patriotic people. Let them rise as one man and proclaim to the whole world that they are ready for the issue, and not skulk into cellars and attics with closed doors to concoct plans of safety which they refuse to reveal to those outside of their lodges because, forsooth, they are in possession of certain signs, grips and passwords. Christians have no need of these follies. Prayer and supplication to the King of kings and Lord of lords, to thwart the malevolence of our enemies, with a firm reliance upon his power and willingness to fight our battles for us against the devices of wicked men and Satan, is our surest safeguard.

THE INCREASE OF CRIME.

A correspondent in California asks us to give our opinion as to the causes of the great increase of crime during the last few years, and especially of the increase of murders and suicides.

Manifestly there has been a notable increase of crimes against life, both in Europe and America, —an increase out of all proportion to any apparent cause.

To our mind, it is in seeming fulfillment of the prophecy of the last days. Paul tells us: "In the last days perilous times shall come; men shall be covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of them that are good...lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3: 1-5. While we realize that there is much missionary activity and much aggressive Christian work, yet, as a whole, the church has sadly declined in spirituality, and its restraining influence on society at large is greatly diminished. This we regard as the great reason why crime and insanity are steadily increasing. Jesus said: "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has lost its saltiness, wherewith shall it be salted?"

But if we look for the more immediate causes, they are many:

1. The increased intelligence and mental activity of the masses, with which there has been no corresponding development of Christian principle. This has led to the widespread infidelity, unrest and discontent in the large and increasing number of wage-workers.

2. Inordinate greed of gain and grievous disappointment in those who are not successful.

3. The non-enforcement of law, especially in our cities, growing out of bad municipal governments and the delays and imperfections of our judicial system. Out of this has grown the frequent resort to lynch law, and this, in turn, has tended greatly to cheapen life.

4. The general and growing indulgence in intoxicating drinks.

5. The great increase in the number and influence of the Sunday newspapers. These do more to keep men from public worship and divert attention from religion than almost any one thing.

6. The influence and power of the secret lodge system. We mention this last, though it is not least in importance. The secret orders are all based on selfishness, and tend to its promotion. They serve to satisfy men's moral and religious aspirations without ever leading them to Christ, or demanding regeneration by the Holy Spirit. They substitute a code of morals that is not the morality of the New Testament. They lead men to believe that conformity to such morality will secure eternal life. They often have codes of laws that are out of harmony with the laws of the land. In obedience to these lodge codes, murders and injustice, in many forms, are being constantly perpetrated on those who are either not members of the orders, or who refuse to bow to their behests.

There is a widespread disposition to condone such crimes. Witness the poisoning of non-union men at Homestead and the present effort to secure the pardon of Dempsey, who was but recently sentenced to the penitentiary for participation in these murders.

Since the above was written we have received the following: At a recent meeting of the Ministerial Association of Pittsburgh, Pa. (as reported in the United Presbyterian of that city), Rev. W. F. Crafts read a paper on "The Outlook for Reformers." The increase of crime, he stated, is due to the following considerations: 1. The liquor traffic; 2. Greed for gold; 3. Lust for pleasure; 4. Influences of the last war; 5. Immigration; 6. National habit of law-breaking; 7. Strikes and labor troubles; 8. Lynching and leniency, 6,000 murders are committed each year and only about 100 murderers are executed; 9. Lack of parental discipline in the home; 10. Lack of education in public morals; 11. Herding of criminals in jails, which become schools of vice; 12. Carrying weapons; 13. Increase of clubs and societies, secret and otherwise, that draw men from the church and home; 14. The rush to the cities; 15. Celibacy; 16. Illiteracy. The remedies for these evils are: 1. Applied Christianity; 2. Enforcement of laws for restraint of popular vices; 3. Improvement of existing laws on these subjects; 4. Restriction of immigration; 5. Restriction of suffrage; 6. Adoption by good citizens of frequent writing to legislators.

Our next article will further indicate the proper cure for these evils.

PROPHETIC PERIODS.

The Cynosure is not greatly given to designating dates based upon the prophecies of the Bible; but quite frequently our attention is called to a specific incident which seems to indicate the approach of some event connected with the close of the present Christian dispensation and the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The article printed in this paper of last week (page 3), "An Appeal to Christians," appears to possess considerable importance in its relation to this momentous subject—more, indeed, than we are apt to attach to such appeals, both from the sources from which it emanates and its earnestness. In all seriousness, it is worthy of close and prayerful study. These Christian teachers do not designate any special date for the coming of the Lord, but believe that its imminence demands increased watchfulness and devotion to his cause.

For several years past the writer has been familiar with the persons and tenets of an intelligent body of Christians called Millenarians, who, after diligence in searching the Scriptures, pronounce the second coming of the Lord, and the simultaneous resurrection of the righteous dead, as very near at hand. Denominationally they do not fix upon any date for his coming; yet, as individuals, they seem to be united in believing that it must occur before the year 1897. Those who read Bro. M. A. Gault's article on "The Signs of the Times" in the Cynosure for April 6, will notice that the date there mentioned for "the world's crisis," or the second coming, is 1896.

A German writer, Mr. Jacob C. Egley, living at Quakertown, Pa., under date of April 11, calls our "attention to a matter of the gravest importance to all true Christians in this country, yea, the whole world...In our Mennonite 'Martyrs' Mirror' there is a letter by the then Roman bishop, showing that popedom came up A. D. 604." Other authorities, he explains, owing to a different reckoning of time, place this event in 606. "In Daniel 12: 11, 12," he continues, "we find the time of the Roman anti-Christ to be 1290 days, which, according to the period of the seventy weeks, are to be reckoned 1290 years". By its present acts, he argues, the papacy "itself proves that it really is the Biblical anti-Christ, and that its prescribed time" (1290 years) "is about gone."

Without further quotations from the letter of our friend, we add his 1290 years to the year of our Lord 604, with the result of bringing the world's crisis in 1894, or, otherwise, as he explains above, in 1896.

There is an interesting coincidence in the centering of the minds of intelligent men upon this particular date, if it is only a coincidence; but whatever it is—the mathematical ingenuity of man, or the revealed wisdom of the Almighty—it behooves us to "all watch" and follow the Lord's advice in Revelation 3: 18, that we may see these things more clearly.

MASONIC WISDOM.

On page 7 of this issue we print a few of the decisions of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Michigan, which serve to cast some light upon the principles of the fraternity, at least in that State. Since receiving them, we find in the May number of the Voice of Masonry, in addition, the following, from other States:

"A Master of a lodge in Pennsylvania having refused to entertain a motion to permit the cremated remains of a deceased Past Master to be placed in the lodge-room, the matter was referred to the Grand Master, who replied: 'If any brother desires to have his body cremated after his death, he may do so; but he shall not extort recognition and encouragement from Freemasons. The practice is a relic of heathenism.'"

Considering that Freemasonry proper is built upon heathen mysteries and practices, surely there is no very strong reason why it should reject cremation on that account. The Grand Master is hardly consistent.

In the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania "numerous cases of appeal were adjudicated. In one of them adultery with a Master Mason's wife was held to be unpardonable Masonic conduct, and restoration from expulsion for the same hopeless." How would it be in the case of any other man's wife?

"It is the soul, not the body, that truly qualifies a man to be a Mason." But if the soul inhabits a maimed or imperfect body, no matter how well qualified it may be for Masonic brotherhood, the fraternity will reject its owner.

"The legend of Hiram Abiff is not literally true of him as an individual, but it is true of him symbolically, that is, as a representative character. As such, he was both a Widow's and Wisdom's son, thus the Most Exalted Son of Light and Life—the Ideal Man of all the ages." This piece of rank blasphemy is incorporated in the "Ancient Craft report, 1892," from Wyoming, printed on page 381 of the Voice of Masonry for May. The Lord Jesus Christ tells us that He is "the Light of the World;" that in Him is Life, and that He came from heaven and became the only "ideal man" that ever existed, that those who believe in Him "may have life, and that more abundantly." To class Hiram Abiff with Him, even ideally, is terribly wicked.

The Grand Master of Montana tells us the true (Masonic) meaning of Masonic "charity": "Even without a dollar in our treasury, or a cent in our pockets, we can dispense the richest charity the world has ever seen...It is to be done by look, word, acts (grips), with all we meet." St. James had his opinion of this kind of charity: "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace; be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"—James 2: 15, 16.

Michigan has set the standard of Masonic lodge prayer: "A Christian minister should be allowed to make a prayer in the words he deems most suitable, and because he is in a Masonic lodge he must not be required to make a particular form of prayer, for fear he will offend some one who does not in all things believe as he does." The italics are not ours, and they evidently are given as a warning to "Christian ministers" not to pray in the name of Christ in a lodge full of deists, Unitarians and Jews.

But this is enough, for the present, of Masonic wisdom.

THE DISASTER AT ZANTE.

Thirty-five seconds, but little more than half a minute, sufficed for the destruction of the Grecian Island of Zante on the morning of the 18th of April, by a second earthquake shock. The first, a few days earlier, had sadly shattered houses and other property, and it only needed the later convulsion of nature to complete the work of devastation.

The day had been ushered in with lovely weather and a cloudless sky. "Without warning," says a graphic writer, "the island oscillated with intense violence from east to west for nearly a minute. Clouds of dust from falling walls, houses, and churches enveloped the city. The air rang with shrieks of the people buried beneath the ruins. The streets presented a terrible spectacle. Entire blocks of houses are lost. The theater and club, forming a big building, were thrown down. The splendid Venetian Campanile Church of St. Denis, patron of Zante, is a mass of ruins. Rows of houses along the marina lie in shapeless heaps.

"There are fissures in the roads over fifty yards in length. All the church belfries and hotels are either down or are tottering to ruins. Not a dozen houses in the whole island are inhabitable. The killed in the town number fourteen, and the villages sixteen. The injured number about two hundred. The victims are less numerous than might have been expected, owing to the hour of the shock.

"In the villages the destruction is incalculable. Not one stone is left upon another. The southeastern part of the island was nearest the center of the shock. There are fissures two feet wide in the direction of the shock, east and west, precisely where the former ones originated. There was also a distinct tidal wave. The level of the ground sank one foot after the shock."

These wonderful manifestations of the power of God in his works ought to serve as warnings of his judgments for sin; but alas, they seldom do; and, notwithstanding their impressiveness, they are useless as a means of conversion from sin to righteousness.

—Our readers are requested to scan the reports, on page 13 of this issue of the Cynosure, of the treasurer of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association, and from Prof. Fischer in relation to the Jonathan Blanchard memorial fund.

—At St. Louis, on Sunday last, 14,220 persons witnessed a base-ball contest between a local club and the Chicago team, in which the latter was badly defeated. The craze for Sunday infraction is steadily on the increase, and grows by that on which it feeds. Where will it end?

—Members of various churches in Chicago have organized to work in conjunction with the city authorities to compel the saloons to close on Sunday. The city has been divided into precincts, and to each of these a number of canvassers, with a captain at their head, have been assigned to obtain the support of citizens.

—Observation, with some experience, leads us to believe that the tendency of the secret labor unions and their methods is to turn out a class of very poor mechanics who, under lodge protection, are continually supplied with profitable employment, while more skillful workmen who do not belong to the unions are debarred from obtaining the same privileges.

preliminary to a comparison between the church and Odd-fellowship—always to the detriment of the church.

His first point of comparison was in the matter of divisions. A great number of divisions exist in the churches of Christ. Not so in Odd-fellowship. A fairer comparison would have been between the realm of secretism and the church of Christ. The realm of secretism is organized around the twin ideas—(1) secrecy, and (2) false, Christless worship. Behold secretism, with her 210 different orders! Does the church suffer in comparison along this line? Further, the speaker meant certainly to bank on the ignorance of his audience. Had he forgotten, or did he ever know, the history of Odd-fellowship in Great Britain?—what divisions and dissensions rent that body in twain? Has he forgotten the strifes in this country? After all, the unity and placidity that Odd-fellowship would have, if she realized her ideal perfectly, would be a duck-pond placidity. It is gained by leaving out the highest and best things. Those things pertaining to our highest and best interests must not be mentioned, much less discussed. Hence Jesus and his atonement, and his salvation, must be left out—all under the plea of "toleration".

Another point of comparison was the church's neglect of the sick and suffering and the poor, as compared with Odd-fellowship. Specious examples were given. I have heard this charge a number of times lately. Has the church of Jesus Christ any occasion for the presence of Odd-fellowship on this score? I have no fears when the books are opened. The nine-tenths of the human family are barred from Odd-fellowship by Odd-fellow statute. The women, children, colored races, sick, diseased, maimed, crippled, etc., are excluded. The strongest may need help, but the probabilities of needing help are reduced to a minimum. And this band of strong men stand before the world and declare that the church has so grossly neglected the amenities and mercies of life that they have been compelled to organize to supply the deficiency!

We need not follow this lecturer any further than to say that his other points were as good as the ones mentioned. As he took his seat, I arose and addressed the Noble Grand, as "chairman," and asked for the privilege of making a few observations. I was denied the privilege, "because this meeting is for the good of the order."

In the Lord's work, WM. C. PADEN.

A GOOD DAY.

Some time since the request of Rev. P. Thelander to address his people of the Swedish Lutheran church, Elgin, Ill., was noticed in my reports. Not finding an early and convenient time to accept the kind invitation, Pastor Thelander himself addressed a large audience in his church last November. Many outside his congregation were present, and great interest was created by the discourse. Such excellent work as this the N. C. A. encourages all pastors to undertake, as soon, and as zealously and faithfully as they can.

The last Sabbath in April having been fixed for a second discourse, by the N. C. A. secretary, I hastened from work at Jackson Park to Elgin Saturday eve., April 29, to find a welcome by Mr. Thelander, and by Mr. M. Lathin, merchant tailor, whose hospitable Christian home was freely opened to a stranger. Mr. Lathin is superintendent of the fine Sabbath-school connected with the church, which at his request I addressed briefly after lessons.

The day was cold and rainy, most unfavorable for such a meeting, and a hundred would have been a fair audience that wet evening. It was, therefore, a most cheering sight when some four hundred people were early gathered. No better proof could be had of the cordial support Pastor Thelander has from his people in maintaining the testimony of the church against the secret societies. Their interest and enthusiasm were in proportion to their numbers. The argument proving the danger of the false altars of the lodge to the churches of Christ was eagerly heard, and apparently well enjoyed. A good collection was taken for the N. C. A., and numerous invitations given to come again.

Next day the Elgin Daily News printed a half-column abstract of the discourse, and I turned homeward with the recollection of a most agreeable and personally profitable Sabbath.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.

2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.

3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

The committee on N. C. A. exhibit began to realize its importance as soon as the work of installing began. Inquiries were made which might often have grown into arguments, and few passed without stopping as soon as the fine portraits of the founders of the Association were in place, and the four witnesses against secret societies,—Washington, Grant, Webster and John Quincy Adams—looked down, in statuary, from their gallery.

Mrs. Jennie Smith, of Maryland, National Superintendent of Railroad Work for the W. C. T. U., passed one morning with several ladies. At a glance she recognized the N. C. A., and remembering its mission, turned back, and others with her, to shake hands and say God-speed most heartily; asking for the cards of the two committee-men at work on the exhibit, as the first people with whom she had shaken hands in the Columbian Exposition. There will be many such incidents, God willing, during the next six months.

Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood, the well-known Washington lady, conducts the exhibit of the American Peace Associations, a few steps from the N. C. A. booth in the World's Fair. She opened a fine large registry book last Thursday, and asked the N. C. A. secretary to be first to write in it. May there be a hundred thousand friends of the peace cause enrolled before November. Mrs. Lockwood is a friend of our reform. She spoke in one of the Washington conventions, along with Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston, Hon. Fred. Douglass and others.

In the Religious Department are found the following exhibits as they come in order: The N. C. A., the Nat'l Temperance Society, the M. E. church and Epworth League, the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the American Peace Society, the Societies of Christian Endeavor, the Y. M. C. Associations, the Presbyterian, Congregational, Disciple, Lutheran, Unitarian, Swedenborgian, and United Brethren churches. To maintain a good testimony for Christ and reform in the midst of this company is an effort worthy of the best cause. Let us all have a share in it, brethren. Do not forget that it costs something to do this. Send on your Quarter-centennial contributions to the N. C. A. treasurer.

THANK GOD!

The gates of Jackson Park were fast shut last Sabbath by order of the local Directory; so that all the officary, from the President and Congress down, are working in harmony for the maintenance of God's law. Let us be thankful and celebrate this good news with a generous thank-offering.

THE HOME.

THE DEAR LITTLE WIFE AT HOME.

The dear little wife at home, John,
With ever so much to do,
Stitches to set, and babies to pet,
And so many thoughts of you—
The beautiful household fairy,
Filling your heart with light;
Whatever you meet to-day, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

For though you are worn and weary,
You needn't be cross or curt;
There are words like darts to gentle hearts,
There are looks that wound and hurt.
With the key in the latch at home, John,
Drop troubles out of sight;
To the dear little wife who is waiting
Go cheerily home to-night.

You know she will come to meet you,
A smile on her sunny face;
And your wee little girl, as pure as a pearl,
Will be there in her childish grace;
And the boy, his father's pride, John,
With eyes so brave and bright,
From the strife and the din to the peace, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

What though the tempter try you,
Though the shafts of adverse fate
May bustle near, and the sky be drear,
And the laggard fortune wait,
You are passing rich already;
Let the haunting fears take flight,
With the faith that wins success, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

—Reformed Church Messenger.

DR. ARNOLD'S DAILY PRAYER.

Dr. Arnold's daily prayer was as follows: "O Lord, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in this busy world. Now, ere I enter on it I would commit eye, ear and thought to thee. Do thou bless them, and keep their work thine, that as through thy natural laws my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when mind cannot conspicuously turn to thee to commit each particular thought to thy service. Hear my prayer, for my dear Redeemer's sake. Amen."

A prayer like this, so evidently according to his will, we may be confident God hears; and "if he hears us, we know that we have the petition that we desire of him." So, then, into the busiest life we may go, sure that we will honor him in the midst of its bustle and distraction, if only such a prayer as this rises to him out of a sincere heart. One need not be a recluse to be a consistent Christian.

The Saviour prayed for his disciples, not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept from the evil. Eye, ear and thought are necessarily put to diligent service if a man or woman would be successful in business. Prayer and faith, without works, do not bring to pass any great results in the financial world, where works are at all possible. We are told to be "not slothful in business, serving the Lord," and "he becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich." Nothing is farther from the kingdom of God and his righteousness than the fanaticism which talks of trusting the Lord for daily bread, or any other good thing, without putting forth proper effort upon our own part as co-workers with him. And it is just as far from his kingdom and his righteousness to become absorbed in secular affairs in such a way as to exclude his principles from our actions and his Spirit from our hearts. It is perfectly practicable to take for our rule of daily living these words of Paul: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus;" or these: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Of course, it is practicable. We were sent into this world with the one end in view—"to glorify God and enjoy him forever." But we are material beings as well as spiritual, and while we live in the flesh we have necessarily to deal with material and fleshly things. There must be, therefore, some way to make our secular life not only no hindrance to the higher and spiritual, but to make it really become a part of the spiritual—that is, we may serve God in "one body and in one spirit, which are his." This beautiful and comprehensive prayer tells us how it can be done. If eye, ear, and thought are fully committed to God, his blessing asked upon them so that their work may be kept his own; that as by natural law the heart beats and the blood flows without any thought of ours, so the spiritual life may hold on its course even when the busy mind cannot commit each particular thought to his service, he will surely answer the prayer and keep that which we thus commit to him, and we will know, even amid the world's tumult and toil, the blessedness of the life hid with Christ in God.—Christian Advocate.

A NEW ANECDOTE OF LINCOLN.

Bell's Altoona Gazette relates the following incident in the life of Abraham Lincoln, which it says has probably never before appeared in print. All who know President Lincoln intimately will have no doubt that the incident as related may have actually occurred: It was during the dark days of 1863, on the evening of a public reception given at the White House. The foreign legations were there gathered about the President.

A young English nobleman was just being presented to the President. Inside the door, evidently overawed by the splendid assemblage, was an honest-faced old farmer, who shrank from the passing crowd until he and the plain-faced old lady clinging to his arm were pressed back to the wall. The President, tall, and in a measure stately in his personal presence, looking over the heads of the assembly, said to the English nobleman: "Excuse me, my Lord, there's an old friend of mine."

Passing backward to the door, Mr. Lincoln said, as he grasped the old farmer's hand: "Why, John, I'm glad to see you. I haven't seen you since you and I made rails for old Mrs. —, in Sangamon county, in 1847. How are you?"

The old man turned to his wife with quivering lip, and without replying to the President's salutation, said: "Mother, he's just the same Old Abe!"

"Mr. Lincoln," he said finally, "you know we had three boys; they all enlisted in the same company; John was killed in the 'seven days' fight; Sam was taken prisoner and starved to death, and Henry is in the hospital. We had a little money, an' I said: 'Mother, we'll go to Washington an' see him. An' while we were here I said we'll go up and see the President.'"

Mr. Lincoln's eyes grew dim, and across the rugged, homely, tender face swept the wave of sadness his friends had learned to know, and he said: "John, we all hope this miserable war will soon be over. I must see all these folks here for an hour or so, and I want to talk with you." The old lady and her husband were hustled into a private room, in spite of all their protests.

CHRIST AND HIS REDEMPTION.

The Christian Intelligencer utters an important truth in these words:

The redemption of the world is absolutely dependent upon Jesus Christ—we mean redemption from all the evils springing from a depraved human nature. To dethrone Christ is to enthrone sin and Satan. No one besides Christ can or will redeem the world. Human devices, apart from the Redeemer, will be as fruitless in the future as in the past. What the world needs to-day, more than any other thing, is a looking to Christ, a trusting in Christ, a working with Christ, for the redemption of man. What is holding the world back, what is diverting it into vain efforts, above all other hinderances and delusions, is a failure to look to Christ and to work with Christ for redemption.

A PLEASANT PARABLE.

A long time ago there lived a saint so holy that the angels marvelled at his sanctity, and came from heaven to see how any one on earth could so closely resemble them.

They found nothing extraordinary in his life; he kept simply on his way, unconsciously spreading the example of his virtues as naturally as the stars give light and the flowers give perfume.

Two words summed up his day,—he gave and forgave; but these words were never on his lips;

you only read them in his smile, in his amiability, in his kindness, in his untiring charity.

The angels said to God, "Lord, grant him the gift of miracles."

"Willingly," replied our Lord; "ask him what he wishes."

And the angels said to the saint.

"Wouldst thou have the gift of healing, so that when thy hands touch an infirm body it shall be healed?"

"No," replied the saint. "I would rather God alone would do it."

"Wouldst thou have thy words win back guilty souls and erring hearts to God?"

"No; that is a mission most unworthy of a poor creature like me; I am satisfied to pray,—I do not preach."

Finally the angels said, "What wouldst thou have?"

"Well," said the saint, "let me do a great deal of good without knowing it."

The angels consulted together for a while as to how this could be accomplished; then they asked our Lord to grant that every time the saint's shadow fell at either side or behind him, so that he could not see it, it should have the power of curing the sick, consoling the afflicted, and comforting the sorrowful.

Our Lord assented, and wherever the saint's shadow fell thus the pathways bloomed, the parched earth was refreshed, the turbid streams became pure and limpid, the dying flowers revived; a fresh, healthy bloom came to the pale cheeks of the little children, and tears of joy to the eyes of sorrowing mothers.

But the saint kept simply on his way, unconsciously spreading the example of his virtues as naturally as the stars shed light, as the flowers give perfume; and the people, respecting his modesty, silently followed him, never speaking to him of his miracles. They gradually forgot even his name, and spoke of him simply as "the holy shadow."

BLOCKING THE RAILROAD.

The conductor, lantern in hand, came into the car. It was not necessary to ask if a heavy storm were in progress. The windows, that looked as if boys had been pelting them with handfuls of soft snow, told Ralph Cutler that this was winter's hour. The train's suspicious slowness of movement had raised the question whether the snow might not be so accumulated upon the track as to threaten to stop the train altogether, and information was very desirable.

"Conductor, please!" called out Charlie Swan, Ralph's companion in the journey, "shall we be snowed in?"

The conductor hugged his lantern up to his breast, grinned, nodded his head, and replied concisely, "Looks so!"

Then he passed on.

"This is interesting," remarked Ralph.

"And is going to be still more interesting," replied Charlie.

"A disappointment!" observed Ralph.

"Very much of one!" said Charlie.

Soon the train came to a significant stop. The locomotive rammed its iron head against the drifted snow in a deep cut, panted and squirmed, backed, went ahead—stuck!

"And, Charlie, the conductor says," remarked Ralph, "that we may stop two hours. He has telegraphed from the station we have just passed, and hopes to hear from a snow plough on the other side of that snow drift. Yes, disappointed!"

The two men were on their way to a district convention of church leagues, and Ralph had been set down as a speaker on the subject of "Our Opportunities."

One section of his address he had mapped as follows:

"If we wait for special opportunities for Christian work, and take only those that come all adapted to our present condition, we may wait long. The soldier who goes out to fight only when he is in the best possible trim, and his enemy in the worst, when he can see nothing but victory ahead, may never win one. We must be willing to improve every kind of an opportunity that comes along. We must be looking up to God all the time, and be armed with the ready weapon, the sword of the Spirit, and so move out promptly."

"There," said Ralph to himself, "I was going to bring that in, and hoped it would do some good when I said it."

"Can't you act it?" a voice within quickly asked.

"What, here!"

"Yes."

"How?"

"Sing something."

"Never thought of that."

"You and Charlie are both good singers."

"Charlie," said Ralph, "let us go to the back of the car, getting out of the way of the crowd, and we will sing something."

"I'm ready, Ralph."

Charlie was one of the singers reputed to be able to keep it up all night.

They began with "Auld Lang Syne." People were interested at once.

"That makes you feel sober," said one man to another.

"Home Again," was the next attempt.

"Ha, ha!" cried a young fellow a few seats ahead, wearing a glossy silk hat. "That is appropriate for folks snowed in, and not expecting to see home for six months—ha, ha!"

A general laugh greeted this. It seemed to Ralph as if the train of his efforts had been hopelessly derailed, the car quickly becoming so boisterous.

"Don't stop," said a man, encouragingly. "Get out your snow plough and start her up once more." This brought out another laugh.

But Charlie, the all-night singer, was not to be discouraged.

"Something patriotic," he whispered, nudging Ralph. In a clear, rich voice he started "America."

That took. People all over the car joined in the singing.

"There'll be no more sorrow there," he whispered to Ralph. "Quick! Shackle on your baggage car." So the time quickly passed by.

They were singing, "What a friend we have in Jesus," and had reached the line, "Have we trials and temptations," when a brakeman passed. He stopped near the door, looked very sober, and went out of the car.

Soon a sharp, warning shriek from a locomotive whistle was heard.

"Snow plough's acoming, ladies and gentlemen," said the conductor, hurrying along, hugging his faithful lantern. "We shall soon be out of this. Much obliged for the singin'."

"Yes, yes; that's so," said several.

"They ought to have kept 'Home Again' 'till now," observed the young man who wore the tall, glossy hat. People again laughed.

"He thinks he is a wit," said Ralph to Charlie. "I noticed that the people, while we sang, paid good attention—all but that man, and he was as uneasy as a fish out of water."

"Sweet Home," Ralph, Now," whispered Charlie, giving Ralph's ribs an extra poke.

Clear and sweet, and rich and plaintive was the last singing.

Soon after the train was hurrying past the obstacles that had detained it, a stalwart plough going ahead and scattering the hindering flakes to right and left.

"Well, Charlie, our trip is over, and we lost our meeting. We will go to a hotel and put up, and return home in the morning," said Ralph. "Next time I shall be prepared to speak on lost opportunities."

"Have your trials and temptations!" was Charlie's answer, sung low and sweet.

"Oh!" said a voice at Ralph's elbow. "One moment!"

It was the brakeman.

He hesitated, and then spoke: "When we were stopping back there, they were handing a lot of drink around, among some of the trainmen—you didn't see it—and singing about 'temptations' helped me—"

"Come, hurry up, John," sang out the conductor to the brakeman, and the latter left at once.

About a week later Ralph received a letter which ran thus:—"You don't know me, but I was on that snowed-up train and heard you sing. A man who knew you gave me your address, and I want to say I was the one who sat near you, wearing a new silk hat and spoke and laughed about 'Home Again.' But that touched me and I could not get around it—no, I couldn't, though I did try to throw it off. And 'Sweet Home,' too! It made me think of my home and my sister, who died, who is in a better home. And I am going to try to meet her."

"Thank you!" said Ralph. "I'll tell Charlie. I'll have more courage another time, and when the other time comes, may I have somebody like Charlie to back me up."—Epworth Herald.

JAMIE DOUGLASS.

"The tragic death of little Jamie, so touchingly related in the following lines," writes Rev. M. A. Gault, "is well-calculated to kindle in the minds of young people an interest in the cause of reform, and to train the declaimer in the art of expression. Let these lines be used as a recitation in young peoples' reform societies, so that they may be inspired with something of the devotion and courage which characterized the martyrs of the past."

"Twas in the days when Claverhouse was scouring moor and glen,

To change, with fire and bloody sword, the faith of Scottish men

Who'd made a covenant with the Lord, firm in their faith to bide,

Nor break to him their plighted word, whatever might be tide.

The sun was well-nigh setting, when o'er the heather wild, And up the narrow mountain path, alone there walked a child.

He was a bonnie, blithesome lad, sturdy and strong of limb— A father's pride, a mother's love were fast bound up in him. His bright blue eye glanced fearless round, his step was firm and light;

What was it underneath his plaid, his little hands grasped tight?

'Twas bannocks which, that very morn, his mother made with care,

From out her scanty store of meal, and many a fervent prayer,

Had sent by Jamie, her one boy—a trusty lad and brave,

To good old pastor Thomas Roy, hid now in yon dark cave; For whom the bloody Claverhouse had hunted long in vain, And sworn he'd never leave that glen till old Tam Roy was slain.

So Jamie Douglass went his way, with heart that knew no fear.

He turned the great curve in the rock, nor dreamed that death was near.

And there were Claverhouse's men, who laughed aloud in glee,

When trembling now within their power, the frightened child they see.

He turns to flee, but all in vain; they drag him back apace, To where their cruel leader stands, and set them face to face.

The cakes, concealed beneath his plaid, soon tell the story plain:

"'Tis old Tam Roy the cakes are for!" exclaimed the angry man.

"Now guide me to the hiding place, and I will let you go," But Jamie shook his yellow curls and strongly answered "No!"

"I'll drop you down yon mountain-side, and there upon the stones,

The old gaunt wolf and carrion-crow shall battle for your bones."

Then in his brawny, strong right hand, he lifted up the child,

And held him where the cleft rock frowned, a chasm deep and wild;

So deep it is the trees below like stunted bushes seem; Poor Jamie looked in frightened maze; it seemed some horrid dream.

He looked up to the sky above, then on the men near by— Had they no little boys at home, that they could let him die?

But no one spoke, and no one stirred, nor lifted hand to save

From such a fearful, frightful death the little lad so brave.

"'Tis woeful deep," he shuddering cried, "but oh! I cannot tell.

So drop me down, then, if you will; 'tis nae sae deep as hell."

A childish scream, a faint, dull sound; O Jamie Douglass true!

Long, long within the lonely cave shall Tam Roy wait for you!

Long for your welcome coming waits the mother on the moor,

And stands and calls, "Come, Jamie, lad!" through the half-opened door.

No more adown the rocky path you'll come with fearless tread,

Nor over moor and mountain take the good man daily bread.

But up in heaven the shining ones a wondrous story tell, Of a child snatched up from a rocky guif, that's nae sae deep as hell.

And there before the great white throne, forever blessed and glad,

His mother, dear, and old Tam Roy shall meet their bonnie lad.

TEMPERANCE.

MIDNIGHT INIQUITIES.

Do you know that it is in the midnight that the criminals do their worst work? At eight o'clock you will find them drinking at the saloon; but towards twelve they go to their garrets, they get out their tools and they start on the street. Watching on either side for the police, they go to their work of darkness. There is the burglar, and the false key will touch the store lock. There is the incendiary, and before morning there will be a light in the sky and a cry of "Fire! Fire!" There is an assassin, and to-morrow morning there will be a dead body on one of the vacant lots.

In the midnight hour drunkenness does its worst. The drinking will be respectable at eight o'clock in the evening, a little flushed at nine, talkative and garrulous at ten, at eleven blasphemous, at twelve the hat falls off and the man falls to the floor, asking for more drink. Strewn through the drinking saloons of the city are fathers, brothers, husbands, sons, as good as you are by nature, perhaps better.

In the high circle of society it is hushed up. A merchant prince, if he gets noisy and uncontrollable, is taken by his fellow revelers, who try to get him to bed, or take him home, where he falls flat in the entry. Do not wake up the children. They have had disgrace enough. Do not let them know it. Hush it up. But sometimes it cannot be hushed up, when the rum touches the brain and the man becomes thoroughly frenzied.

Oh, if the rum touches the brain you cannot hush it up. You do not see the worst. In the midnight meetings a great multitude have been saved. We want a few hundred Christian men and women to come down from the highest circles of society to toil amid these wandering and destitute ones, and kindle up a light in the dark alley, even the gladness of heaven.

Do not go from your well-filled tables with the idea that pious talk is going to stop the gnawing of an empty stomach or to warm the stockingless feet. Take bread, take raiment, take medicine, as well as take prayer. There is a great deal of common sense in what the poor woman said to the city missionary when he was telling her how she ought to love God and serve him. "Oh," said she, "if you were as poor and cold as I am and as hungry, you could think of nothing else."

A great deal of what is called Christian work goes for nothing, for the simple reason it is not practical; as after the battle of Antietam a man got out of an ambulance with a bag of tracts, began to distribute them, when George Stuart, one of the best Christian men in the country, said to him: "What are you distributing tracts for now? There are 3,000 men bleeding to death. Bind up their wounds, and then distribute the tracts."—Talmage.

RESULTS OF NO-LICENSE.

The Congregationalist publishes an interesting article by the Rev. D. N. Beach on the recent victory for temperance in Cambridge, Mass., from which we copy as follows: "Let me say that the law is not perfectly enforced, but that it is enforced to a very large extent. The last two classes which have graduated at Harvard have not seen a liquor saloon in their large university city. Some laxness of law enforcement which has latterly crept in is almost certain to disappear now. These certain results—speaking briefly and summarily of no-license in Cambridge—may be enumerated: 1. Considerable decrease of arrests and very much better public order. 2. A greatly improved condition of the poorer classes and much greater thrift. 3. Far better work on an average in all our industries by reason of much less drinking by workmen. 4. Much more rapid growth of the city, more desirable inhabitants coming in, buildings going up much more rapidly. 5. Phenomenal increase in savings banks deposits, particularly from small depositors, and phenomenal increase in the number of them. 6. Increase in the city's valuation, in six years, over the old rate of increase, enough by this time to yield the city in taxes more than it would receive from all the liquor licenses it could grant at $1,000 each. 7. A striking growth of public spirit, of pride in the city and its prospects, and the unity of purpose amongst its people, irrespective of class, creed or politics."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The woes of the drunkard.—vs. 29, 30. "Who hath woe?" The woes of the drunkard are many. (1.) Physical ills. The headache and other bad feelings which follow a drunken spree are only the beginning of evils. A continued course of dissipation brings on organic troubles of various kinds, and finally the terrible delirium tremens. This will be easily understood when we remember that the action of the alcoholic poison on the brain is to harden it, while it coagulates the blood, enlarges the liver, and otherwise works untold mischief. Taken as a medicine, alcohol has no curative properties whatever. The most it can do is to seem to allay pain by paralyzing the nerve centres so as to destroy, for the time, the sense of feeling. (2.) Spiritual woes. "No drunkard can inherit the kingdom of heaven," and his punishment often seems to begin here. Read the experience of men like Gough, and note how the worm of conscience gnaws even when they are making merry with their boon companions. "Who hath contentions?" How often we see these words in the papers, "Killed in a drunken brawl." Liquor is always provocative of quarrels. When reason has been dethroned by liquor a man will fight with his best friend. The majority of wife-murderers are drinking men, who in their sober moments would never have been capable of such a deed. "Who hath babbling?" This refers to the thick, incoherent and silly talk of a man in his cups. "Who hath wounds without cause?" The drunkard is far more liable to meet with accidents than the sober man, because he has not the control of his natural faculties. "Who hath redness of eyes?" Inflamed eyes, caused by the effect of the alcohol on the brain and other vital organs, are always a noticeable feature in the face of a confirmed drunkard.

2. Warning against wine.—vs. 30-32. "They that tarry long at the wine." When we sit down to a table of wholesome, well-cooked food we are under no temptation to tarry beyond the point where hunger is satisfied. But it is very different with the liquor appetite. This grows by indulgence. A man may begin with a spoonful of liquor to-day, and to-morrow want two spoonfuls, till in the course of a few weeks, or months, he will want his glass; then his second, and then his third, and so on. But when we have eaten of bread, potatoes, or any other wholesome viand, we do not find ourselves craving any larger allowance the next day. "They that go to seek mixed wine," or, as Isaiah expresses it, "men of strength to mingle strong drink." This refers to wines made stronger and more intoxicating by the addition of spices and drugs. Arsenic, alum, copperas, henbane, nux vomica, oil of vitriol, opium, oil of juniper, sugar of lead, etc., are some of the poisonous ingredients found by chemists in liquors of the present day which are sold as "pure." But the worst poison, by far, is the alcohol they contain, and without the presence of which no one would drink or sell the nauseating compound.

"Look not thou upon the wine when it is red." Vice allures by being made pleasing to the senses. Keepers of saloons and haunts of infamy know this very well, and so by light, and music, and fine furnishings, they try to make their dens of sin attractive. A young man who refuses to even look upon the wine-cup will never be tempted to taste it. The spirit of this exhortation not only bids him shun suppers and banquets where wine is served, but, rightly understood, it will prevent its use by every Christian woman in pies, cakes, or pudding-sauces. It is true that the alcoholic or intoxicating principle is destroyed by heat, but not the alcoholic taste, and this is where the mischief begins. No one can tell how far hereditary and pre-natal influences may reach back, or when and how a latent appetite for liquor may be kindled in a boy or youth, though he may be the son of the best of parents. "At the last it biteth like a serpent." The drunkard's terrible remorse, as bitter as it is unavailing, could be described under no truer figure. There is no antidote for it, any more than for the bite of the cobra.

3. The effect of wine on the mind and soul.—vs. 33-35. Wine is always provocative to lust. The saloon and the "strange woman" hunt for their victim in pairs. "Thine heart shall utter perverse things," that would never be said in his sober senses. This is only another version of the old saying, "When the wine is in, the wit is out." "I will seek it yet again." "A burnt child dreads the fire, but the drunkard turns again to the very source of all his woes, liquor, to drown memory and consciousness. This is a picture of the drunkard as true to-day as it was three thousand years ago. Is it right to license the sale of this poison for body and soul? Will God hold a government guiltless that to increase its revenue will thus take the price of blood?"

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

DENOMINATIONS.

The eleventh census of the United States shows that there are in our bounds one hundred and forty-three denominations. Each of them has a distinct name, and certain peculiarities of creed or practice.

The Roman Catholic, or Latin church, claims more members than any other single denomination. The Greek church is held by the Latin church as a schismatic church. Besides there are five other branches of Catholics.

Besides these, the remainder are mainly Protestant churches. They divide into groups.

The Baptists have thirteen branches: The Regular Baptists North, the Regular Baptists South, the Regular Baptists Colored, Six Principle Baptists, Seventh-Day Baptists, Free-Will Baptists, the Original Free-Will Baptists, the General Baptists, the Separate Baptists, the United Baptists, the Baptist Church of Christ, the Primitive Baptists, and the Old Two Seed in the Spirit Predestinarian Baptists. These branches have all come out of a single trunk that existed at some past period. The first preacher of note, and likely the founder of the Baptist church in the United States, was Roger Williams.

The Methodists are divided into seventeen denominations in the United States: The Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South, Union American Methodist Episcopal, African Methodist Episcopal, African Union Methodist Protestant, African Methodist Episcopal Zion, Zion Union Apostolic, Methodist Protestant, Wesleyan Methodist, Congregational Methodist, Congregational Methodist Colored, New Congregational Methodist, Colored Methodist Episcopal, Primitive Methodist, Free Methodist, Independent Methodist, Evangelist Missionary Methodist. The first society of Methodists in the United States was organized by Philip Embury in New York in the year 1766. He had heard John Wesley preach in Ireland.

The Presbyterian family of churches is divided into twelve parts: The Presbyterians North, the Presbyterians South, Welsh Calvinistic Presbyterians, the Cumberland Presbyterians, the Colored Cumberland Presbyterians, United Presbyterian, Associate Church, Associate Reformed Synod South, Reformed Presbyterian Synod, Reformed Presbyterian General Synod, Reformed Presbyterian Covenanted, Reformed and Presbyterian in U. S. and Canada. The last seven named Presbyterian bodies are anti-secrecy, and it is worthy of note that seven out of the twelve Presbyterian bodies refuse membership to the members of secret orders.

The Lutherans are divided into twelve bodies, several of which are anti-secret.

The Mennonites form twelve different churches.

The Adventists are split into six bodies; the River Brethren into three; the Plymouth Brethren into four; the Communistic Societies number eight. The Friends are in four churches. The Reformed are in three divisions. The United Brethren are given in two parts in the census—the United Brethren in Christ, and the United Brethren in Christ (old Constitution).

Why are the churches divided into various parts? The answer to this question is interesting. Some have affirmed that the cause of divisions is the creeds and disciplines of churches, but instead of this being the cause, it is the result. Men differ, and assert their peculiarities in creeds they formulate.

We hold that the toleration of evil, or the want to tolerate an evil, has been the fruitful source of divisions. Carnality and walking as men with preferences for men began the divisions in Paul's day. The sale of indulgences by Tetzel in Germany waked up Martin Luther to the iniquity of the Roman Catholic church. Henry the Eighth of England, wanting to get rid of his lawful wife, Catharine of Aragon, that he might marry Anna Boleyn, led to the separation of the Episcopalian church from the Roman Catholic. The deadness and want of piety in the Church of England led John Wesley to the effort that made the Methodist church. The Wesleyan Methodist Church of America left the Methodist Episcopal church because the old church tolerated slavery and secret societies. The Free Methodist church was thrust out of the Methodist Episcopal church because they took a stand against church gambling, church fairs, church amusements and secret societies. The Liberal United Brethren church left us because they wanted to tolerate secret organizations and go the round of worldly amusements. Hence we think our rule is just and correct.

If the church was wholly given to God, and would stand in the front rank of reforms, there would be no occasion for divisions, only as some might not want to lead a good life. There is no reason for any one to stumble at the multiplication of churches. It is a natural outcome of the condition of things. To make the church what God wants it to be should be our study and care.—Christian Conservator.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Hollis church, N. H., celebrated its 150th anniversary on April 20. There was a large number of people in attendance. The occasion was one of much interest to the denomination in southern New Hampshire. The church was organized April 20, 1743, when the congregation met in a little building that was used as a church. A second house was built in 1746.

LUTHERAN.

—The German Iowa Synod, one of the most energetic of Lutheran synods in the West, has determined to remove its college and seminary from Dubuque to Clinton, Iowa, where a liberal offer has been made it.

—The Ohio Synod has established an "Altenheim," i. e., a home for the aged and infirm, in Allegheny City, Pa. A member of one of the Allegheny congregation paid for the building and site, which cost nearly twenty thousand dollars, and has presented them to the synod free of all incumbrances.

—Rev. C. L. Eberhardt, president of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Saginaw, Mich., and presiding officer of the Synod of Michigan, died April 27, aged 62.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Bishop Mallalieu, after learning from the ministers in the North India conference that about 35,000 inquirers were waiting for baptism in that conference alone, said: "When I see this great work I feel bewildered. I want to sit down and think it over. I believe that in fifty years we shall have fifty millions of Methodists. Let us push on this work as if India belonged to us. If Bishop Thoburn should ask for $300,000 for India next year, I should vote for it." On conference Sunday Bishop Thoburn, assisted by Bishop Mallalieu, baptized twenty-seven persons and ordained thirteen deacons and fifteen elders. There were about 20,000 baptisms last year.

—In the annual report of the Missionary Society for 1892, the summary of foreign missions showed an increase of only 385 members, while there was a loss of 290 probationers, or a decrease of 535 members and probationers. This arose from some confusion growing out of the organization of new conferences in India, a part of the reports being for last year, and the total giving in India only 9,927 members and 17,191 probationers. The official statistics of the India conferences since received show 15,938 members and 27,995 probationers. Hence the summary of our foreign missions instead of showing a loss of 535, report an increase of 16,280 members and probationers.

—A complete list of all the educational branches of the church, with full statistics of each, shows about two hundred institutions of learning, with property valued at $56,283,191 exclusive of debts, and 41,049 students. The Board of Education makes an excellent exhibit of its work; the collections for the "Children's fund" last year were $62,789.81, or one hundred per cent beyond 1888. The board aided during the year 1,266 students of twenty-five nationalities in over a hundred different schools throughout the world. All aid is granted in the form of easy loans.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. Charles Chiniquy, who many years ago left the Roman Catholic church, and afterwards made speeches against it, for which he was repeatedly mobbed, has received the degree of doctor of divinity from the Presbyterian College of McGill College, Montreal. Father Chiniquy is 82 years of age, and is still hale and hearty.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—Rev. D. H. Shelly informs us that the Liberal delegates from North Michigan Conference have both taken the privileges guaranteed them by the commission, and joined secret lodges. One of them belongs to two or three secret orders. They flourish the insignia of their lodge badges in testimony of their being genuine Liberals. Bro. Shelly thinks that the brilliancy of the many lodge badges on the delegates will be inclined to give the bishops sore eyes. But the bishops of the Liberal church have been accustomed to the sight of lodge badges for the past four years, and are getting used to it.—Conservator.

—Prof. John M. Coulter LL. D., president of the Indiana State University of Bloomington, Ind., has been elected president of Lake Forest (Ill.) University.

DISBURSEMENTS.

Rent of hall and traveling expenses of speakers for Allegheny Convention $210.02, Services of Rev W B Stoddard in connection with Allegheny convention 40, One month's labor since convention 15, Total $265.02.

Adding to the balance in the treasury ($94.32) at the time the report for the Allegheny Convention was prepared, the amounts received during and since the convention, and deducting $265.02, leaves a balance in the treasury at the present time of $77.55.

The attention of all who have contributed is called to the above report. If there are any mistakes, the treasurer desires to be informed. The friends of the cause are asked to consider the small balance in the treasury, and are urged to make liberal contributions. Rev. W. B. Stoddard expects to resume work in this State at once. R. C. WYLIE, Treas. Wilkesburg, Pa.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Four hundred thousand people, it is estimated, were present on the opening day of the Columbian Exposition grounds.

The Infanta Eulalie representative of the royal house and throne of Spain, is coming to America to see the World's Fair. She is now enroute from Madrid to Havana, Cuba. From there she will come to New York City in a Spanish war ship with a naval escort, arriving about the last of May. She and her attendants come here as guests of the United States, and Secretary Gresham has given instructions for their proper reception and care.

Sixty foreign naval officers, with others from the U. S. navy, visited the city last week and were feted and honored by the municipal officers.

The richest of all women is soon to visit Chicago. She is Senora Isadora Consino, otherwise known as the "Countess of Monte Cristo," of Santiago, Chili, compared with whose wealth the colossal fortunes of other American women sink into insignificance.

The case of Wm. B. Tascott has been stricken off the Criminal Court calendar. He was indicted in 1888 for the murder of Amos J. Snell. Should the authorities every apprehend Tascott the indictment will still hold good.

The national commissioners of the World's Fair decided that no piano, unless made by a firm making an exhibit, will be allowed in any of the public buildings on the ground. Paderewski insisted on playing on a Steinway piano at the opening of the fair, and Steinway declines to exhibit.

COUNTRY.

Floods of disastrous importance have swept the low lands along the Mississippi river, doing much damage. From St. Paul, Minn., to Arkansas, including the city of St. Louis, crops have been ruined, bridges and embankments torn away, inflicting heavy money losses. Numerous persons have no doubt perished in the general deluge.

Ex-President Benjamin Harrison was elected by the Ohio commandery of the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States as its commander for the ensuing year.

The wife of Chauncey Depew died suddenly in New York City on Sunday. She was long connected with church and charitable work.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

VALUABLE HINTS AND SUGGESTIONS.

"Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: . . . for the joy of the Lord is your strength." Neh. 8: 10.

Carlyle wisely said: "A healthy body is good; but a soul in right health—it is the thing above all others to be prayed for; the blessed thing this earth receives of heaven."

It does not pay to work constantly indoors, taking no out-of-door exercise. Those who permit office or house cares to keep them constantly in impure air, thinking they have no time to exercise in the open air, will sooner or later find that they must take time to be sick.

Almost everything we eat or drink is likely to be unwholesome, filled with microbes or bacteria. Those who do their best to live healthfully, are still subject to disease from causes over which they have no control. We need the faith that claims the promise that if we drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt us.

Beware of the cheap baking powders of the times. They all contain alum, and alum is about as unwholesome a substance as one can take into the human system. Do not buy any baking powder that offers a premium worth about as much as the powder costs. You ought to realize that the powder cannot be worth much.

Pineapple may be canned without cooking. Pare the fruit, carefully removing every bit of the eyes. Cut in small pieces and put in a large bowl with equal weight of sugar. Let it stand over night well covered. In the morning seal in self-sealing glass jars, letting them stand upside down over night. Pineapple prepared in this way is said by the Laws of Life to keep a year and to be perfectly delicious. Try it.

We hear that men's corsets are being used more and more; and that they are warranted to give an "erect soldierly bearing" to the wearer. We wonder whether men are advancing or deteriorating? While the most advanced and enlightened women are throwing aside corsets it seems strange that men should take them up! If men continue to smoke, drink and wear corsets and women keep clear of such things, we wonder what the results will be in the future and which will be the "stronger" sex a hundred years from now!

Now as hot weather is at hand gasoline stoves are used more and more, especially in the city. It is a great convenience to have such a stove, but the dangers from explosion are not to be ignored. The gasoline can should be kept outside the house in a safe place from fire, and the greatest caution be used in filling the stove. A pint of gasoline will generate gas enough to blow up a room and fire a building. A woman in St. Louis poured gasoline into the cracks in the closet to kill roaches. She left it some time, then opened it to see if the roaches were dead. A lighted lamp was in her hand and an explosion was the result, that killed two persons and tore two houses into ruins.

OXYGEN TREATMENT.

Much talk is made of great cures by inhalation of oxygen provided by a certain line of doctors. The Phrenological Journal says: "The best oxygen treatment consists in deep breathing of good air and eating nutritious and easily digested food. In other words, a properly adapted hygiene will supply all the oxygen needed by the body. A much advertised 'system' of oxygen treatment lays much stress on good habits, dietetics and so on, in the circular given to those who try the treatment. This goes so far as to indicate, with some particularity, the kind of food the patient should eat, how he should dress, sleep and exercise to secure the benefits from the expensive apparatus that is furnished to those who pay for it. Thus the whole matter is clear to one of intelligence in such matters. The apparatus for taking the oxygen, whatever may be its name, is but

Mr. L. B. Hamlen,

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwest Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to dis-fellowship secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. I. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25ct each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5cts each.

it—but it takes time, patience and hard work.

So you can wash clothes but it isn't the best way. It's slow work, hard work, costly work. It wears out the things you're trying to get clean.

The best and easiest way is to use Pearline. That does the washing while you're doing something else—does it with-

FARM NOTES.

AMONG THE POULTRY.

Broken mortar or crockery, oyster shells and bones are excellent to prevent the hens from eating their eggs.

From observation and experience, we are persuaded that more young chicks are killed by lice than by skunks or minks.

In shipping hens and roosters have them in different coops high enough so the birds can stand up in them.

Unless especially desired for breeders, hens that do not lay regularly should be marketed as soon as possible. It costs something to winter even a hen.

It requires but little time and attention to manage a small flock, but if it is intended to go into the poultry raising as a business it means work and plenty of it.

Are you crowding too many chickens in one roosting place? Are you permitting chicks under four months to roost other than on the floor or coop? If so, correct at once these mistakes.

When shipping live poultry to market, see to it that the coops are in good condition, for they are sometimes handled roughly, or a slat may come loose and a fowl or two become lost.

If you are sending a mixed lot of hens to market, it will pay you to grade them as to quality and color, so as to have each coop as even as possible. They will sell more rapidly and at better prices.

A valuable grain to feed chickens during the first three weeks of their lives is golden millet. Very small chicks need very small seeds. They constantly search for the seeds of grass or any small seeds. Nature is the best teacher.
Small whole seeds are the best thing in the grain line that can be fed to very young chickens. Millet is useful when they are too small to swallow pearl dwarf corn.—American Poultry Yard.

A NEW FODDER PLANT.

In the woods of northern Europe, a slender pea-like plant flourishes, which is commonly called the wood vetch or narrow-leaved everlasting pea. Through the summer and early fall it is covered with beautiful purple blossoms. This vine, botanically known as Lathyrus syvestris, has been introduced to our American farmers as a fodder plant. It belongs to the leguminous family, and, like clover, beans and peas, has the property of fixing the free nitrogen of the air in tubercles upon its roots. For this reason it will thrive upon very poor soil. The advantages claimed for its growth in the Southern States are its large yield, cheapness of production, its growth in early spring and its long life.

The first year no crop is produced, but thereafter it is said to yield large crops of fodder for many years. It is best to cut the fodder before the flowers ripen, as thereafter the vines become very coarse and fibrous. It is claimed that it is one-third more nutritious than clover hay, and contains three times as much food as timothy. In 1891, the United States department of agriculture distributed the seed of this plant to eighteen experiment stations for trial, but none of them has given a favorable report. It has been found difficult to get a good stand, as many of the seeds fail to germinate. As this plant has not yet been sufficiently tested in this country, it would be well for those who wish to try it to do so on a small scale.—American Agriculturist.

WINNINGS.

When oats and peas are sown together, a larger crop is obtained than from either alone. The cheaper varieties of the pea are as good as the most expensive. The oats should be of a stiff variety, to aid in sustaining the peas.

Buckwheat affords a heavier crop, but not so rich and valuable as peas, for ploughing under to enrich the land. As the grain is not an object, it may be sown any time early in the season after any danger from frost. For ploughing under, sow at least one bushel.—Country
Gentleman.

Pasturing cattle is perhaps the most expensive of all methods, as more land is required, but it is not an easy matter to convince farmers of that fact. The same land, if so cultivated that the crops can be fed to the cattle at the barn, will give better results. True, the cost of the labor will be greater, but the profits will also be larger. Machinery and improved implements of farming will at some time in the future change the system of pasturing to that of soiling.

To grow potatoes, select the best soil you can get, avoiding ground that is liable to overflow, clear off all the trash, and if the ground is not very rich apply a good dressing of well rotted manure and then plough as deep as you can.
Then harrow till the soil is in good condition. Then as soon as danger of frost is past plant for early crop. First of June plant Peachblows. When ready to plant take a plough and run deep furrows three and one-half feet apart. Cut your potatoes in pieces, one or two eyes to the piece, drop eighteen inches apart in these furrows, one piece in a place.
Then take a hoe and cover, putting an inch of soil over each piece. Cultivate as soon as the plants are well up and keep filling in the furrows, and you will not be troubled with weeds in the rows and will not need to do any hand weeding. Cultivate once a week till they bloom.

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much adver-

using it until I had taken about six bot-

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

By the collapse of a flue on the steamer Ohio near Cairo, Ill., Sunday morning 22 men were scalded, six of whom died. Only one officer was killed, the others and the passengers escaping unhurt.

The Illinois Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in session at Freeport, finished its business and adjourned to meet two years hence at Decatur.

At Rockford, Ill., the special grand jury returned an indictment against William J. Burke for the murder of his aged mother. Later Burke was taken into court and pleaded guilty, refusing a trial.

On Thursday the Atlantic coasts from Texas to New England, was visited by heavy rainfalls and a gale of wind that blew vessels ashore, drowning their crews and destroying a large amount of property in Massachusetts and other coast States. In the Shenandoah valley coalminers were driven from the pits by fear of drowning in the threatening floods. The Williamsport boom war broken, letting loose about 150,000,000 feet of logs, which passed down the river.

The fast express train on the "Big Four" railroad which left Chicago on Sunday morning last, through defects in the air brakes, dashed down a steep grade, across the Wabash river bridge, left the track, tearing through the depot at Lafayette, Ind., knocking down the iron sheds, wrecking the express, two mail cars and one combination car and piling the rest of the train upon them. The engine was buried out of sight. Three postal clerks, the express messenger, the engineer, fireman, and six others were killed, and a number of passengers were injured.

The board of bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church held its spring semi-annual conference at the First Methodist Episcopal church at Evanston. The full board is as follows: Bishop Thomas Bowman, St. Louis; R. S. Foster, Boston; S. M. Merrill, Chicago; E. G. Andrews, New York; H. W. Warren, Denver, Col.; C. D. Foss, Philadelphia; John F. Hurst, Washington, D. C.; W. X. Ninde, Detroit; John M. Walden, Cincinnati; W. F. Mallalieu, Buffalo; C. H. Flower, Minneapolis; J. H. Vincent, Topeka; J. N. Fitzgerald, New Orleans; J. P. Newman, Omaha; D. A. Goodsell, San Francisco. The assignment of bishops and other ecclesiastical business occupied the attention of the conference.

On Wednesday, May 3, the great Lewistown reservoir, 3.5 miles north of Springfield, Ohio, broke through its bank with a mighty roar and a huge volume of water rushed down the valley to the southward, sweeping everything before it. The rupture occurred at the flood gates and the crevice was 150 feet wide. Later it was reported that the water had reached Sidney, thirty miles distant from the break, and that one-third of the town was submerged. Fortunately there was no loss of life, ample warning having been given to the endangered people. Many buildings were swept away and over 25,000 acres of land in the route of the flood were under water. The reservoir, which is a Miami canal feeder, covers 17,000 acres, and is the second largest artificial body of water in the world. The canal and river pass through Sidney, Troy, Dayton and Hamilton. The loss of property is estimated at over $1,000,000. Losses by floods in other parts of Ohio are also very heavy.

FOREIGN.

The British Women's Temperance Association, by a majority of 69, re-elected Lady Isabel Somerset president. A political split created great confusion and delay in the proceedings. Miss Willard was present.

Chancellor von Caprivi declared in the reichstag that the government would endeavor by every constitutional means to secure the passage of the army bill. The German army, the Chancellor said, as at present constituted, is unequal to any emergency that might arise.

The directors and other officials of the Mercantile Bank of Australia, which recently failed, and who were accused of criminal mismanagement of the bank's affairs, have all been discharged from prosecution, excepting Sir M. H. Davies, a director, and Frederick Millidge, general manager of the institution.

The African explorer, Oswell, is dead. He was a companion of David Livingston during the latter's explorations in Africa.

The official report on emigration for 1892 shows that 51,000 persons emigrated from Ireland during the year. The total number of Irish emigrants since 1851 is 3,418,383.

The first railway in Siam, connecting Bangkok with the port of Paknam, has been opened for traffic by the king.

Russia has so increased her Black Sea marine that she is able to land 40,000 troops at Constantinople without any hindrance from Turkey, and it is said that transport and material are kept in readiness to land a body of troops in Constantinople in fifteen hours after leaving Odessa.

Australia seems to be in hard luck. Five of its great banks went into the hands of receivers during the month of April. The last bank which failed has 150 branches and the outlook is not cheerful.

April 30 was the forty-fourth day of the drought in Germany, when a light rain fell throughout the empire, but not sufficient to revive the withering vegetation. Growers of cereals are losing heavily.

A line of steamers has been established between Vancouver and Sidney by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Australian Ship Company. The first steamer was to leave Sidney on May 8.

Russian peasants in Perm, on the borders of Siberia, are said to be dying in great numbers from famine. The Bashkirs suffer most severely, and in some villages the dead are lying on the roofs of their houses, as their relatives are too exhausted to bury them. There is also great distress at Voronezh. Subscriptions for the starving peasants are being raised secretly by unofficial committees, in defiance of the law.

I Don't Need It.

This is what many people thoughtlessly say when urged by their friends to take a medicine for some slight but growing ailment. The person addressed rests in fancied security, while some powerful disease may be undermining his health. He may pretend not to notice slight troubles, which are very noticeable to friends, or may imagine them to be merely of slight and temporary character. So he keeps putting off taking proper precaution, as thousands have done before, until the disease gains so firm a hold upon the system that a cure is impossible. It is not our desire to cause needless alarm, but merely to call attention to little things which may be the beginning of serious affections, and to suggest the use of a simple medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will enable you to overcome the insidious enemy, and resist his attacks in the future.

A PRISONER OF HOPE.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Between Two Opinions," "Holden With Cords," etc., New England Correspondent of the "Cynosure," and Editor of the "Home Light."

This very interesting and helpful story by this popular writer, who is well-known to the readers of this paper, will begin in the issue of

Messiah's Herald

for April 5th. The heroine of the story is a cripple, who has been advised to try different methods of healing. The story tells how she was at last healed, but while showing how this was accomplished, the author also deals with certain erroneous ideas concerning bodily infirmities. In writing this story Miss Flagg has done her best work, and it is sure to win praises everywhere. It will have a GREAT RUN, and it is evident that the papers containing the earlier chapters will be soon exhausted. The story will be copyrighted, and will appear in no other periodical. Those who desire to secure the complete story should send in their orders at once. The story will be continued several months, so that the better way to secure it entire will be to subscribe for a year. The Herald is the oldest prophetic journal in the world, and is opposed to

Rum, Romanism, and All Evil.

It supplies sixteen large pages of the best reading matter every week. Terms: $1.50 per year, with Conwell's Life of Spurgeon (price $1.50) free, postpaid; six months, 75 cents, without the book. The book alone is worth the price asked for both it and the paper for one year.

Address, MESSIAH'S HERALD,
Box 160. Boston, Mass.

(In writing, please mention the Cynosure.)

Anti-masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Prime Minister Gladstone has offered the ancient and honorable post of Poet-Laureate of Great Britain to John Ruskin, the celebrated art connoisseur and critic, who has reached his 74th year. The selection of this gentleman is certainly unique, since he has never won a reputation as a poet, although his art-papers are filled with pleasing and fanciful ideas.

The recent defeat of the legislative bill by which the German army was to have been increased and maintained caused considerable disappointment throughout the empire. As an interesting corollary on the march of reform, it is stated that in Berlin, the center of the military spirit, peace societies are being formed, including prominent people in their membership. Peace pamphlets are also being written and read, and thoughtful men are speaking out against the despotism of war. This intelligence will be joyously received.

One of our N. C. A. agents recently received a private letter from an Eastern gentleman, in which he writes: "Wherever my lot may be cast, I will always be found taking an active interest in the anti-secrecy movement. I am making good use of the books I received, and you would not believe the number that are becoming interested in the work here. I will write you again next week, giving you an idea of the progress on this line that has been going on since last I saw you." This is an encouraging indication of an advance, and a thousand more of the same kind would be very acceptable.

Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, not many months ago, angered the adherents of a certain church, by proposing to melt up the gold and silver images in Italian cathedrals, and devote the proceeds to improving the bodily and mental condition of the poorer classes of Italians. When we read that in the cathedral of Gaudaloupe, Mexico, "the chancel rail is fully six inches square, of solid gold, and valued at $15,000,000," one can hardly avoid echoing the sentiment of

Mr. Butterworth with a good deal stronger emphasis. When a certain successful European warrior entered a Spanish cathedral in a city which he had conquered, he pointed to the valuable life-size images of the twelve apostles, and left instructions to have them melted and made into a more convenient form "to go about doing good like their blessed Master." Perhaps there is where Mr. Butterworth got his idea.

The recent revision of the Canadian Knights Templar ritual is not received with favor. Of it the Canadian Freemason says: "It will be issued just in time to meet the rising tide of opinion in favor of adopting the American work entire. So far as we can learn, the revised work is but little improvement on what we have at present. Sooner or later we must assimilate our work with that of our American fraters, and we now believe that it cannot be done too soon in the interests of Templarism in Canada." The conservatism of Masonry is its safeguard. The alteration of its rituals would work endless confusion, even if it did not wreck its entire lodge-system. Hence the implacable stringency of its landmarks, forbidding any changes in its work. Besides, it insures the continued correctness of the Anti-masonic expositions sold at this office.

There are persons who argue that if the World's Fair is closed on Sunday, the railway trains will run just the same, and that if sight-seers come to Chicago on week-days they must necessarily ride in cars that are run seven days in the week. That may be so; but if the cars do run on Sunday, and the sight-seer does not ride in them on that day, even if the Fair is open, where is his sin? But we are sure of one thing. The Fair is open daily from Tuesday morning until Friday evening, so that the conscientious visitor may do his traveling on Monday and Saturday, and avoid any semblance of Sabbath-breaking. He cannot prevent the trains running on Sunday, but he can observe what our Lord said: "What is that to thee? Follow thou me!" Obedience at any cost is better than the sacrifice of one's moral integrity.

"Some time ago," says the Lutheran Standard, of Columbus, Ohio, "we called the attention of our readers to a certain Jesse E. Taylor of East Liverpool, O., who had denounced a Boston lecturer (Rev. J. P. Stoddard). The lecturer had dared to say something against Masonry. Our article was copied by the Christian Cynosure of Chicago, and a copy of the paper sent to Mr. Taylor. The reply is sent to us in writing. It is not worthy of publication. There is nothing in it that deserves a reply. The fact that the fellow does not argue the case, does not touch upon the things spoken of, but shoots at the persons, is to us the strongest evidence that he has been thoroughly initiated and therefore knows that it is un-Masonic to enter upon an argument with one not initiated. He can 'throw mud' which Masonry does not forbid. We shall let him alone in his glory." So will the Cynosure.

The latest case of lynch law in the South is the taking of an alleged horse-thief from a train, by a party of Kentucky farmers, and hanging him. This victim seems to have been a white man. Not long since a Negro, in Georgia, who was supposed to have committed a murder, was tied to a stake, saturated with coal-oil, and burnt to death. In extenuation of this last horror, it is stated that some Negroes aided in its execution. When the Negro-haters want to make out a case against the despised race, they point to similar enormities in Hayti and Dahomey. How it helps the matter that Negroes should have assisted in so terrible a murder remains to be seen. The truth is, that lynching, however it may be executed, is one of the most terrible of crimes, and, so far from repressing other crimes, greatly tends to their promotion. It is not simply a "relic of barbarism;" it is barbarism itself, and can never be tolerated with safety to a free government.

Rev. A. T. Wolff, D. D., pastor of Calvary Presbyterian church, Detroit, and late Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Illinois, who has recently from his pulpit denounced the National Christian Association in the usual Masonic strain, in a lecture, April 27, said: "Socialistic and labor organizations are to be dreaded;" but he failed to tell his audience how many Freemasons belong to those organizations, and were instrumental in giving them birth and maintenance. It would be interesting information for publication.

Among the important events of the present month are the defeat of the German Army bill, the dissolution of the national reichstag, and the appeal to the German people, all of which show how desperately Emperor William had set his heart on carrying this favorite measure, and how stern an opposition it encountered. After many months of discussion, and several attempts at amendments and compromise, the resistance to an enlargement of the national military establishment has in no wise abated. There is evidently a deep-seated dread of militarism, and a horror of increased taxation, in the public mind. What will be the result of this appeal to the people, and, in case of probable failure, what further measures the impetuous young Emperor will adopt, remains to be seen. The Germans are thoughtful, patient, and not given to revolutions; but it would not be strange if the ruler of Germany, like Napoleon III., should find that in his greed for military greatness he had lost his dominion.

News came from Muscatine, Ia., on Thursday of last week, that the residences of three citizens—John Mahin (editor of the Muscatine Journal), Captain E. M. Kessinger (a retired capitalist), and N. Rosenberger (an attorney)—were blown up with gunpowder at an early hour that morning. The explosions are described as terrific, and aroused thousands of citizens from their beds. The houses were completely wrecked, and the escape of their fifteen occupants from death was almost miraculous; yet, beyond a few bruises and some severe nervous shocks, all were delivered from the shattered buildings. The cause of this outrage is traced to the prevailing war upon the liquor traffic by these and other ardent prohibitionists. The owners of the destroyed residences are prosecuting the saloon-keepers of the city, against whom six injunctions were granted on Wednesday. Suits will be brought against the remaining thirty-two saloon-keepers, but Judge Wolf adjourned court, owing to public indignation at the injuries sustained by Attorney Rosenberger. Mr. Mahin places his loss at $8,000. Kessinger's loss will be fully as large. Rosenberger's house is ruined. Detectives were searching for the perpetrators. A large reward has been offered for their arrest.

THE FEMININE TITLE.

Women are never allowed to become Masons, but another society has been formed which they can join, and which is allowed to wear a Masonic title. The case is analogous to that of a certain order of men, that is not Masonic, yet wears the square and compass on a white apron.

If there were no other reason why women could not be made Masons, an insuperable obstacle would remain in the oath that every Mason takes.

There is no Mason in the lodge who has arrived at the point where he can officially assist at the initiation of a candidate, with it being put under oath that he will not be present at the initiation of a lunatic, a woman or a fool.

What they are thus sworn not to do, Masons never do. The lodge contains no woman,—we are not quite so positive about lunatics and fools. The term "Adoptive Masonry" answers well enough for the other society, since all, pertaining even remotely to the order, including "Jack"-Masonry, Jill Masonry, and Adoptive Masonry, is always deceptive Masonry.

A deceiving title is an appropriate one.

In thus borrowing a word invested with good associations and turning it to a false use, it is true to its own inalienable character. It professes to adopt the other society. Adoption involves identification. An adopted child is adopted into the family that adopts him. No one adopts a child into the family of a neighbor.

But Masons, solemnly sworn not to adopt female candidates, pretend to "adopt" them into an outside female organization.

The Odd-fellows have done better. They call the female society a Rebekah lodge. Now Rebekah was the sister of Laban, and aunt of Rachel, who stole the gods of Laban the Syrian.

A woman's name, combining suggestions of idolatry and Judaism, was finely adopted to associate a woman's society with the sun-worshipping society of Odd-fellows.

A similar title for the degrees of the woman's society, pretending to a quasi connection with Masonry, would be more graceful than the dry and vague term adoptive. That name is still more awkward, since it forever calls attention to the fact that these women are shut out into a little room of their own, because, like other fools, they cannot be adopted. The degree is named by contraries.

We ought to be able to find a name, for the women certainly had their "mysteries" in the days of "those truly Masonic" institutions. Milton recognizes them, in his description of the fallen angels roused by the appeal of their "superior fiend:"

"With these in troop

Came Ashtoreth: whom the Phœnicians called Astarte, queen of heaven, with crescent horns;
To whose bright image nightly by the moon
Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
By that uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguiled by fair idolateresses, fell
To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day;
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love tale
Infected Sion's daughter with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah."

It was not in Sidon or Sion alone that women had their "mysteries." In Rome, where "Cæsar's wife must be above suspicion," the female lodge was as jealously exclusive as the male. To enter it was death to a man. It might be thought rude to suggest the possibility that this fatal law had any relation to female candidates being "duly and truly prepared."

Not only in the "sacred porch," and Rome and Zidon, but eastward and everywhere in "those truly Masonic institutions semi-circling the Holy Land from Egypt around east of Jordan to the isles of the Gentiles westward, we find that female Masonry now called adoptive. Cozbi the Moabitess, whom Phinehas, of the house of Aaron the priest, thrust through with the same dart that impaled Zimri, seems to have been conversant with the rites of the "truly Masonic" worship of Baal-Peor, or the religion of the "point within a circle."

Yet Cozbi, though of a princely house, appears less eminent as a patroness of the adoptive religion than the Zidonian wife of Ahab. It was she who initiated the king of Israel and the multitude of recreant Israelites, and fed the four hundred officers of the lodge at her own table. She was the one who set up the obscene symbols, and she was most vindictive against that eminent Antimason of ancient times, Elijah.

Nothing could be more appropriate than to name the miscalled adoptive degrees the Jezebel degrees.

Then, like the dawn of sun-worship, in the lodge outside Odd-fellowship would flush the aurora of Syrian idolatry in the suggestive Rebekah degree; while outside Freemasonry, in the female society, would shine, full-orbed, the morning star of Zidonian sun-worship glowing in the Jezebel degree.

GRAPHITE.

PAPAL PERSECUTION IN MEXICO.

Readers of the Cynosure, from time to time, have been favored with reports from B. B. Blachly, who has for some years been engaged in the laudable work of selling Protestant Bibles in Mexico and adjacent districts. His experiences, as printed in this paper, indicate a great desire on the part of the poor, priest-ridden people of Mexico to read and possess the Holy Scriptures, frequently sacrificing the necessities of life for that purpose. On the other hand, Mr. Blachly has suffered persecution from those who profess to be Christians (Roman Catholics), and has been able to appreciate Paul's feelings while he "fought with beasts at Ephesus." On a recent occasion he was hanged in effigy, shot at and stoned, in the State of Sinaloa, for dispensing the Word of God to the poor in that region.

Not long since an effort was made by Protestants in Sinaloa to establish a house of orthodox worship, and, as a preliminary work, they began distributing the Bible and evangelical tracts. Such an aggressive movement in a Roman Catholic country at once brought down upon them the maledictions of the papal ecclesiastics, and drew from the Bishop of Sinaloa the following malevolent document, which has been translated by Rev. A. C. Wright, and was published in full in the El Paso (Texas) Evening Tribune of May 4, 1893:

THE BISHOP'S LETTER.

Instructions which the illustrious Bishop of Sinaloa addresses to the faithful of this city, in regard to the Protestant propaganda:

It having been brought to our notice that certain foreigners have come to our city lately with the object of establishing a Protestant temple here, and that they have begun to distribute Protestant tracts and Bibles, in virtue of the obligation that is on us to care for your spiritual good, we hereby notify you, our very dear children, that you must not buy, receive, nor read these Bibles, nor other tracts or papers which the persons to whom we refer are distributing; all of which Our Mother the Holy Church prohibits to her children under the severest penalties. But that you may have more exact knowledge of your duties in this particular, we present to you the following instructions, published under similar circumstances by some distinguished prelates of our republic:

1. It is a plain apostasy from Our Holy Catholic Religion, Roman and Apostolic, in which only exists and can be obtained true salvation, to affiliate with whatever of the sects or Protestant communions. Those who so do, are by that very act separated from the Catholic communion, commit heresy and are anathematized with the excommunication reserved to the Holy Father.

2. They incur the same punishment who, with full knowledge and consent, co-operate in favoring, directly or indirectly, the formation, action, or propagation of whatever of these sects.

3. In accordance with this, it is not allowed to any of the faithful to furnish house, furniture, utensils or other objects, for the use of any of the sects to which we refer in any meeting or ceremony whatever.

4. Nor is any Catholic allowed to invite any one to attend such services, nor advise such act, not even to attend from pure curiosity.

5. It is not permitted to receive any gift from such communion, if it be of the nature of remuneration for work in its favor, or an incentive to attend their services.

6. Nor is any Catholic allowed to have, read or circulate any book, tract or paper which these dissenters distribute; and, under pain of excommunication, such literature must be delivered up to the Authority of the church.

7. In consequence of all this, it is of the strictest obligation to all Catholics to observe absolute isolation from all sects of the Protestants, and to abstain from all co-operation and aid which may favor them.

8. And finally, it is an act to be reprov'd, and unworthy of any Catholic, to employ against the dissenters injury, insult, threat or the slightest kind of violence.

Such, my dear friends, are the prescriptions which the Catholic church imposes on her faithful children in regard to the separation which they ought to maintain in their lives from the heretical sects which are trying to enter. It is, also, the same that she has ever taught, based, among other motives, on the inspired words of the beloved disciple of the Lord, the Apostle S. John, called even by some of the dissenters the Apostle of Charity, who, in his second epistle, speaking of the doctrine of the Catholic faith, expresses himself thus: "If any one cometh unto you and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works," favoring, to some degree his heretical purposes.

Let this be well understood, dear children in Christ Jesus; and above all, ye fathers and mothers, double, triple, centuple your care and vigilance, in order to shut all the doors of your houses against the seduction of Protestantism, even when it comes with the stimulus of money, which it has already begun to introduce. If you do not do so the result will be that, after having sold your conscience and your sons for a few paltry dollars, faith will disappear from your hearths, to go to illumine other homes and other peoples with its light who will know how to appreciate it. Avoid by all means the association of your children with perverse youths who will lead them by their example to sell their souls to the Protestants in exchange for money and for good locations in the service of the same propaganda, running into the danger of deserting the faith of their fathers to pass over to the camp of the heresy. Behold, my dear ones, that just as the blood of Abel cried from the ground against the one who shed it, so the souls of your children, tormented, perhaps, some day through eternity on account of their apostasy, will cry out against you, who, with your indifference and criminal condescension, will have been the cause of their eternal perdition.

May the Most Holy Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ and his Most Holy Mother remove from you the evils which threaten you; and for your part, our dear children, be docile to the voice of the church, strengthen yourselves more and more in your religion; shun conversation with all those who pretend to tear away from you that most precious treasure of the holy faith which you profess, and receive the blessing of your pastor as a proof of the great love which he has for you. (Signed) JOSE MARIA DE JESUS, Bishop of Sinaloa.

Culiacan, 19th of Feb., 1891.

NOTES.

1. The reverend father quotes from the same book which he forbids his people to read under pain of excommunication and eternal condemnation.

2. While he prints cautions against the use of violence, he privately instigates his people to hang and burn in effigy a Bible seller in their town; at another time they shoot at him five times and stone him in the streets.

3. One of his "dear children," a young man, follows this Bible-seller for days, with a deadly knife in his bosom, seeking opportunity to stab him. That young man is now converted to a more Christian religion and confesses the deed.

4. The holy father quotes Scripture correctly in one sentence, and in his closing appeal introduces doctrines in direct opposition to the teachings of that same book.

WHAT MR. BLACHLY SAYS.

The American Bible Society was established in 1816, said Mr. B. B. Blachly, in answer to a Tribune reporter for some information on the subject; and during the first seventy-five years of its life printed 54,000,000 volumes of the Scriptures in whole or in part. And in 1891 there were printed many or more than during the first twenty-five years.

The Bible is printed in whole or in part in 216 languages and dialects by the society, and a special work in raised characters is printed for the blind.

The ambition of the three great societies—the American Bible Society, the Scotch Bible Society and the English Foreign Bible Society, is to print the Bible so that every living being can have a copy of the work in their own tongue.

The book is now printed in 300 different languages by the three societies.

The American Bible Society has taken the task upon itself to place in the hands of every child in the United States, who hasn't one, a Bible, and the work is progressing favorably. No notes or comments in the Bibles are allowed.

In 1891 this society had over 300 agents and colporteurs in different parts of the world, who devote all of their time to the work. This does not include missionaries.

During 1891 there were 17,000 Bibles distributed in Mexico by thirty agents. The first six months of '92 there was more money realized from the sale of Bibles in Mexico than during the whole of '90 or '91. This shows the growing demand for the book in that republic.

The American Bible Society has spent millions of dollars in different countries to support men while they were learning languages in order to translate the Bible into the language of the nation or people.

Mr. Blachly was asked what other book next to the Bible had been printed in a greater number of languages, and he answered, "Pilgrim's Progress," by great odds.

Mr. Blachly is an agent of this society and is engaged in distributing the Good Book in this country and throughout the republic of Mexico.

BARBAROUS COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

DETAILS OF THE DISFIGUREMENT OF STUDENTS, MALE AND FEMALE, AT THE OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, DELAWARE, OHIO.

Our next report of this occurrence is from a special dispatch in the New York Evening Sun, dated Delaware, O., April 22.

The outrageous hazing performance of the students of the Ohio Wesleyan University is assuming proportions far greater than was anticipated.

Some of the young women students at Monett Hall belonging to the university caught the hazing spirit, and fell upon some of their sister schoolmates.

About twenty young women, on the same evening on which the boys suffered, got a strong solution of nitrate of silver and proceeded to brand six or seven of their school friends on their necks, breasts, arms and hands, for the purpose, it is alleged, of so disfiguring them that they would be unable to wear evening dress at the senior reception on Thursday evening.

They lay in wait for them until after midnight, when the girls were returning from their society meeting in their hall.

This occurrence, coupled with the outrage of the male students, has added fuel to the excitement.

Some of the students last evening set one of the frame buildings on the college campus on fire, and it was entirely consumed.

The fact has developed that the students who did the branding of the boys were not sophomores, but an aggregation selected from the lower classes.

One of the number, Mickey Harrold, is not a student at all, having graduated last year. The others are Holly Farrar, of London, O.; Waite Phelan, of Mechanicsburg; Sumner Welch, of this city, son of Dr. C. Welch; Harry Belt, of Kenton, O., son of the Rev. L. A. Belt; Will Ennis, of Columbus; Walter Evans, of Camba, O.; Will Moorman, of South Charleston, O.; and Pete Adams, of Highland, O. All these are members of the D. O. A., which is not a chartered fraternity.

A later dispatch from Delaware reports: "Two of the hazed students, Harn and Rogers, have been foremost in hazing other students in a brutal manner. Harry Belt, one of the boys charged with this latest outrage, was once cruelly burned by redhot shovels in the hands of the members of the Phi Gamma fraternity, of which Harn is a leading member."

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette's dispatch from Delaware, April 21, says:

"Warrants were sworn out by the victims of the horrible deed, who are Mr. Ora C. Harn, a popular young man of Dayton, O., who is a member of the junior class and stands well in society; Mr. J. Burt Rogers, of West Lafayette, O., a fine looking young man and a member of the college quartette; Mr. Wilbur Brown, a son of the Rev. Mr. Brown, of this city; Mr. Will Wallace, of Carbondale, Ill.; Mr. Percy H. Wilson, son of Prof. P. H. Wilson, of this city, and Mr. Albert Austin, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and a nephew of Prof. Austin, of the O. W. U., and they will push the case to the full extent of the law.

"The faces of the unfortunate young men present a horrible spectacle, with the letters, D. O. A. printed and burned on each cheek and chin, and the picture of horns on the forehead. The initials or characters are burned black, and are now festering, making a color of yellow and black print on the face. To look at them reminds one of a tattooed Indian chief with his war paint on. The young men were before exceptionally good looking men, but are now changed to the other extreme; and what is more, they will always be branded and their faces ruined for life.

"It is now learned that the five victims will file papers entering suit for $100,000 against their adversaries, charging them with damages to that extent. This will make two suits, one for criminal action and the other for civil action.

"It now seems a matter of fact to the citizens here, and especially to those most interested in the college, that such things are not punished as they should be. It was only a couple of months ago that about one hundred of the students, dressed in their night shirts, went to the Monnett Hall (the young ladies' seminary) about 12 o'clock and held a ghost dance, howling and yelling and singing unbecoming songs in the presence of the young ladies. This was certainly a most outrageous and indecent performance, but it was suppressed and nothing said, only through the papers. No one was expelled or even suspended, although most of the boys were known and confessed, but they were let stay if they would promise not to do it again, and of course they promised.

"Another event was the stealing of the college grade-book. The person who did the deed broke open the door and took the book and kept it a long time and then returned it. The Faculty talked of offering a reward. But none was offered. They searched the fraternity halls and made a big fuss, and when the thief was found he just promised not to say anything, and is still in college, as important as any one.

"Another was the stealing of the guns from the college armory. The guns were taken out and hid in the snow. The thieves were found and they promised not to do it again. They are still here.

"Another cruel action has just come to light. On last Monday night about forty of the girls of Monnett Hall took about five others and proceeded to initiate them in a manner similar to the way the boys carried out their plan. They got the girls down in the basement in the wee hours of the morning, and there they performed their cruel deed. They likewise used nitrate of silver and printed pictures on the victim's arms and breasts, which causes much pain and agony, and will leave scars for life.

"The Faculty have done nothing in regard to the matter, nor are they likely to, from all reports. It was probably because of this that the boys have grown so bold.

"The actions of the young women are most severely criticised by the people and students. It was certainly a disgrace to themselves, the college, and especially to their parents, who are sending them to school to get an education. It is because of these actions and cruel pranks that the citizens and Alumni of the college are so outspoken and bitter.

" 'They should be fired bodily without further consideration,' said an old benefactor of the institution to-day. And this is the general sentiment.

"The college Faculty held a meeting to-night, at which the boys who committed the assault were brought up and examined. After the examination the Faculty held a secret meeting and rendered a decision. It was that the eight boys were dismissed from college. This is next to the severest sentence that could be rendered. It means that their conduct has been such as to render them unworthy to be members of the college. This seems to be a rather light sentence, but President Bashford seems to think it sufficient from the evidence given. The boys are now beginning to realize their position and are feeling very badly."

[Later intelligence reports that the Faculty has ordered the discontinuance of all secret societies in the university.]

As a result of the recent hazing at Delaware, Ohio, the Ohio House of Representatives, by a vote of sixty-one to two, passed a bill prohibiting hazing, and making the penalty a fine of from $10 to $100 and an imprisonment of from thirty days to one year.

MASONRY AS VIEWED BY MASONS.

WHAT IS KILLING THE FRATERNITY.

[Editorial in the "American Tyler."]

The editor first reviews the existence of the Ancient Mysteries and their disappearance, and proceeds as follows:

Their systems were faulty and expired, while the sin, sorrow and suffering of humanity were handed down from father to son through all generations until it has reached our day. Now, will Freemasonry continue perpetual? We admit, while taking the negative on this interrogation, that no better system banding men together for mutual good to each other has ever before existed, and probably will never be improved upon, being founded upon the fatherhood of God universal and the brotherhood of man in general. But the elements of decay can be observed even now busily at work in this grand institution, marking the time when it will be descending the hill of its life toward the fast setting western sun. One of these indications is that the world is fast absorbing it. A feverish, unhealthy precipitancy is beheld all over the world in rushing the "profane" through the door of a Mason's lodge. It has become fashionable and popular to be a Freemason, and the hegira is in the direction of the Masonic ladder. The inducing causes leading to this are found in curiosity, self-interest and society seeking by men who, after they have received all the ritualism Masonry can impart, have no further use for the same. Another reprehensible reason for a possible decadence is found in the unnecessary accumulation of Masonic work and the unwise rivalry and contention between the bodies which is engendered thereby. If a member be honest in his attendance now upon the duties he has obligated himself to perform, he has but little time for anything else. Say he gives to the "Blue Lodge," Chapter, Council, Commandery, the four Scottish Rite bodies, the Shrine and Eastern Star each twelve evenings on the Regulars alone, and there are eighty-four evenings. Then it is safe to say that each one of these York Rite bodies meets once a week, and he is expected to be present—say at least on the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Take your pencil and figure the number of evenings you should be present in some of these Masonic bodies, brother, and you will be amazed. You will not wonder at your good wife "kicking" over her enforced lonely evenings. Now, "too much familiarity breeds contempt." It may not breed an actual contempt for Masonry, but it certainly kills enthusiasm, to be forced to witness so much of the work. The Master's degree and the Royal Arch were once epochs in the life of a Mason, which he would travel miles to attend. Now we have them every week and even every night. The mental stomach palls at so much of the same thing, however good it may be. Fried flying fish is said to be the most delicious eating in the world, but Capt. Marryat tells us that the Barbadoes Negroes get tired of the fish and eat a handful of mud by way of a change. Think of making twenty Master Masons in one day in Chicago or eighteen Royal Arch Masons in one night in New York! Brethren, these are some of the things that will serve to kill the order finally. It is not so much the price charged for Masonry that comes in question as the making of Masonry a drug by so much work. There must be a final point reached in the ascending grade when we can go no further, and decadence and decay will follow.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES BY KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Sir Knight George DeLap, reviewer of correspondence, Grand Lodge of Mississippi, uses a sharp-pointed instrument piercing a number of naked breasts when he defends his opinion regarding attendance upon religious services by Knights Templar in uniform. Hear him: "What we object to is the fuss, feathers and 'trenchant blades,' together with the tactics and drill which are essential, some think, to a proper (?) performance of the drama. What we further object to is the ignoring of the self-evident proposition that these ostentatious and alleged military processions to the house of God, the 'Prince of Peace,' are, and must be, an abomination in his sight. If a sincere desire to honor and worship God is the object of the ritualists, why not lay aside the showy uniform, the nodding plumes and 'trusty swords,' march in a body and in plain citizens' dress to the church, perform your devotions with a mind undistracted by the thought of what a stunner I am—a thought inseparable from the participants in these alleged 'devotional services,' as usually conducted. What would be better still, would be to hold these services in the Asylum. God is there, as he is everywhere, and he is as ready to accept the sincere devotion and services of his people when offered there as in the Temple of Solomon. One or more of several reasons calls us from the privacy of the Asylum to the publicity of the church. The first of these reasons, a desire born of anything but a wish to honor God, to cut a swell—show our shape, our good clothes and our brilliant uniforms—to be gauped and giggled at by silly girls and brainless fops; to be the cynosure of all eyes and the heroes of the hour! The second reason may be found in the hope that this sort of thing will popularize the order and catch some gudgeons. There are others equally, and no more sensible, for the practice of desecrating the house of God by making it the theater for such displays! We have no desire to be harsh or hard, but we have no patience with a religion of lip service while the heart is far from God. Of course there are exceptions, but they are as scarce as hen's teeth."—American Tyler, May 6.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Superstition and Religion.—Troubled Romanists.—Dr. Fulton's testimony.—The bicycle club and Sabbath desecration.—The end of the endowment orders.—Matters educational.—The gipsy-moth.

Spring, so far, has "turned the cold shoulder" on us, and a plentiful harvest of bronchitis and pneumonia has been the result. But isn't it time that we learned to dress according to the season instead of the calendar? At a time when furs and winter cloaks are often as much needed as at any period of the year, how many a woman perches a fragile piece of lace and flowers on the top of her head, and dons her new spring suit just "because it is Easter;" thus joining together what God has put as far asunder as heaven and hell—religion and fashion, and sacrificing her health on the dual shrine of superstition and vanity, which more frequently exist together than many would suppose. The prejudice against certain gems, as bringing misfortune to the wearer, and the dislike which some have for green, as an unlucky color, shows that a fashionable woman can have just as foolish, if not as many, superstitions as the old dame who sees good luck in a horseshoe and trouble and death in a broken mirror.

At present, your great city of Chicago, like a monster magnet, is drawing everything and everybody to itself, even to the waiter-girls at the hotels. But we can bear this and other inconveniences, seeing that none of us will be likely to be troubled by another Columbian year. The press has been of late so full of reports of the grand opening as to exclude in some measure the local news. But here is one item very appropriate to think upon, while Rome is improving to the utmost her present opportunity. The question is, Are we improving ours? According to the figures of a writer in the Independent, the excess of the Roman Catholic to the nominally Protestant population of Massachusetts is 287,000; in little Rhode 45,000, and in Connecticut very nearly equal. In Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire, to which States the foreign-born immigrant is not so largely attracted, the Protestant element predominates; but how long will it be so even there?

Ex-Senator Patterson, of New Hampshire, recently gave an address before the Essex County Teachers' Convention, in which, describing a European trip, he alluded to the sale of indulgences. This has roused the ire of the Roman Catholic school-teachers of Lawrence, who called an indignation meeting and passed resolutions protesting against his remarks as "untruthful" and "offensive," and "an insult to their religion." This sensitiveness is rather amusing. No descendant of the Puritans but would like to blot out that chapter which tells how his ancestors persecuted the Quakers and Baptists, but who dreams of doing it, or of being affronted when it is mentioned?

Here is a testimony from Dr. J. D. Fulton: That "he had tried to get Orangemen and A. A. P's. and all others professedly interested in antagonizing Rome at the World's Fair, and though he belonged to both societies he did not believe that either were good for anything to meet the crisis." Rome must be vanquished by other weapons than those forged in darkness and secrecy. What she would fear, as a fallen spirit might fear the gleam of an archangel's sword, is a solid, united Protestantism; but between the rival sects that tear her in sunder, and secret societies that rob her of membership and money, she is in evil case. In a certain town in Western Massachusetts, out of 630 inhabitants, only 230 have been inside the church during the past two years, and only seventy-five of these had helped to pay for the preaching. The demoralized condition of our country towns is the result of the weak and demoralized condition of the country church. There are various causes for this declension. It is just now fashionable to put all the blame of our moral, and even of our literary, decadence on the foreign immigrant. But I sometimes think we heap upon his shoulders more of the responsibility than properly belongs to him. The secret lodges, which are composed chiefly of native Americans, have been the tares among the wheat which have enfeebled, and, in some cases, well-nigh destroyed, our rural churches. With the wide-spread neglect of the sanctuary has come a proportionate desecration of the Sabbath. Rev. Nehemiah Boynton spoke truly, when he declared, in a recent sermon, that "the bicycle is one of the greatest modern menaces to the proper observance of the Sabbath." The Sunday "runs" of the bicycle clubs, in city and country, have a demoralizing effect, because, as the doctor says, they represent, not the irreligious tendencies of individuals, so much as "an organized effort to desecrate the Sabbath, and, as such, ought to be opposed by all right-thinking men and women who have the good of the community at heart." The sight of a regiment of wheelers every Lord's day blunts the popular conscience by making the slight of Sabbath desecration a familiar one, and it paves the way for other and even grosser forms of it.

The day of judgment, though long delayed, has finally overtaken the endowment orders in Massachusetts. Not only have the native orders been wiped out, but those of other States are prohibited in future from doing business within her borders; yet they—that is, the people who have filled their pockets by means of these swindles—have kept the bill pending long enough to make a good thing of it, having drawn about $20,000 in that time for salaries which otherwise would have gone to the certificate-holders.

Dime stories and the vilest French novels are said to have been the chief inspiration in Almy's career of crime. The law prohibits the sale of alcoholic poisons to minors, and it should prohibit, with equal stringency, the sale of this moral poison which every careful parent and teacher dreads but often finds himself powerless to contend against. Allied to this subject, the lack of proper industrial education being another prolific source of crime, is manual training in the public schools. It is to be hoped that the time will come when it will form a part of the schooling of every child and youth. Our young people need to be taught, not to use their brains less, but their hands more. Still another point, which seems to be even more overlooked to-day, is that training in manners which our ancestors so justly considered an integral part of all true education. Smile as we may at the bowing and courtesying school-children of former generations, drawn up in line to greet the passer-by, it was better than the rudeness which he too often meets with to-day from even college-bred youth—and (whisper it not in Gath) the ill-manners are not confined to one sex. There is an outside politeness which is like the veneering on coarse wood, but the genuine article in man or woman can never be mistaken, for it is a part of the soul itself, and everybody feels its charm. Like a subtle pervasive perfume that clings to everything one touches, so really fine manners clings to the slightest act we do, even to making change with the washerwoman.

Massachusetts, it appears, is going to exhibit her gipsy-moth—its parasites and its enemies—at the World's Fair. Hunting it may certainly be called one of her "minor industries," as she has already spent $150,000 on this lively and insignificant little pest. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1893.

"There was a time," said an aged minister who was discussing with several friends various changes he had noted in a long life, "when it was a common thing for ministers and prominent members of Christian churches to be known to indulge in the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage—moderately, of course, as a rule, and for that very reason their example was all the more dangerous. No young man deliberately follows the example of a common drunkard, while thousands of them are constantly being led astray because of the example set before them by respectable moderate drinkers, who pride themselves on being able to stop whenever they wish to do so. Too often, they find, when the effort is made, that it would be as easy for a man to stop a railway train traveling at full speed as it is for a man to throw off the alcohol habit after it has deadened his strength and will-power, as it always does sooner or later for those who begin as moderate drinkers. I have always believed that it was more creditable, as well as beneficial to the public at large, to reform a moderate drinker than a confirmed drunkard; my motto is, reform all the moderate drinkers of to-day, and to-morrow there will be no drunkards to reform; for so surely as the little shrub in time grows to be a mighty tree, does the moderate drinker grow to be a drunkard.

"But I have wandered away from what I started to say about moderate drinking having once been more or less common in our churches and our pulpits. To-day, thank God! the ministers and church-members of our country are in the front rank of temperance workers, teaching by example and precept the need of living a pure life, and showing the effects of the deadly poison that the use of alcohol in any form leaves in the moral and physical nature of man. To-day, Christianity and temperance stand shoulder to shoulder in the front rank of the great army that is fighting the battles of moral reform, just as they should have always stood, and, as a rule, temperance is a necessary requirement for membership in all the churches. I do not believe in passing judgment upon my fellow-men, but it is my earnest belief that while a man may, although it is usually under exceptional circumstances, be a good temperance man without being a Christian, it is doubtful, to my mind, whether a man can be a good Christian without being a temperance man; his life may otherwise be blameless, but his failure to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor casts a blemish over it all, even in the eyes of the worldliest of people."

Few people, aside from those directly interested, even in this city, know that an institution has been maintained in Washington for several years for "the increase and diffusion of knowledge relating to the deaf," but such is the fact. This institution, known as the Volta Bureau, was founded and is maintained by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who has made a large fortune out of his telephone interests, and it has published a number of valuable books, among them a large folio volume entitled "Education of Deaf Children," edited by Dr. J. C. Gordon, of the National Deaf Mute College, which has been deposited gratis in all of the principal libraries of the world, to be used as a book of reference. It has now in press "Histories of American Schools for the Deaf," which will run through several volumes, all elaborately illustrated, making it one of the most costly works of the kind ever undertaken. This work will also be distributed gratis to all the large libraries of the world. As the work of the Bureau has increased, the rented building which it occupies has been found inadequate for its purposes, and this week ground was broken for a new building, specially designed for its purposes. Helen A. Keller, the wonderfully intelligent blind and deaf girl, who is at present the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Bell, was very fittingly chosen to turn the first sod in breaking ground for the new building. She is a living illustration of what can be done for the education of the deaf, even when they are also blind.

The large building which was purchased by the Central Union Mission some months ago, having been remodeled and fitted up for its work, was thrown open to the public on Monday evening, a reception being held by the corps of mission workers from 8 to 11 o'clock. The good people of the city turned out in large numbers—the estimated attendance was between three and four thousand—to show their appreciation of the work of the mission, and the big building was thoroughly inspected from top to bottom. Among its other appointments is a room fitted up for the entertainment of such traveling evangelists as may visit Washington from time to time. This room has already been popularly christened "the prophets' room."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 10, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The successful reform worker finds that he can not always plan work ahead. The indications of Providence must be observed.

When I found the roads very muddy in Washington county, Pa., I went on to Ohio, instead of remaining for work, as planned. I shall hope to return this week, trusting that the roads are improved.

I found my wife and daughter in Cedarville, Ohio where they had gone on a visit. I am always sure of a royal welcome in Cedarville, as I get much credit on my wife's account. Ohio was my home for four years. No sooner had I arrived, than friends planned meetings. I preached in the Covenant church on Sabbath morning, and in Ervin and Williamson's Hall on Sabbath evening, by special invitation. The evening attendance was large. All three of the psalm-singing churches united in this service. The hall was well-filled, and several of those coming late remained standing.

I took this opportunity to present the Gospel along the line of our special work. Several secretists were noticed among those present. It was thought that a Rev. Mr. Dudley, sent as pastor of the M. E. church, had done the cause of Christ as much harm as any man that had been that way. He is reported as being a zealous member of the Knights of Pythias; with extraordinary ability he attracted the young and led many of his admirers into the lodge net. He is now chaplain in the penitentiary of this city. He will doubtless meet many lodge brethren behind the bars.

I expect that my work, for a few weeks to come, will be in Western Pennsylvania. Friends writing can address me through the general delivery, Pittsburgh.

I am at present the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Orvis. They may always be counted on the right side in the reform conflict. W. B. STODDARD.

REV. WM. FENTON AND B. FAY MILLS.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 13, 1893.

The evangelist, B. Fay Mills, arrived in the city last Wednesday, and for three nights has occupied the New Auditorium with an audience of about 5,000 each night. The capacity of the hall is 6,000. Between 200 and 300 have already signed cards announcing their determination to be Christians, and expressing their church preference. Mr. Mills' manner is very mild and amiable, and he is careful not to hurt any one's feelings; indeed, he deprecated the prayers of a certain man whom he said prayed in such a way as to make all the people feel as if they ought to be in State prison. And I wondered if that man in his prayer expressed the cut-throat blasphemy of the Freemasons and Baal-worship of the lodges in general. If he did, no wonder he made the people feel as if they ought to be in State prison, or some worse place. But there is no danger, so far as Mr. Mills is concerned, of any one thinking he ought to go to State prison for being a Freemason; for on Friday evening a notorious Freemason offered the long prayer just before Mr. Mills' sermon. Perhaps Mr. Mills is ignorant of the character of Freemasonry; or, for aught I know, he may be a Freemason himself. If he is, he is an awful stumbling-block in the way of the propagation of the truth of God's Word, for the ignorant people will point to him whenever we undertake to preach the truth, and oppose that truth. Fifty-one churches co-operate with him in this work, and it bids fair to be a very successful campaign. I trust that God will make it a great blessing to the city. He will surely bless and save his people. He would do that in spite of Balaam's attempt to curse them. W. FENTON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COMMENCEMENT AT OBERLIN.

OBERLIN, Ohio, May 11, 1893.

The first in the series of Commencement exercises in Oberlin began to-day, it being the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Theological Seminary. In this institution there were twenty-two graduates; nine from the classical department, who received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and thirteen, who were in the English course, received certificates of having completed the prescribed studies.

Instead of the addresses by the students usual on such occasions, an oration was given by Rev. Dr. Henson, the well-known divine, from Chicago. He spoke for an hour and a half, without notes, in a manner that was intensely interesting to the large audience that filled the Second church. No description can do justice to the logic and eloquence, the wit and wisdom, that characterized every part of his discourse. He compared Christianity to a tree, of which faith is the root, doctrine the trunk and branches, and love is the sap. He thought it a sad mistake to suppose that we could preserve the sap except as we preserved the whole tree. He compared the preacher to a gun, which, first of all, must be made of well-tempered metal; which, next, must be charged with the powder of consecrated emotion, and clear, condensed and appropriate thought. Then there must be a well-directed and steady aim—and then it must be touched by holy fire from on high. Each of these points were elaborated by numerous and appropriate illustrations.

The brief address to the graduates, by President Balentine, was clear, comprehensive and most appropriate.

The benediction was pronounced by the venerable ex-President Fairchild, who still holds his place in the theological faculty.

The invitation of a distinguished Baptist to deliver the address on this occasion marks a period in denominational comity, and gives reason to hope that these two branches of Congregationalists may be, ere long, united in more manifest fellowship. Dr. Henson remarked that he was closely akin to his Congregational brethren, but the people with whom he labored thought they "went a little deeper into some things". May the good Lord help us to get to the bottom of all the great truths that God has revealed!

OBERLIN.

IS PROTESTANTISM A FAILURE?

OBERLIN, Ohio, May 7, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In order to gain a right answer to this question, we need to inquire: What are the distinctive features of Protestantism, as distinguished from the Roman, the Greek and the Anglican communions? Briefly stated, they are:

1. Christianity is not simply an abstract doctrine, but a renewed life, which comes only through a personal and living faith in our Lord Jesus Christ as a Divine Saviour.
2. That all true believers are spiritually one in Him.
3. That the sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the creed of the church, and the only infallible rule of faith and practice.
4. That every believer has the right of private interpretation, and on him is laid the responsibility of so understanding and obeying God's Word that he shall be in real fellowship with Christ and his brethren. Over against these distinctive principles are the doctrines of the so-called "Holy Catholic church," which repudiate the name of Protestant. They are:

1. Christianity is a divine gift that comes through the ordinances of the church as administered by an authorized priesthood, who are in actual succession from the holy apostles.
2. That the sacred Scriptures and the commands of the church are the rule of faith and practice. Each is equal in authority over all believers.
3. That the church only, and through its accredited ministers only, has the right to interpret the sacred Scriptures; and hence that the right of private judgment in matters ecclesiastical is an absurdity which has led to many and grievous evils. However much the Roman, the Greek and the Anglican churches may differ in other respects, they will doubtless agree in these propositions.

The question, then, is, What has been the practical influence of these distinctive ideas on the nominally Christian world?

We answer, first, That Protestantism has not been a failure, as judged by its influence on individual and national character. We cannot do better than quote the clear and powerful statement of Macaulay (History of England, Vol. 1). Speaking of the Roman church, he says: "Throughout Christendom, whatever advance has been made in knowledge, in freedom, in wealth, and in the arts of life, has been made in spite of her, and has everywhere been in inverse proportion to her power. The loveliest and most fertile provinces of Europe have, under her rule, been sunk in poverty, in political servitude and intellectual torpor, while Protestant countries, once proverbial for sterility and barbarism, have been turned by skill and industry into gardens, and can boast of a long list of heroes, statesmen, philosophers and poets. Whoever, knowing what Italy and Scotland naturally are and what they were 400 years ago, shall now compare the country around Rome with the country around Edinburgh, will be able to form some judgment of papal domination. The descent of Spain, once the first among monarchies, to the lowest depths of degradation, and the elevation of Holland, in spite of many natural disadvantages, to a position such as no commonwealth so small has ever reached, teach the same lesson. Whoever passes, in Germany, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant principality; in Switzerland, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant canton; in Ireland, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant county, finds that he has passed from a lower to a higher grade of civilization. On the other side of the Atlantic the same law prevails. The Protestants of the United States have left far behind them the Roman Catholics of Mexico, Peru and Brazil. The Roman Catholics of Lower Canada remain inert, while the whole continent around them is in a ferment with Protestant activity."

2. It has not proved a failure in aggressive missionary work. The Greek and Roman churches have done much in the aggregate for the spread of Christianity in heathen lands; but much less relatively than the Protestant communions. If we are to judge of Christian work by its quality, the advantage is very largely in favor of Protestantism. Roman Catholic missions in Africa, India, China and Japan, are much older than those of the Protestants, but in many places they have become extinct and the returning wave of heathenism has obliterated every good influence. Rome should have credit for the good she has done; for even the lowest types of Christianity are better than paganism. But a people that are not taught to read the Bible and to make its teachings the rule of their life, will, most likely, have accepted only one form of false religion for another that is equally false.

3. Protestantism has everywhere been favorable to general education, to intellectual freedom, and moral progress. It has afforded the conditions essential to the promotion of all true reforms. It is safe to say that where Protestant Christianity has most thoroughly prevailed, there have been the purest morals and the highest type of Christian civilization.

But, with all this, there is much ground for the indictment. Compared with what it should have been, and, in its commencement gave promise of being, Protestantism has been largely a failure.

First, the divisions, the rivalries and sectarian animosities, are at once the weakness and the reproach of Protestantism. The enormous waste, both material and spiritual, of our present denominational system, and, along with this, the pressing need of the means thus worse than wasted, to carry on the work of evangelization, is just beginning to attract attention. But the denominations are exceedingly slow in any efforts to stop the leakage. Each sect acts on the assumption that it is especially "set for the defence of the Gospel" and that the divine purposes will fail except as they are accomplished through its instrumentality. A divided front is the opportunity both of Romanism and of Atheism.

2. The growing tendency to ritualism, the practice of responsive readings, the exaltation of artistic music, not as a means of worship, but as an attraction to the outside world, the general celebration of Christmas, Easter, and other festival days, borrowed from paganism, marks a departure from Protestant principles and a steady approximation to Romanism. These beget spiritual weakness and presage extinction.

3. The failure of our Protestant denominations to apply Christian principles to the great and pressing moral and social problems of the age. That such enormities as slave-holding, and such abominations as Freemasonry, should, during the last half of the nineteenth century, have been freely tolerated, and that to-day it should be regarded as a most unwelcome, if not un-Christian, act to call attention to the latter iniquity, indicates a degree of moral obtuseness that argues badly for the spiritual strength of these organizations. Sixty years of agitation have not sufficed to banish the liquor traffic. Progress has been made, but it comes far short of what we might have expected.

4. Protestantism has not carefully considered the relations of capital and labor, and scarcely undertaken to apply the laws of Christ to this complicated problem. The result is, that the great mass of the wage-winners are alienated from Christianity, and are rarely found in the churches. Either Romanism or infidelity will claim them. The outlook is disheartening.

THE REMEDY.

It is not in going back to Rome; not in putting fetters on free thought, and not in uniting, as some propose, in one great ecclesiastical organization, but rather in a more complete return to, and careful exemplification of Protestant principles. Only a part of the Protestant denominations have put away all relics of Roman and pagan influences. In some quarters their power is increasing.

We need: 1. A more careful and reverent study of the sacred Scriptures, untrammelled and unembarrassed by the traditions of men. If the principle of private judgment is true, it ought to be exalted. Is there any authority except Christ and his apostles? That is the question.

2. We want to stop making distinctions between the so-called important and unimportant doctrines of Christianity. All the teachings of the sacred Scriptures are important. No obligation can be safely slighted, for "he that keepeth the whole law and yet offendeth in one point is guilty of all".

3. If we would make Christianity a success, we must recognize the fundamental idea of the unity of God's people; not as a great ecclesiastical organization, but that all real Christians in a given locality are the church of that locality, and that among its members there ought to be no divisions and no rivalries.

Above all, we must insist on applied Christianity, that shall enter earnestly into the great world problems and admit of no solution except in harmony with the law of Christ. If we do this, Protestantism can never fail.

H. H. HINMAN.

MASONRY IN TENNESSEE.

PINE MOUNTAIN, Tenn., May 2, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter to you, the hydra-headed monster—Masonry—has been at work here in the Congregational church. Mr. A. B. Whitworth and his noble wife came here and assumed charge of the church about nine months ago.

Mr. W. is an Anti-mason, while a large majority of the church under his care are Masons. No trouble appeared until about a month ago, when Bro. W. expressed his views on this and other immoral practices. His hearers took exceptions, and at once proceeded to split the church asunder and to organize a Baptist church of the Hard-shell order, in his face, so to speak, under the ministry of a Rev. Mr. Carroll.

This lodge, with its Grand Master, Mr. Russel (deacon), has fought Rev. G. P. Barley's church (Independent Congregational) for five or six years; but as this church is strictly anti, it has no chance to do damage in the church, and can only slander the church and its officers. The prospect now is that Bro. Whitworth will combine his church with the First Independent and drop all his disorderly members along with his Masonic crew. Why do not all God's children avoid this lodge business and ask all members to withdraw from the lodge, or drop them from the church? Christ makes us free indeed, and why should we become slaves to secret orders?

The harm done in this mountain region by clandestine Mason lodges is beyond limit. The man who tries to build up a better way is at once black-listed by the lodge system and most of the native ministry (who, almost to a man, are members of it), and he has all the power of organized prejudice, superstition, and ignorance to contend with; and if he has not the patience of Job, he must give up in despair. And oh, what a pity it is! The children are bright and intelligent, and anxious to go to Sunday and day school, while it is a thing impossible for the native people to procure intelligent teachers or carry on a school farther than the two or three months paid for by the State-at-large. I think that if ever a country needed charitable schools, this is the one; yet you can see the treatment of this old servant of God, whom the American Missionary Association has sent among them, tells the story of appreciation.

Well, after all, liberty grows, and we have one Anti-mason, anti-creed church here, and this is a power in itself for good.

Praying God's blessing on your noble work, I am yours for Christ and reform,

J. F. CAMPBELL.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

There is much to please the reader of desultory literature in the Cosmopolitan for May. Variety abounds, and both letter-press and illustrations are of a high order of merit. Among the more important papers are those of Prof. Elisha Gray, descriptive of his newly-perfected electrical system of communication—the telautograph, illustrated; Harger Ragan's visits to places in London made famous by Charles Dickens' novels, illustrated; Mr. Helm's graphic description of "Belle Isle" (confederate) prison, near Richmond, illustrated; J. E. Jones' visit to a Northwestern lumbering camp, and what he found there, illustrated; Mary B. Ford's glances at American society in Paris, illustrated; some English postal reformers, with portraits, by T. L. James; Mr. Howells contributes another chapter of A Traveler from Altruria, and Helen G. Ecob recalls the crinoline folly of the past, with illustrations. The prominent fiction of this issue is Omega, or the Last Days of the World, by Camille Flammarion, illustrated and thrilling. Several other papers, in prose and poetry, of more or less interest, also will attract the attention of the reader. Published in New York City.

More than ordinary interest attaches to the opening article in American Gardening for May—Cemetery Gardening—not only for its intelligent treatment of an important branch of landscape ornamentation, but for the beautiful full-page scenes from Auburn, Graceland and other cemeteries. The tinted frontispiece presents a magnificent group of seedling white chrysanthemums. Elaborate papers follow: How to Spray, illustrated; The Development of a Pine Stump, and how to make the best of it, illustrated; The Evolution of the Raspberry, illustrated; The Modern Petunia, illustrated; Some New Chrysanthemums; Horticulture at the World's Fair, illustrated; Arranging and Planting School Grounds, illustrated; Golden Gate Park (California), a delightful resort, illustrated; Various Opinions About Fruits, and Roses for the Gulf States. The various editorial departments are filled with miscellaneous and timely notes, and the entire magazine is eminently satisfactory. Published in New York by the Rural Publishing Co.

The Review of Reviews for May contains, all told, about one hundred illustrations. They pertain to the World's Fair, to the naval review, to the flag-raising on the Navesink Highlands, of April 25, and the casting of the Liberty Bell on May 1 at Troy, to the reception in New York of the Duke of Veragua, the lineal descendant of Christopher Columbus; to Mr. Cleveland's various important appointees. Mrs. Henrotin, who stands next to Mrs. Potter Palmer in World's Fair undertakings, has written for this number a summary sketch of the participation of women in the forthcoming World's Fair Congresses. Mrs. Meredith, of Indiana, one of the board of lady managers, gives a glimpse of the Woman's Building and what it represents. There is also, by another lady, a charming little sketch of the Children's Building and its exhibits.

The Social Economist, whose contents from month to month appeal to thoughtful readers for careful consideration, in its May issue treats principally of the Economics of Strikes and Boycotts, by Geo. Gunton; The Eight-Hour Movement in England, by John Rae; Demand and Supply, by Jno. R. Commons and Geo. Gunton; correspondence on Silver, by Justo Arosemena, G. H. Olliver, R. D. A. Parrott, and Amos Densmore. The miscellaneous departments of Among the Magazines, the Editorial Crucible and Book Reviews are replete with pointed comment on current events, and will be read with avidity. Published at 34 Union Square, East, New York City.

The May number of the Cottage Hearth has several readable stories and excellent departments. The closing chapters of Erastus Faulkner appear in this number, followed by Under Suspicion, Tamed, A Trip Through the Sewers of Paris, On the Canadian Pacific, Records of an Epitaph Hunter (full of interest), The Last Part of an Old Story, and How Seth Caught the Salmon. The departments are of especial utility for mothers and housekeepers. Handsome illustrations abound and add greatly to the attractiveness of the magazine. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.

The Journal of Hygiene for May, edited and published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, New York City, contains the following: The Hygienic Treatment of Indigestion (continued), by the editor; If Cholera Comes, what to do, by Dr. A. W. Leighton; Healing by Music (continued), by J. W. Watson; Hygiene for Women—hardening our children, barefoot in summer, bathing and swimming, learning to work, and rights of others—by Jennie Chandler; Editorial Notes on Health—excellent in facts and suggestions; Topics of the Month, and Book Notices.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Papers.)

MASONIC.

The American Mason, Chicago, has stopped publication, owing to lack of support; so says its publisher. Strange! Not long since it boasted of ten thousand circulation among Masons. Have the ten thousand Masons died in so short a time? If so, Bro. Detrick did effective work with his little gun.

On Tuesday, April 11th, the Cleveland Shriners of Al Koran Temple observed the feast of Ramadan. The occasion was one in which hilarity reigned supreme, and every Noble was present with fez and tiger claws. The traditional banquet was one long to be remembered. The invitation closes with the following invocation to the rosy-cheeked god, Bacchus:

"Fill the Bowl with rosie Wine,
Around our Temple Roses twine,
And let us cheerfully awhile,
Like the Wine and Roses smile."

[Now we know what the Mystlo Shrine is for—to promote the drink habit.—ED. CYNOSURE]

The recent trouble in Peru grew out of Anti-masonic demonstrations directed by the Bishop of Arequipa. A lodge and a musical company were attacked; the lodge room was sacked and the building burned. The instruments belonging to the musical company were also burned. A few shots were fired and the American Consular Agent was wounded in one of his legs. The Masons ignored an edict of the bishop against their ceremonies, and the result was a riot, with the above consequences. Thus Rome would do everywhere, if she dared.

The Freemason, of Toronto, favors the old Masonic method of charity, in preference to Masonic Home charity. The latter form, it claims, is developing "a species of Craft pauperism not warranted either Masonically nor socially," and as "placing a premium on Masonic pauperism." It seems to prefer the poorhouse charity of St. John's Lodge, No. 6, of Connecticut, a charity that has been almost universally condemned.

ODD FELLOWS.

It is reported that the Grand Encampment of New York has instructed its representatives in the Sovereign Lodge to vote against the pending amendment prohibiting liquor dealers from becoming members of the order.

The Rebekah branch of the order in Massachusetts numbers 119 lodges and 18,625 members.

"Tis lodge night, dearest, don't sit up,
I may be late, you see;
I hardly know what friends I'll meet,—
And then I have my key."
"All right," she answered with a smile;
Her words were always few;
But she suggested 'ere I went
That I take the keyhole, too."

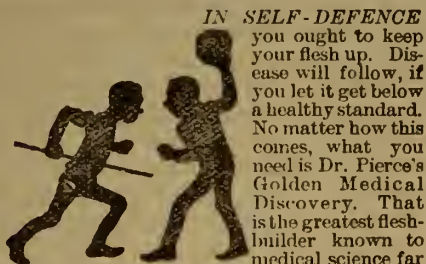

The net gain in the subordinate lodges of Illinois for 1892 was 2,101.

Grand Sire Campbell has decided that it is lawful to restrict by law benefits to Scarlet Degree members.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

At the Grand Encampment of Knights of Pythias held in Kansas City last August it was decided that the next biennial encampment be held in the city of Washington, conditioned upon certain guarantees, to which the public spirited citizens of the national capital will no doubt give prompt assent. The Knights of Pythias constitute an order of large numerical strength and widespread influence. The encampments at Milwaukee in 1890 and at Kansas City in 1892 brought together on each occasion not less than 200,000 people. Many more would doubtless attend an encampment at the national capital, because of the many great attractions here offered to such an assemblage.

IN SELF-DEFENCE
you ought to keep your flesh up. Disease will follow, if you let it get below a healthy standard. No matter how this comes, what you need is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That is the greatest flesh-builder known to medical science far surpassing filthy Cod Liver Oil and all its nasty compounds. It's suited to the most delicate stomachs. It makes the morbidly thin, plump and rosy, with health and strength.

The "Discovery" is sold on trial. In every thing that's claimed for it, as a strength-restorer, blood-cleanser, and flesh-maker, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

It's your case that you want to know about, if you have Catarrh—not your neighbor's. And in your case, no matter what it is, the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy promise to pay you $500, if they can't give you a perfect and permanent cure.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1893.

"ANCIENT AND HONORABLE."

This is the claim which is made especially for Masonry, and which is supposed to be a recommendation. But age in itself is no recommendation. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness;" but Masonry is not found in that way.

As to the claim of "honorable," on what is it founded? Is it founded on the character of the institution, or on the good it accomplishes, or on the appropriateness of its ceremonies? How can that be honorable which dishonors its every votary? Is it honorable for an institution to lay claim to light and knowledge which it knows it does not possess? Is it honorable in a man to seek light, under the darkness of secrecy, which he knows he will not be allowed to proclaim to others? Is it honorable for a man upon the very threshold of the lodge "to declare, upon his honor, that he will cheerfully conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the fraternity," without knowing what these are?

Is it honorable in a Christian, who has the light of life, to rap at a lodge-door and confess that "he has long been wandering in darkness, and now seeks to be brought to light?" Is it very honorable to be "duly and truly prepared" for receiving the degree, as all must be, i.e., to be denuded, hoodwinked and cable-towed? Is it honorable for him, especially if he be a Christian, to listen to a Christless prayer in his behalf, without remonstrance? Is it right and honorable to take an unlawful oath in an unlawful way, and imprecate upon one's self, for the breach of it, a most horrible penalty, that neither human nor divine government would sanction?

Is it honorable, after having done all these things, to always conceal and never reveal them, but by false pretences and prevarications cover them?

Is it honorable, after having been deceived and disappointed in the first degree, to go on, as many do, from one to another?

Is it honorable, after having been deceived yourself, to go into the business of deceiving others?

If these things are not honorable in themselves, how can Masonry, which requires these things, be itself an honorable institution?

A CHORAGIC EXHIBIT.

We are going to have a choragic monument at the World's Fair, if we have not already; and it will bear no relation to the musical emeute which has so early in the Exposition created an unpleasant excitement.

The ancient Egyptian choragus was a musical performer—a chorus leader; especially one who provided at his own expense, and under his own supervision, one of the choruses for the musical contests at Athens. Hence the choragic monument was a building, or column, erected for the reception and exhibition of the tripod which he received as a prize. Two of them are still to be seen among the ruins of the Grecian capital.

One of these old choragic monuments is reproduced (or will be) at the Chicago Exhibition. It is to be a fac simile of the one built at Athens by Lysicrates, which is said to be the finest specimen of Corinthian architecture in existence, and is to be restored here in every particular. It is forty feet high, the walls black, and the wood-work all ebonized and ornamented in gilt.

This remarkable piece of art-work is to occupy the center of an exhibit which will probably attract considerable attention by its novelty, and one in which Cynosure readers, for obvious reasons, will take considerable interest. It is that of the various college secret societies known as the "Greek-letter fraternities," which, through the outrageous wickedness of some of them, are just now not in the best repute.

While upon this subject, we call attention to the illustrated article on the third page of this issue of the Cynosure, entitled, "Barbarous College Fraternities," which will serve, more forcefully than a dozen pagan monuments, to indicate the heathenish character of these societies.

The exhibit at the World's Fair will, no doubt, be truthful as far as it goes, for it will contain little else than "a specimen badge and motto of every fraternity, and copies of their songs, with general reports on their progress." But there will be no vials of lunar caustic, nor hot branding-irons, and sharp iron prods, nor specimens of the handiwork of these societies upon the limbs and bodies of the novices whom they initiate into the mysteries of their contemptible organizations. But the Cynosure proposes, more honestly, to show up these societies and their inhuman barbarities whenever an opportunity to do so shall occur.

We have been at a loss to understand why they should choose a choragic monument as their symbol. To be sure it is a Greek institution, but where the chorister, the chorus and the tripod of victory come in, is an occult mystery, which the initiate may learn at the cost of life-long disfigurement.

ORIGIN OF THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

The recent organization of the first lodge of Knights of Pythias at Ripon, Wis., and the installation of its officers, was made the occasion for a jollification in the town. Great efforts were expended, preliminarily, in inducing the young men to join, a mass meeting of them was called, and, as a consequence, the lodge opened with thirty charter members. Fifty visitors from other places were present, there was a banquet, and the usual fuss and feathers pervading the ceremonies.

A subscriber residing at Ripon writes: "We have one son, and they are trying to make him believe it is a good thing and so social. The charter members pay $10.00 (each), and after that (the organization) it is $20.00; but they say all that join within thirty days can come in for $10.00." Like a faithful parent, this good man is endeavoring to keep his son out of the lodge, and all Cynosure readers will be glad to learn of his success in that direction.

Accompanying his letter, our friend sends us the following interesting item, clipped from the Ripon Free Press, concerning the Knights:

"The history of the order dates back to the year 1864, when in a little town in upper Michigan two young men, fond of delving in the classics, were sitting alone in their room studying. These two men were Schuyler Colfax and a friend by the name of Rathbone. Rathbone was reading passages from the play of Damon and Pythias, and the thought struck him that it would be a nice thing to found an order upon it; and so, imbued with the sense of friendship that existed between Damon and his friend Pythias, he studied it more and more. A few months later he went to Washington, and there, with the aid of a few employes of the government, organized a lodge of the Knights of Pythias, from which has sprung the greatest order known in these times. Thus it will be seen that in the twenty-ninth year of its life it has grown to enormous proportions, until now the total membership in the United States numbers 450,000."

CAUSES AND EFFECTS.

There has been much discussion, of late, as to whether intemperance is the cause or the result of poverty. Those who hold to the first view insist on total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State, as the true policy on the temperance question. Those who incline to the second idea believe that we must relieve the hard conditions of the poor before we can do much to mitigate the evils of intemperance. Both are right. Intemperance is both a cause and an effect of poverty.

There is a marked analogy between physical and moral laws. Disobedience to either brings the penalty. In either case, "the wages of sin is death." We cannot escape the results while we maintain the cause.

To illustrate: Take any of the contagious diseases, such as small-pox and cholera. These, doubtless, depend, in the first instance, on the germs received into the system. But very speedily the diseased person becomes a source of these disease germs. The sickness is both an effect and a cause of the spread of the epidemic. Plant the seed, and you will have a seed-producing plant.

Drunkenness is both a crime and a disease; a crime, because the drunkard sins against himself, against society, and against God; a disease, since it induces an abnormal condition of the system, from which recovery is exceedingly difficult.

From whatever cause this state of the system may originate (and there are many causes), it surely leads to poverty, which, in its turn, leads to drunkenness as affording a temporary oblivion as to surrounding evils.

The remedy for this terrible plague-spot, in our opinion, is applied Christianity. This involves:

1. That we insist that any use of intoxicating drinks is dangerous to the individual, injurious to society, and offensive to God. Together with this there must be earnest effort put forth to reclaim those who seem to be driven to intemperance by their surroundings and sufferings. Reforms in the relations of labor and capital should have consideration as a part of our temperance work. Above all, we must preach the Gospel to the poor. If we cannot get them into our churches, the church must go into the streets and seek them that are lost.

2. We must have legal prohibition. Not the sole, but the leading, cause of intemperance is the open saloon. It is as vain to suggest a mitigation of the evils of intemperance, poverty, and crime, while this cause exists, as it would be to pour out the pestilential and deadly dejections from our cholera hospitals into the streets of our cities, and then take some of the victims into the hospitals to be cured. What we need, most of all, is to dry up these cess-pools of moral malaria. Keeley-cures are well enough; so are cholera hospitals; but what we most need is a moral quarantine.

THE WORLD'S FAIR—SUNDAY OPENING AGAIN.

At a meeting of the World's Fair Directory, on Friday last, thirty-three of the forty-five members being present, Mr. Edwin Walker, in the capacity of an executive committee-man and special attorney for that committee, delivered a long legal opinion which closes as follows:

My opinion, therefore, is that the act of Congress of Aug. 5, 1892, only requires that all the buildings containing exhibits installed for exhibition shall be closed to the public on Sunday, and that the admission of the public to the grounds and buildings not devoted to exhibition purposes would not be in violation of the letter or spirit of the law.

Mr. Walker also offered the following resolution, which the directors present adopted by a vote of 22 to 7:

Resolved, That in accordance with the opinion of Edwin Walker, chairman of the committee on legislation of this corporation, submitted herewith, the public be admitted to the grounds surrounding the Exposition buildings (the buildings containing exhibits remaining closed) upon Sundays, and that the price of admission on such days be fixed at 25 cents.

Resolved, That this resolution take effect from and after May 21, 1893.

It is understood that three of the seven votes in opposition to the foregoing resolutions were cast by Messrs. Elbridge G. Keith, Isaac N. Camp and Victor F. Lawson. Lyman J. Gage, it is known (says the Inter-Ocean), was the leader of the majority which favored Sunday opening as set forth in these resolutions.

The following appeared in Mr. Lawson's paper, the Record, on Saturday:

The persistent purpose of a majority of the World's Fair directors to find some excuse for a violation of the agreement made with the national Congress in the acceptance of the grant of $2,500,000 conditioned on the Fair being closed on Sunday, found a new expression yesterday. The argument that because Congress had designated and had taken measures to enforce its will that about a fifth of the appropriation should be applied to a specific purpose in the conduct of the Fair, therefore the contract had been violated by Congress and the directors were released from the Sunday-closing obligation accompanying the grant, was quietly abandoned, having evidently been found insufficient to overcome the ordinary sentiments of honesty and good faith of honorable business men. In its stead the novel proposition was advanced by the board's legal adviser that in the acts of Congress the terms "exposition" or "exhibition" refer only to the exhibits and the buildings containing them, and do not include the grounds "surrounding the Exposition." In the light of this new and strangely belated discovery an aperture in the Sunday-closed gates sufficiently large for the introduction of the camel's head was pointed out. In the absence of any more hopeful way of getting the beast in, the new legal fiction was adopted and the old one cast aside.

This change of base is a distinct confession of weakness on the part of the law-breaking directors, but it also as distinctly marks an advance toward a final settlement of the question as to whether or not the will of the nation, as expressed by the acts of the national Congress, shall prevail in the conduct of the nation's Exposition. Now let the national commission assert its right of joint control by repudiating this attempted evasion of the law of Congress, and let it immediately bring the matter before the proper judicial tribunal for final settlement. And let action be prompt.

The Evening Mail, which has always strenuously advocated Sunday opening, on Saturday said:

There are very serious breakers ahead on the Sunday opening question. The national commission is stirred up as it never has been before by last night's action of the local directory, and hints of bayonets and troops are even mentioned.

Immediately upon convening President Palmer presented a communication from Secretary Edmonds giving official notice to the commission of the directors' action on Sunday opening. Instantly the room was in an uproar. Finally Commissioner Burton of Kansas moved to refer the matter to the judiciary committee. Mr. St. Clair, heretofore a staunch advocate of Sunday opening, arose to second that motion. It was in the course of his remarks that Mr. St. Clair said that the directory would be taught that it did not own Jackson park and that the park would be closed on Sunday, even though most extreme measures had to be resorted to. This declaration was greeted with great cheering.

The department of justice at Washington will be notified at once and a committee from the national commission may be sent to request that the law be upheld.

Among those who have carefully considered the subject, there is a feeling that the conduct of Congress in recalling a portion of its gift was inexcusable. Nevertheless, the directory has more than two millions of dollars, a direct gift from the government, not one penny of which it could ever have received without the votes of men who had their promise that the World's Fair should be closed on Sunday. It seems that honorable men could have no sort of question as to what should be done under such circumstances. President Palmer said justly that the only honorable way for the Exposition to do in case it was desired to open it on the Sabbath would be to return to the government every dollar which had been from it received.

Director Thos. B. Bryan, in an article of over a column of fine type, in Monday's Inter Ocean, defends the action of the directory on Friday night. It is in the interest of greed and Sabbath-breaking, not creditable to its author, and a very strong argument in favor of all Christians keeping away from the Fair on week-days as well as on Sundays, since a visit to it is neither a work of necessity nor mercy.

Further developments will probably be made before the next issue of the Cynosure.

FALSIFYING HISTORY.

Attention is called by J. Ditzler, in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, to the following passage in Ridpath's History of the World, volume two, page 617, where he says, referring to Protestantism in the Reformation: "Her practices were equally abusive," with Rome. "So, when Protestants, coming into the ascendancy in Germany, Switzerland and England, began to commit, in the name of religion, the very crimes of which Catholicism had been guilty, and to justify them in the same arguments, it was not wonderful that sarcastic Rome turned upon her rival a withering glance."

This falsification leads Mr. Ditzler to rejoin as follows: "The Roman church is doing everything in its power to advance the claims of Catholicism as against Protestantism.... Indeed, our American schoolbooks are sadly blotted with these disgraceful departures from historic truth, mainly on sectional or political issues. They seem to be made by professionals, but not by historians."

The remedy is, to exercise caution in purchasing schoolbooks. No Protestant school officer should suffer himself to be deceived, either ignorantly or knowingly, into patronizing a lying book any sooner than he would trust a common liar.

THE CHINESE.

When President Cleveland, the other day, suspended that portion of the Chinese Exclusion law which requests the speedy deportation of Chinese residents who failed to register under the statute, it was evidently in view of its utter inexpediency, as Congress had neglected to appropriate funds, or provide sufficient transportation, to carry it into effect. His action, however, wise as it must seem to every unprejudiced mind, has greatly stirred up the Chinese-haters in California and other Western States, and some of them are calling for his impeachment or an injunction.

On the other hand, returns of Chinese registration from thirty-five of the sixty-three internal districts in the United States show that 3,169 Chinese have complied with the law. The districts most densely populated by Chinese have not yet made their returns. It is estimated that there are 110,000 Chinese in the United States.

How could the United States send all these 106,000 delinquents back to China?

Rev. Dr. J. S. Baldwin, for twenty-two years a Methodist missionary in China and for nearly a quarter of a century secretary of the missionary board of the Methodist Episcopal church, which has large moneyed interests in China, said last week in New York, that he had positive information from dignitaries of the Chinese government and from his own Chinese missionaries that if the Chinese Exclusion act is carried into effect and Chinese shipped from this country to China, deported simply because they are here without having taken out certificates, that Americans in China will be likewise deported from that country to the United States. "If the law is declared constitutional by the Supreme Court," he said, "I anticipate that there will be a speedy exodus both of missionaries and merchants from China, in retaliation for our sending home Chinese from the United States. . . . This is the most perilous time in the relation of China to the United States that has yet been encountered."

—It is certain that the terrible incubus that rests upon the nations of Europe is their immense military establishments, and that the cause of international peace can make no progress so long as these continue to increase. Probably no nation in Europe is better prepared to commence disarmament than Germany.

—The first of the series of World's Fair congresses began on Monday last in the Memorial Art Palace, on the Lake Front in this city. This is the official gathering of representative women, and one of the most important of the series which is to give variety and interest to the Columbian Exposition. It is a remarkable assemblage, representing numerous countries, and many phases of thought to be advanced by able essayists and speakers. Each day there is, also, a lecture and other exercises at the Woman's Building, on the Fair grounds. The meetings in the Art Palace are held in the forenoons, and those in the Woman's Building at 3 o'clock afternoons. The sessions will continue until the 31st of the present month. Many prominent women will participate in the proceedings.

—Rev. Laughlin McLean, of the Central Methodist conference, and secretary of the Columbia Sunday Association, officially visited the World's Fair grounds on Sunday, May 7, to see how effectually the gates were closed to public admission. "I went," he says, "in a spirit of fairness to judge by actual experience whether or not the general public were in favor of the rule. To sum it all up, I think that the greater part of the respectable people looked upon the closed gates with approval.... I walked from the northern to the extreme southern entrance to the grounds. In all I was about five hours outside the gates. I listened as best I could to the sentiments of those few who walked outside the grounds. Nowhere did I hear remonstrance. I asked a policeman how many people he thought were on the walks outside the grounds, and he said not more than 3,500 or 4,000. Just think of it! The Sunday before the opening 84,000 people passed through the gates. The side shows had not nearly as many people as they would have had if the Fair had been open. I saw the tents where fortunes were told, but saw no one enter any of them. I went into a restaurant to get lunch, and but a few people, comparatively, were there.... I think that Sunday closing is approved by the people." It is well.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.
2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.
3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

The N. C. A. exhibit is sure to be an attractive point for visitors, and when the work in the great buildings is complete and the crowd of visitors throngs their avenues the best man who can be secured will be busy. The friends of the Association must not forget this effort to promote a pure Christianity. It needs your prayers as well as gifts. It is a great opportunity for our reform. Let us not be indifferent to it.

A district conference of the Swedish Methodists was held in Joliet, Ill., last week in the church of which Rev. M. Simpson is pastor. The conference held over the Sabbath and assisted in laying the corner-stone of a new church building on Park Ave., near Ohio street. The business of the conference was, however, practically over when the N. C. A. corresponding secretary reached the city Saturday noon, delayed some two hours by the incorrect printing of a railway folder. He could not, therefore, well present the work of the N. C. A. and request for a delegation to the June conference. Rev. Mr. Simpson, who had invited his presence, entered warmly into the plan, and promised that at a gathering of the brethren during the afternoon he would present the matter and secure the appointment of representatives. Thankfully entrusting the matter to so good hands, the secretary went on to his Sabbath appointment with the Congregational church at Marsailles.

A warm friend of our reform, who has studied its principles and realizes something of the measure of Satan's opposition, suggests that there is not prayer enough for the June 20th conference. It is but about a month before it will be held. There are no "great" speeches down on the program, though we mean no discredit to brethren J. P. Stoddard and M. A. Gault, who are promised for two 20-minute speeches, with the understanding that they are to make the best pleas of their lives. The conference may be a large gathering, or it may not. Its importance does not depend on its size. It does depend on the fact that it represents in some sense millions of Christian people. It is intended that these millions shall be better informed of the vital principles urged by the N. C. A., and it is hoped that this may prove an efficient means of attaining this end. If it be true that the creed of the lodge is essentially different from that of the Christian church; and so far as it is understood and accepted sets aside, nullifies, destroys that Christian creed, the churches should know and act upon the fact. If it be true the lodge altars, three to one to those of the church, are in the line of Cain and Jeroboam and Manasseh,—the Baal worship and Gentile worship of the race,—the churches should realize that the effect of such altars is the same in all time and among all people; that she cannot safely allow the violation of the injunction in 1 Cor. 10: "Ye cannot partake of the Lord's table and the table of devils." If the Masonic system is introducing and fastening upon us the religion of Mohammed; or the religion of the ancient mysteries, which the German Masonic historian Findell tells us went down in the first centuries of the Christian era through the proclamation of the Gospel; if these systems are being revived by the lodge, the churches should know it and meet the emergency. And they can take no step against these evils without enraging Satan, the god of all false worship.

THEREFORE, WE MUST PRAY.—There are some plagues that are not cast out of men but by "prayer and fasting." This seems to be one of them. Do not cease to cry to God that his Son may be exalted and his adversary and ours defeated through this June 20th meeting.

THE HOME.

BURDENS.

Thy burden is God's gift,
And it will make the bearer calm and strong;
Yet, lest it press too heavily and long,
He says, "Cast it on me,
And it shall easy be."

And those who heed his voice,
And seek to give it back in trustful prayer,
Have quiet hearts that never can despair;
And hope lights up the way
Upon the darkest day.

It is the lonely load
That crushes out the life and light of heaven;
But borne with him, the soul restored, forgiven,
Sings out through all the days
Her joy and God's high praise.

—Marianne Farningham.

HOME TRAINING.

(From "The Commandment with Promise.")

My party was now fast forming, and my sister agreeing to receive the young people, I was the more at liberty to attend to the seniors, all of whom assembled; and Mrs. Evans introduced her friends, Mr. and Mrs. Graham, saying, "I have taken this liberty, as my friends arrived unexpectedly. Having named to them the novelty of the engagement this evening, they declared they would not detain me at home, but would like to be admitted here; and beside it will answer your purpose, as they have a fine family of children."

My welcome was sincere to all, and I offered coffee early, that we might have a more uninterrupted evening. Mrs. Evans seemed full of curiosity, and addressing a lady near her, said:—

"I feel a little as if I had come to school; I declare I have a kind of fear that the papas and mammas are to be lectured as well as the boys and girls."

"I should not be sorry were it so," she replied, "for I really feel my own deficiencies."

"Oh! but really I hope, at least," she said, laughing, "we shall not be catechised; absolutely I do not know whether I could repeat one of the commandments correctly; and as to understanding them, you know that belongs to people of a certain turn of mind, who see in them so much spirituality, as they call it, that they make the whole a mystery."

"May I," I said, "be permitted to remark upon your observation?"

Mrs. Evans. "Oh, yes, (smiling pleasantly,) certainly."

Author. I do first assure you, my dear madam, I intend not to catechise; but you observed something which implied a difficulty in understanding the commandments; I really think, did you reflect upon them without prejudice against the spiritual meaning, you would find them very intelligible to plain common sense; every one of them is expressed in the simplest language; the reason of the difficulties which appear to some so very great, is to be found in the ignorance of the natural mind of its own state; therefore it is that the prohibitions appear hard or useless, and the positive injunctions either easy or indifferent. For instance, we will take the fifth commandment, as it is on that subject we are particularly interested at present. "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Here is a simple command that children should show a dutiful and respectful deference to their parents. What can be more simple? Its literal sense is easily comprehended; how many hundred questions have we all repeated or heard it, and never questioned the plain meaning; but we have for the most part heard it in vain. We esteemed it, perhaps easy and indifferent, and so we never made an endeavor to give an example of it, by framing our conduct after its rule. Then there is a promise attached, which is seldom attended to, of long life in the land given by the Lord our God. Why do we not attend to it? We naturally love long life; are naturally desirous to dwell in our land; but we forget the Author and Preserver of life, and live as though our days were our own; and the land which the Lord giveth, we esteem not as peculiar; or if we do, as only peculiar to the Jews, and then reason that the promise belongs not to the Gentiles. There is a strange propensity in human nature, to retain the command, and cut off the promise; but if by faith we are engrafted into the true Israel's stock, we partake of their privileges both of law and promise. I mention this, only to show that the literal and obvious meaning are perfectly comprehensible to our minds, but the objection against them is their constraining authority.

"Whatever objections to their authority we may ourselves have felt," said Mr. Conway, "I think, we should all like our children at least to be sensible of it, and to reap the advantage in their obedience."

Author. Doubtless, for without obedience where is the authority? and without authority and obedience, where is the happiness of a family? or where is the hope of the promise? It should be a very affecting consideration to parents who desire the blessing and happiness of their children, that if they are running a course of disobedience and disrespect, they not only transgress the commandment, but forfeit the application of the promise.

Mr. Conway. I confess I have considered the necessity of obedience singly, as right and proper, without attaching any importance to the promise; I see it is an error.

Author. A great one; for enforced authority, merely on human motives, for present expediency, is a selfish acting; consulting, perhaps, chiefly our own present comfort, and mere worldly morality.

Mr. Conway. I should like to have a little explanation of that idea.

Author. I think we ought well to consider all the responsibilities belonging to a parent, to open out to his child all the revelation of God, concerning their nature and the end proposed by their birth into this world; to lead them on to a preparation for an eternal existence in another world; to show them their sinful nature; to point out to them the redeeming blood of Jesus; to declare the power of the Holy Ghost, and thus manifest the love of the Father; to teach them, that while all things here are temporal, yet that they have essential and important duties belonging to them; and that on earth we are to be as pilgrims, seeking for a better country.

Mr. Conway. You are proposing instructions only calculated for mature and reflecting minds, and which would be very difficult to give, in their juvenile days.

Author. I beg pardon; they are just as simple as the commandment; we need not shackle ourselves, and rob our children, by ideas of our own invention, which they cannot understand; adapt your language, if you please, to the capacity of your child; but I believe you will always find the plain Scripture words the easiest to be understood. By early teaching them to look to God in Jesus, you perform one great parental duty, which is that of loosing them from this world, and fixing their attention at least on that which is to come.

Mr. Conway. But what has this to do with obedience?

Author. Much; for you give them the highest object for obedience, so constraining where it is duly impressed that the commands from you which they would be inclined to resist, are enforced upon their consciences by the Scripture admonition of the Lord, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord;" and that they are led to bend unto, and implicitly obey as right.

Mr. Conway.—It appears to me that you put the authority of the parent too much in the background.

Author. I put it second to that of God; and whatever parent will desire to be the supreme authority to his child, will find, to his discomfort, that he will be beneath every rising passion of the child. If a parent makes self supreme, there is at once a rivalry between him and the child, each taking the same God, self; the contention is endless and hopeless; and then, when forced to try, as another method, and merely as secondary, the authority of God, the child looks upon it as a scheme, adopted for a present purpose, and as a sure indication that it has gained a point. Be, therefore, yourselves subject to the authority of God, refer your children constantly to the same, and you preserve an unchangeable principle and motive, established and settled in the Lord.

Here Mrs. Aston asked, "How early would you begin this system with your children?"

Author. Before I reply to this inquiry, I would ask one question: How early do you begin to train your children for the station you expect them to fill in the world?

Mrs. Aston. I can scarcely say, because we do not always, perhaps, make up our minds what they shall be, at the same period.

Author. A thought has often been presented to my mind, by the evident delight a parent takes in observing the different traits of character in his child. A father, for instance, has, perhaps, a predilection for some particular profession for his boy; he has interest in some way which he hopes to realize; then, if his son is designed for the sea, or the army, with what pleasure he notices his inclination to climb, calls him a "sailor," a "jolly tar," etc.; how he promotes his inclinations by buying him toys suited to inspire correspondent feelings; he gives him guns and cannons, a red coat; commends a military air; talks of marching, sailing, fighting. If for sedentary professions, how he urges his plodding over his book. If for trade, how he inculcates the necessity of all the rules of calculation and money getting. Then see a mother; if her daughter is designed to move in a genteel sphere, how carefully she supplies her with one or two nurses or attendants; how attentive to her dress; how watchful for lady-like manners, for polished accent of speech; she desires she should be a rich, a great lady, and studies to adorn her with every accomplishment, repressing all inclinations derogatory to her fancied dignity; and labors to inculcate ideas suited to the station she expects her to fill. This is true—is it not?

"Oh, yes, quite true, certainly," proceeded from every mouth.

Author. If I ask how early this begins, you, perhaps, can answer me. I believe it will be generally acknowledged to be from the cradle, and, I would add, before they are cradled.

"All this, you know," said Mrs. Bennett, "is quite natural, and as it ought to be."

Author. Quite natural; and so much as it ought to be, that the animals will not yield the superiority to you in this respect, God himself having endowed them with the same instinctive fondness for their progeny, and the same careful desire to provide for them. The dens of the beasts—the nests of the birds—the labor of the self-denial for their provision, all display the wonderful wisdom of God, and are a lively specimen of, perhaps, the purest natural affection; but let it be remembered, these fulfill the whole of their duty; they are creatures with nothing but natural life; for man's transgressions they are become subject to death, and in consequence they perish; they have no other duty than to protect and bring up their young, until they are able to care for themselves. That this is the whole of their duty, is shown by the wisdom of God having ordained that thenceforward they are loosed from any sense of natural ties; the parent's care ceaseth, and the dependence of their offspring also ceaseth, knowing each other no longer in this connection of nature.

Mrs. Aston. What do you mean to convey to us by this reference to the animal creation?

Author. That however you may please yourself with the notion of superior love to your children by this expression and display of care, you cannot boast of more than what the inferior creatures evince; and if we put you in comparison, you fall greatly short, for they perform their whole duty; but if you go no farther than this, you leave the principal part of yours undone.

Mrs. Aston. What is that principal part?

Author. I wish parents would reflect upon the nature of their offspring—that their component parts are body and soul—that the body is mortal, and that the soul is immortal—that the body, therefore, should be subject to the interests of the soul, for by the deeds of the body shall it be judged. Therefore, the first and principal part of your duty is, to promote the safety of the soul, and to endeavor to make provision for that as the grand object and end of all your solicitude. The final well-being of the body is dependent on the well-being of the soul; and let parents who boast their love, remember how fatally they will fail to prove it, if they neglect this pre-eminent evidence of having taught them whom to fear, even him who hath power to cast both body and soul into hell.

Mrs. Evans, who seemed exceedingly uneasy at this turn in the conversation, rather abruptly broke the thread, by saying, "I think we have wandered from the subject, which, if I mistake not, was the obedience of children, and not the duty of parents."

Author. My dear madam, it is with the distinct view of the original subject that I have thus diverged a little into the duty of parents in order to show how intimately they are connected, and what a preparation may be made by the parent toward the great object of the fifth commandment of God; and I believe we may learn much from considering one peculiarity in the commandment, which is, that while there is one commandment especially directed to children, there is not one specifically named as belonging to parents. We should, therefore, remember that to each it is binding. The age has nothing to do with it. It belongs to all, of whatever age or station, to honor their father and mother; and the preceding commandments, directing our individual duty to God, if attended to by the seniors, will be the best security for their being blessed to their children. "I am a jealous God," saith the Lord, "visiting the sin of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments." A lively interest in God in your own bosoms would lead you to fear his wrath on your children, and to covet his mercy for them. I would be understood to contend for this one thing, that the parent's care for his children should begin in devotion to God; and surely I should ask no unreasonable thing, that it should begin as early at least as the preparation for the comfort of their bodies.

SOME "ADVICE."

In one of the large railroad offices in this country is a comparatively young man who is at the head of a large department. When he entered the service of the company five years ago he was green and awkward. He was given the poorest paid work in the department.

The very first day of his employment by the company a man who had been at work in the same room for six years approached him and gave him a little advice.

"Young fellow, I want to put a few words in your ear that will help you. This company is a soulless corporation that regards its employes as so many machines. It makes no difference how hard you work or how well. So you want to do just as little as possible and retain your job. That's my advice. This is a slave pen, and the man who works overtime or does any specially fine work wastes his strength. Don't you do it."

The young man thought over the "advice," and, after a quiet little struggle with himself, he decided to do the best and the most he knew how, whether he received any more pay from the company or not.

At the end of the year the company raised his wages and advanced him to a more responsible position. In three years he was getting a third more salary than when he begun, and in five years he was head clerk in the department; and the man who had condescended to give the greenhorn "advice" was working under him at the same figure that represented his salary eleven years before.

This is not a story of a goody, goody little boy who died early, but of a live young man who exists in flesh and blood to-day and is ready to give "advice" to other young men just beginning to work their way into business. And here it is: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

"Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men."—Youth's Companion.

"PASS IT ON."

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse tells us that, when he was a lad of 14 years, he was returning to his home in Cornwall from school in Germany, passing through London on his way. After spending a little money here, he took the train to Bristol, and then went on board a ship going to Cornwall—the railways not running so far in those days. The passage money, which he thought included his meals, exhausted the whole of his cash, and his surprise was great when the steward, towards the close of the passage, brought him a bill for his food. He told him that he had spent all his money. "Then," said the steward, "you should not have ordered the things you did," and asked him for his name and address.

Directly the lad had stated who he was, the steward looked at him intently, and exclaimed: "I never thought I would live to see you."

Then he told how, many years before, when a fatherless boy, and his mother was in great distress, Mr. Pearse's father had befriended them, and he had resolved, if ever opportunity afforded, he would repay the kindness thus shown. So now he paid the lad's bill, gave him five shillings, and saw him safely landed.

When Mr. Pearse told his father the incident, his reply was: "My lad, I passed the kindness to him long ago, in doing what I did, and now he has passed it on to you. Mind as you grow up you pass it on to others."

And Pearse did not forget; seeing a lad one day at the railway station in trouble because he had not enough money by fourpence to pay for his railway fare, Mr. Pearse gave him a shilling, and when the lad brought him back the change, he told him to keep it, and that he was going to ride with him. And then in the carriage he told the boy the story of how the steward had treated him on the boat.

"And now," he said, "I want you, if ever you have the opportunity, to pass it on to others." Mr. Pearse got out at the junction, and as the train left the station the lad waved his handkerchief and said: "I will pass it on."

How much brighter and happier the world would be if everybody would only "pass on" the little deeds of kindness shown to them. Are you doing this, my young friend, or do you only pass on unkind actions instead of kind ones?—Selected.

TRUST IN GOD AND DO THE RIGHT.

Courage, brother, do not stumble,
Though thy path be dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble;—
"Trust in God and do the right."

Let the road be rough and dreary,
And its end far out of sight,
Foot it bravely, strong or weary.
"Trust in God and do the right."

Perish policy and cunning!
Perish all that fears the light!
Whether losing, whether winning,
"Trust in God and do the right."

Trust no party, sect, or faction;
Trust no leaders in the fight;
But in every word and action
"Trust in God and do the right."

Trust no lovely forms of passion,—
Friends may look like angels bright;
Trust no custom, school, or fashion.
"Trust in God and do the right."

Simple rule, and safest guiding,
Inward peace and inward might,
Star upon our path abiding,
"Trust in God and do the right."

Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight;
Cease from man, and look above thee.
"Trust in God and do the right."

TEMPERANCE.

UNTIL.

Until the temperance element of the country is stronger than the drinking element, absolute stoppage of the liquor trade is impossible.

Until the temperance people of the various views come together on some common platform, a reasonable successful prohibition is impossible.

Until voters are tolerant of opinion, waiting to hear all sides, disposed to do right whatever comes, the temperance cause will gain small advantage from either agitation or discussion.

Until the Prohibition party took up other questions besides prohibition it was called a party of "one idea;" now it is said to have more measures in view than the average voter can espouse: it is hard to please every voter.

Until the dominant parties courageously grapple with the prohibition issue, and act as if they meant death to the saloon, they will have to reckon with the power of independent voting.

Until a great deal of educational work is done along temperance lines, the old ideas of temperance duties will not have become utterly out of order.

Until the Christian adherents of republicanism and democracy realize that political parties are never higher in morals than their purest elements make them, they are not likely to feel responsible, as they should.

Until Christian voters realize that to talk temperance and vote license is to talk one way and vote the other, there will be no great exodus from political party affiliations.

Until the masses of people realize that temperance is a Christian virtue, and that intemperance is one of Satan's chief devices for peopling hell, they are not likely to cease hurling their epithets, like "fanatic," "cranks," etc., at the head of temperance workers.

Until we all care more for morals than we do for men, more for prohibition than we do for party, more for the immediate triumph of righteous principles than we do for the continued reign of political plotters, we are not likely to be encouraged in temperance work by any radical changes in existing conditions.—Springfield Methodist.

has been in operation in Maine for over forty years, and it has been a great blessing to the State. Under the prohibitory policy the assessed value of the property, both personal and real, increased from $235,978,716, in 1880, to $309,129,101, in 1890, being an increase of 31 per cent. During the same decade, the taxes decreased 5 per cent, the bonded indebtedness decreased 29.21 per cent, and the floating indebtedness decreased 11.44.

The increase per cent of per capita valuation, from 1880 to 1885, as shown by the United States Census statistics for Kansas, is 51.17; Vermont, 97.24; Iowa, 12.08; North Dakota, 80.23; South Dakota, 240.95; New York, where the beer business thrives, 20.64; Wisconsin, 5.32; Nebraska, the great high-license State, shows a decrease of 12.86; Illinois shows a decrease of 25.61.—Selected.

PROHIBITION NOTES.

The Prohibition vote of Camden, New Jersey, is almost three times as great as for Bidwell.

The State Convention of the Prohibitionists of Pennsylvania will meet at Harrisburg, June 7th, to nominate a candidate for State treasurer.

The chairman of the county committee of the Prohibition party of Marion county, Kansas, was elected police judge in the city of Marion against the Republican candidate.

There was a hot fight in the Legislature of Wisconsin over the local option law, but it stands. The liquor men were defeated, the vote standing 38 to 34. The temperance people all over the State are jubilant.

Prohibitionists in Rhode Island are wide awake to the interests of their cause and have already opened the next campaign. The State central committee has decided to organize the party in every town and city.

The Army of Liberty is the name of a new organization in Kansas which is working for the repeal of Prohibition in that State. Its members upon joining take a solemn oath never to vote for any one for office unless he is pledged to the repeal of the law.

The State executive committee of Maryland met in Baltimore and decided to call a State convention at Glyndon Park August 9th. Each legislative district of the city, and each county, is entitled to two delegates for each 100 votes cast at the last election.

Advices from Des Moines make it certain that the Prohibition convention to be held there May 30th will be the largest and most important ever held in the history of the party. The position taken by the Republican leaders on the Prohibition question is driving many to our ranks.

The Ohio convention will meet in Cleveland, June 27th and 28th, in Music Hall. Twenty-six thousand and twelve Prohibition votes were cast at the last election, and out of that number they have provided for 525 delegates. Michael J. Fanning will work in the State for two months under the direction of the State committee.

BIBLE LESSON.

OLD TESTAMENT TEACHINGS.

LESSON IX.—Second Quarter, 1893.—May 28.

SUBJECT.—The Excellent Woman.—Proverbs 31: 10-31.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The virtuous woman—her thrift and industry.—vs. 10-15. The word virtuous has a wide range. Virtue is derived from virtus, which means strength. Weakness is not womanliness. Here we have a picture, painted a thousand years before Christ, of a strong-minded woman—strong in every sense of the word. She is no clinging vine, but an upright tree that gives grateful shade and pleasant fruit—a protection and support to others, but requiring none herself. Such women are to be found—like precious stones—by diligent search; but when found, rubies, the most esteemed jewel of ancient times, are not to be compared with them. "The heart of her husband will safely trust in her;"—in her skillful management, and the wisdom and judgment with which she will meet and help him bear any perplexity or trial. "So that he shall have no need of spoil;" or, rather, no lack of gain;" but if we take it as it stands in our common version, we find an important suggestion. He will have no need to cheat or over-reach others. Many a defaulter and embezzler of other people's property has been made such by the extravagant demands of a selfish, frivolous wife. "She worketh willingly with her hands." The pitiable condition of women and girls in our great cities, who stand behind counters, and slave with the needle for miserable wages, is due in a great degree to the prejudice against domestic service. To work willingly with the hands is always honorable, and the really menial labor is that which is done for such an insufficient pittance as to leave only the alternative of slow starvation or a life of shame. "She is like the merchant ships." She is not only industrious but far-sighted; quick to recognize favorable opportunities by which to supply from a distance the wants of her household. "She riseth early," and carries out the meaning of the Saxon word, "lady," a loaf-giver. She looks carefully after the comfort and well-being not only of her own immediate family, but of those who serve her.

2. Her business qualities.—vs. 16-19. Parents make a great mistake in not training their girls, as they do their boys, to have a knowledge of business. The virtuous woman bought fields and planted vineyards, but she lost none of her feminine nature thereby. "She girdeth her loins with strength," alluding to her energy and force of character. "She perceiveth that her merchandise is good." She has the consciousness of doing well whatever she does. She can take honest pride in her own work. She is no foolish virgin,—“her lamp goeth not out by night.”

3. Her charitableness.—v. 19. Her prosperity does not make her hard or penurious. She is not worldly and selfish; she is not narrow and grasping, but her sympathies go out to every needy child of sorrow. She is wisely frugal, that she may give the more. A true woman is the light of her home, a light which cannot be hid; and the brighter she shines in the domestic circle the farther her rays will reach, giving warmth and comfort to those outside.

4. Her care for her home—vs. 21-25. The wise woman's home is her kingdom, and she makes it her daily study to manage it wisely. She does not scorn beauty, but she puts comfort before show. With plenty of scarlet, or "double" garments, as the margin reads, for her household, she is not afraid of the cold of winter. "Her clothing is silk and purple." She can afford to dress richly, to buy the best material; but this does not mean that she tries to follow the vagaries of fashion. She clothes herself wisely and sensibly as her means warrant. "Her husband is known in the gates." She is a constant inspiration, strengthening him where he is weak, and helping him to live such a life of integrity and true nobleness as shall win him public honor and respect.

5. Her piety.—vs. 26-31. "In her tongue is the law of kindness." She is no shrew or scandalmonger. Her words are of "grace seasoned with salt." She is always ready to counsel, to sympathize, but never to talk evil of the absent, or converse on foolish or frivolous topics. "She looketh well to the ways of her household." This includes a moral as well as a temporal oversight. A mother should look well to the books her children read and the friends they choose if she would have them rise up and call her blessed in future years. A large part of the good which is done in the world may be traced to the precepts and example of a Christian mother. "Favor is deceitful." A woman's true beauty is in her soul and moral character. If in her thoughts and desires she is continually reaching up to the purest and loftiest ideals, every time she translates them into word and action it imprints a new loveliness on her face. Even to foreshore years and ten she will win admiration and love. We have in our lesson a type of true womanhood, painted by God himself, feminine but not womanish; strong-minded but not mannish; preserving all the graces of her womanly character, yet working with her hands; buying and selling, transacting business, yet never neglecting her home; and crowning all her virtues with simple, earnest piety. Such will receive praise both of God and man.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

—During the month of March last the American Bible Society distributed 925,932 volumes. Annual reports, with estimates for the present year, were received from the Society's agencies in China, Persia, Brazil, Siam and the Levant; also letters from the Bible Society's committee for Japan, and from correspondents in the Spanish and Madura missions of the American Board, the Arcot mission of the Reformed church, the Syria mission of the Presbyterian church, and the Sweden mission of the Methodist Episcopal church; from Mr. Manecke, of Puerto Plata, Dr. Thomas B. Wood, of Lima, and Mr. Prince, of St. Petersburg. Gratifying reports were made of the large circulation of the Scriptures in Central America during the winter months. Upon the recommendation of the committee on distribution, appropriations of funds for expenditure in Bible work in foreign lands during the ensuing year were made to the Society's agencies in Brazil, Siam, Madura, Arcot and Sweden, of the aggregate amount of $66,441.15; and grants and consignments of books were made of the value of $12,249 for circulation at home and abroad, and for distribution among immigrants who may arrive in the harbor of New York. These grants of books to be sent out from the Bible House for sale and distribution number in the aggregate about 62,000 volumes.

BAPTIST.

—The following "anniversaries" are called to meet at Denver, Colo., this month:

Women's Baptist Home Mission Society—Sixteenth anniversary, at the first Baptist church, Monday and Tuesday, May 23, 23.—American Baptist Publication Society—Sixty-ninth anniversary, Wednesday and Thursday, May 24, 25.—American Baptist Missionary Union—Seventy-ninth anniversary, Friday and Saturday, May 26, 27.—American Baptist Home Mission Society—Sixty-first anniversary, Monday and Tuesday, May 29, 30.—Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Societies—Joint meeting, Wednesday, May 24, 2:30 p. m., at the First Congregational church.—Women's Baptist Home Mission Societies—Joint meeting, Monday, 10 a. m., at the First Congregational church.—The annual sermons before the Publication Society, Missionary Union and Home Mission Society, will be delivered on Sunday, May 28.—Baptist Young People's Meeting at the Calvary Baptist church, Tuesday, May 23—an all-day rally.

—A Baptist deacon in Hustonville, Ky., has been excommunicated for offering the sacrament to a Presbyterian.

LUTHERAN.

—The Pacific Northwest conference, Washington, Oregon and Idaho, contains about 65 Lutheran pastors. In three years this number will be doubled.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Prof. Luther T. Townsend, D.D., recently a professor in the Boston University School of Theology, has accepted the call to the Mount Vernon Methodist church, Baltimore.

—The Wesleyan Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association has made payments amounting in the aggregate to about $600,000. It now numbers 6,794 members.

—Bishop Taylor has arrived in the United States direct from Africa.

—Bishop Ninde, at the recent anniversary of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, speaking in admiring praise of his Kansas home, told of a Sunday-school mass meeting where eleven hundred children were assembled. All who had ever seen a saloon were asked to hold up their hands. Out of the multitude, only about a dozen had ever seen one; and they were either newcomers into the State, or had been taken on a visit to Kansas City, Mo.

—Dr. Abel Stevens is writing the closing chapters of the fifth volume of his great history of the M. E. church, bringing it down to 1890.

—The editors of the Omaha Advocate have received a communication adorned with skull and cross-bones, threatening the life of the editors if they do not cease the publication of articles on Romanism.

—Presiding Elder A. R. Julian, of Northwest Nebraska conference, in making the rounds of his extensive district, is obliged to travel for the most part at night. The past year for 110 nights he did not retire to bed until after 3 o'clock A. M., and on fifty-three nights he did not take his clothes off.

—Every Methodist in the English Parliament voted in favor of the Home-Rule bill at its second reading.

—Bishop Vincent speaks out boldly in the Forum concerning the true significance to Americans of Monsignor Satolli's mission. "We are ready to die for the maintenance of the right of every Roman Catholic," he says pointedly, "to worship God as he pleases under the American flag. But when he insists on his right to embody in our political system doctrines and policies absolutely and manifestly hostile to every distinctively American principle, we are craven cowards if we do not protest and resist."

PRESBYTERIAN.

—On the 20th day of May the New York Observer will celebrate the seventieth anniversary of its publication. The Observer claims to be the oldest religious weekly in America, and ranks among the best of our great religious weeklies. It is the leading bulwark of conservative Presbyterianism in America.

—It is predicted from the votes that have been taken in the presbyteries that the revision of the confession of faith is likely to be defeated in the Presbyterian church. Those who are opposed to any revision, and those who advocate letting the confession alone and adopting a shorter creed, as supplementary or explanatory, have joined forces, and hence revision will be defeated.

—The McCormick Theological Seminary of Chicago held its commencement exercises at the Church of the Covenant, on Thursday, May 4, when seventy-two students were graduated and received their diplomas.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The thirty-seventh annual report of the American United Presbyterian mission in India, for the year 1892, shows that at the close of last year there were in the field a total of 48 missionaries from this country—namely, 14 ordained ministers, 13 females unmarried, 15 married, 2 female medical missionaries and 4 European medical assistants. Of native laborers there were 10 ordained ministers, 9 licentiates and theological students, and 213 other workers—232 natives in all. This seems like a large working force, but it is utterly inadequate to the necessities of the field; and the call for more laborers from this country is loud and earnest.

—The thirty-fifth general assembly of the church will meet in the First church of Monmouth, Ill., on May 24, at 7:45. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. D. MacDill, D.D., moderator of the last assembly.

—All United Presbyterian churches in Chicago are in a thrifty condition, and there is every indication that when—incident to the World's Fair—the superior educational and other advantages of this city go abroad, they will receive further considerable accessions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The revival services of Sam Jones at Bowling Green, Kentucky, have led two thousand three hundred persons to the profession of religion, and closed forty-three saloons.

—A new sect called the "Evening Lights" has made its appearance in Trego county, Kansas. Its members, who number about one hundred, believe in miracles. They do not claim that any miracles have been performed thus far, but they believe the power which was given to the apostles will be given, under certain conditions, to Christ's devoted followers.

—A proposition has been made in France to form a federal union of the Protestant churches in France—including the Lutheran, Reformed, Free, Methodist and Baptist churches—for common action in matters concerning the relation of the churches to the government, and in their attitude toward the Roman Catholic church. Such a federal union is a great Protestant need of our country.

—The Congress of the Religious Press, in connection with the World's Congress Auxiliary of the Columbian Exposition, will take place in Chicago, May 26, 27 and 28.

—The Fifth Universal Peace Congress, to be held under the auspices of the World's Congress Auxiliary of the World's Columbian Exposition, will be held in the Permanent Memorial Art Palace, Chicago, beginning on the 14th of August and continuing one week. About ten sessions in all will be held. The closing session of the congress will be a Sunday morning service in the Art Palace, in which the religious and moral aspects of the peace movement will be considered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The burial service over the remains of L. Domini, who was interred under the auspices of the Society R' D' Italia, at Calvary cemetery, ended in the arrest and imprisonment of two of the mourners. About 200 members of the society had accompanied the remains of Domini to the cemetery. Pasqual Salvatori was marshal of the society, and was assisted by Frank A. Passaville, a trustee. In the midst of the services Sebasto Perni, who fancied that he had been insulted by some of the members of the society on the train, created consternation by suddenly drawing his revolver and threatening to open fire. The women began to scream, and children were trampled under foot by the mourners. Passaville started toward the gate, when he was confronted by Perni's brother, Pasquato, who also had a revolver. Marshal Salvatori disarmed Pasquato, and Passaville succeeded in summoning half a dozen Evanston policemen. The Pernis were arrested.

Tuesday of last week the Chemical National Bank, of this city, closed its doors, and on Wednesday the Columbia did the same. Each had a capital of $1,000,000. But large as was the capital of these banks, their business was small, and the suspension occasioned neither surprise nor alarm. Neither had been in business long, and consequently neither was much of a factor in the finances of Chicago. The loans and discounts of the Columbia were about $100,000 larger March 6 than May 4, and the two totals corresponding to the above were $2,949,170.48, which showed a very considerable shrinkage in business during the period. The deposits of all kinds were $1,802,166.94 in March, as against $1,457,950.34 in May.

Foreign World's Fair exhibitors who had deposits in the Chemical National Bank will be paid by the Fair managers, and lose nothing.

A special civil service examination for stampers in the postoffice will be held May 25. Boys between the ages of 16 and 20 are eligible, but application must be made to Secretary Newton, in the government building, before May 22.

May 22 the grand Congress of Editors, under the direction of President Charles C. Bonney, of the World's Auxiliary, will begin in the art palace and continue through the week. An elaborate program has been provided for the occasion, in which noted newspaper people from all parts of the world are expected to participate.

The new permanent art-palace on the Lake Front is so far finished that it was opened on Friday last. It is a great acquisition to Chicago's many attractions.

Mayor Harrison has been elected a World's Fair director, vice Lamb, resigned.

The bill of fare of the principal company of caterers at the World's Fair shows an increase of from fifty to one hundred per cent in prices of common luncheon viands over those of downtown restaurants.

COUNTRY.

Carlyle Harris, proven guilty of the murder of his young wife, was executed by electricity on Monday, at Sing Sing, N. Y. After being seated in the chair, he made a final denial of his guilt. His death was instantaneous and painless. Harris is the tenth man who has died by electricity.

The number of divorces in the United States from 1867 to 1886 was about 328,716; so says Mr. Carroll D. Wright. And the applications for divorce that failed during the same twenty years were approximately 109,572.

William Blunk and Thomas Luvien, neither of whom is fifteen years old, were sentenced to forty years in Joliet State's prison, by Judge Hutchinson, last Saturday. These boys were the youngest ever sent to Joliet for murder. Both were street toughs—the product of the saloons of Chicago, together with neglect to enforce the compulsory education act. If they had been older they would probably have been hanged.

Not long since there was printed in these columns a description of the proposed new fast train between New York and Chicago, the run to occupy but nineteen hours' time. It was to have been in operation ere this, but for some reason the first trip has been postponed until May 28. As the enterprise is a novelty, the management propose to add to its force by raising the fare $2.00 above the current rate.

Rev. William Lawrence, D.D., dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Cambridge, Mass., was elected as bishop of Massachusetts, to succeed the late Phillips Brooks, D.D.

"Deacon" White, the heavy New York speculator, who recently failed, is paying 25 per cent of his indebtedness.

H. H. Warner, the "Safe Kidney Cure" manufacturer, has failed for a very large amount.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from May 8 to May 13:

HOME AND HEALTH.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

If sheets or tablecloths are wrung by putting the selvage through the wringer, the edges will not curl up, and they will iron much more easily.

Hairbrushes and combs can be thoroughly cleansed by using ammonia and warm water. Lay the brushes, bristles downward, in the sun to dry.

Rub off the carpets with a sponge dipped in water in which is a small proportion of turpentine. This will freshen the colors, and tend to discourage moths.

Persons subject to nervous depression, nervous headaches, and a feeling of faintness or exhaustion, should always have ammonia on hand, as it an economical but efficient remedy.

Ivory, when not stained, may be restored to its former whiteness by cleaning with powdered pumice stone and water, and then placing it under glasses in the sun's rays.

One of the first requisites of good carving is to have the meat dish of good size. It is almost impossible to handle a piece of meat acceptably upon a platter that is even a degree too small.

It is not generally known that currant or any fruit jelly may be easily removed from the mold by setting it in water as hot as your hand can bear it for a few minutes. The jelly looks much better when turned out in this way.

It is at the top that comfortables and quilts wear out and soil soonest. Prevent this by sewing at the top of these a strip of calico, doubled in the middle, half being on inside and half on outside of comfortable. This strip can easily be removed and washed when soiled.

Matting should never be washed with anything but salt and water—a pint of salt to half a pailful of soft water, moderately warm. Dry quickly, with a soft cloth. Twice during the season will probably be sufficient washing for a bedroom, but a room much used will require it somewhat oftener.

Steel knives which are not in general use may be kept from rusting if they are dipped in a strong solution of soda—one part water to four of soda; then wipe them dry, roll in flannel, and keep them in a dry place; or the steel may be well covered with mutton tallow, then wrapped in paper and put away.

IS CONSUMPTION CURABLE?

The following from the New York Tribune, and which that paper vouches for as being "absolute fact," is worthy of being known by all who are afflicted with what is named "the dread disease, consumption." We should have thought that a mild antiseptic, applied to the lungs by inhalation, or spraying, would have been added. The remedy, however, is simple, and can be tried by any one afflicted:

There lives not far from New York a German physician for whom it is claimed that he can perform miracles in so far as he can cure that hitherto incurable disease, consumption of the lungs. Dr. R—— is a man of profound learning, who has devoted his whole life to his profession, and has had wonderful success. His treatment of consumption is too simple to be very popular, as the average patient is not satisfied if he or she be not continually dosed with powerful medicines.

This dosing Dr. R—— absolutely refuses to do, as he gives no drugs whatever, but confines his efforts to assisting nature to do her own work. An interesting case which he is now treating is that of Mrs. M——, who has suffered for years with consumption. Last winter she very nearly died, and this winter her physician despaired of keeping her alive till spring. She is a woman five feet six inches in height, and of rather large frame, and eight weeks ago she weighed eighty-seven pounds.

She suffered agonies, and even looked forward to death as a blessed release. Her family physician, who is progressive in his ideas and had become much interested in Dr. R—— and his treatment, persuaded Mrs. M—— to allow the latter doctor to undertake her cure. She did so very unwillingly, as she had little faith in his power to do her good.

Dr. R—— insisted upon her staying in bed all the time and drinking a cup of warm milk every half hour, this being her only nourishment, and thus began an ordeal which is not yet ended.

The milk caused continual nausea, and later, looseness of the bowels, and it required a great deal of pluck to keep on taking it. Yet from almost the first day of this treatment Mrs. M—— began to improve, and now looks like a different person. In eight weeks she has gained seventeen pounds in flesh, her eyes are bright, her color is good. Her cough has greatly diminished, the character of the matter she raises is changed, and there is much less of it. To her friends her improvement seems a miracle.

Dr. R—— says that in a few months' time she will be entirely well—that is, part of her lungs will be useless, as it is out of his power to replace the diseased part with new and healthy tissue, but she will have plenty of healthy lung left to breathe with, her cough will be gone, and she will be well and strong. This is not a picturesque story, but an absolute fact.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 800 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid, 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to dis-fellow-ship secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. I. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

FARM NOTES.

HORTICULTURAL HINTS.

Deep plowing before planting is of more importance than the cultivation after planting out.

Old trees may be made fruitful by severe pruning, while young trees are often severely injured.

In nearly all cases it will be best to set young trees where the soil can be kept loose and mellow.

It is not by any means a safe plan to gauge the quality of the fruit trees altogether by their size.

The objection to training the trees too low is that it interferes considerably with the cultivation.

Cropping is injurious if no care is taken to return the fertility that the growing crops take away.

Whatever adds to the size, substance and color of the foliage gives size and quality to the fruit.

Pine cut into strips, and the name written on with a lead pencil, makes the best labels for fruit trees.

By grafting, any old fruit tree that is healthy but unproductive can be soon changed in its character.

One advantage in sowing buckwheat in the orchard is that it soon thoroughly shades the ground.

Flax thrives best on rich, deep, loamy soil, and the soil should be thoroughly prepared before sowing the seed.

Never allow manure to come in direct contact with the roots. Apply in the surface and work into the soil.

One advantage with field peas is that they will make a rank growth on what may be considered thin soil.

Both in manuring and cultivating it should be remembered that the roots of the trees extend as far out as the limbs.

A tree with well-ripened wood, grown on a good fertile soil, is to be preferred to a larger one grown by heavy manuring.

WINNINGS.

Weeds are the enemies of the farm as dirt is the enemy of the house. Keep clean.

Go slow in turning cattle and horses out, and await the drying of the surface and a better growth of the herbage.

Don't stop the winter ration off short as soon as you see the first glimmer of green grass in the pastures. There is not a great deal of nutrition in the very young grass.—Prairie Farmer.

Because bright timothy hay and oats are the best feed for horses it does not follow that they would not like a change from it sometimes, or that they would not do better for such a change.

The farmers who are successful are those who never lose sight of the fact that the farm is the home, that everything done toward beautifying and improving the place is enhancing its value.

It will pay anyone having fruit to sell to buy new barrels to ship it in. A prominent Faneuil Hall dealer said to us the other day that he could get a better price for No. 2 apples put up in good shape in new barrels than he could for No. 1 apples put up in old vegetable barrels. The above will apply as well to all other kinds of produce.—New England Farmer.

Plant your trees not more than two years from the bud or graft. They are easily dug, with better roots, hold more firmly in the ground, and start into vigorous growth again with less check in growth.

Keep the orchard fenced from all stock, plant to hoed crops for three years, and sow to clover. When the orchard gets to bearing, give it a wagon-load of manure for every five barrels of apples; do not expect, as in the past, an orchard can bear twenty years without food—you have starved the old orchard to death.

Combine bee-keeping with fruit-growing, and you can more easily procure two crops from the same land; and this double cropping is not exhaustive, requires no additional fertilizing, no extra ploughing or cultivating. There are few crops

HORRORS OF DYSPEPSIA

Mr. J. L. MONTGOMERY,

Suffered as only a Dyspeptic can Suffer.

Had given up all Hope of ever being Cured.

NOW EATS THREE MEALS A DAY,
THE RESULT OF TAKING

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

The strongest recommendation this wonderful medicine has, comes from those who have been cured by taking it. Read what Mr. MONTGOMERY says:—

"I was raised on a farm, and was, up to six years ago, always used to manual labor, and plenty of fresh air. At that time, however, I changed my occupation, went into an office, and it was but a little while after that when my appetite almost wholly disappeared. My digestion was not good, and I had given up hope of ever being cured. For two years I suffered untold pain and agony, such as only a dyspeptic can suffer. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla for this complaint, and by the time I had used six bottles I was as well as ever. The cure was most effectual. I can now eat my three meals a day, sleep soundly, and am never bothered with symptoms of dyspepsia. Ayer's Sarsaparilla indeed cures. It cured me, and if anyone will take it according to directions, it will cure him. I believe that this medicine will cure the most aggravated or chronic case of dyspepsia or indigestion on record, and I can recommend it most heartily and confidently to all who will use it."

which return so much for so little outlay and labor as does the honey crop.

Give the teams extra attention now, and get them in good condition for the hard work they will have to do in a very short time. It is a good plan, too, to break them in for ploughing by doing what hauling you can, such as moving rails, manure and rubbish of any kind that is out of place. Such work will help to toughen their shoulders and strengthen their muscles.—Indiana Farmer.

The occasional profitableness of well-grown potato crops often leads farmers to plan how they may devote most of their land to this crop. No one ever succeeds in doing this. The potato is so successfully grown on a clover ley, with very little manure, that the farmer who depends entirely on purchased fertilizers cannot hope to compete. The potato crop helps little towards making manure. The refuse or small potatoes may be fed during fall or winter, but they are of little value to make manure. Depending mainly on clover as a fertilizer, two-thirds of the time this clover must occupy the land if it grow enough to be worth much as green manure.—American Cultivator.

WHAT A LOT

MEANS IN HARVEY.

A building lot in Harvey means something more than so many square feet of the earth's surface.

It means a home in a moral, industrious, temperance community, with schools and churches already established and well supported.

It means water from artesian wells, streets paved and macadamized, sidewalks planked, trees planted, perfect drainage, and a share in public parks and boulevards.

It means citizenship in the most progressive, fastest growing, and the best known manufacturing town of two years' growth in America.

It means nearness to sixteen great hives of industry, every one of which is bound to give preference, in employing help, to residents of Harvey.

It is these conditions which have given to lots in Harvey an intrinsic value, and prospective advance enjoyed by no other suburban property around Chicago. Address,

The New World of Central Africa.

By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, with a history of the first Christian mission on the Congo. 12mo., 530 pages with maps, portraits and numerous illustrations. $2.00. A conscientious piece of work, and gives a very clear account of what has been done by the Protestant missions to evangelize the barbarous races of Central Africa. If who wants to know what missionary effort means in these days may well learn from this volume. The reader who goes carefully through will have a good bird's eye view of recent events in Africa, with all the results of modern travel. The work contains solid information of use to all who are interested in the future of this wonderful country. The many illustrations throw light upon savage customs and costumes.—Graphic.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 15th page).

The general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States convenes at Macon, Ga., in the First Presbyterian church, to-day.

The Union Loan and Trust company, Sioux City, Iowa, has made an assignment, with liabilities of about $8,000,000. Most of its creditors are banks. Other Sioux City corporations, which became involved, it is expected will resume business at an early day. The losses by the failure of the U., L. and T. are likely to be heavy.

The A. P. A. of Michigan have coerced the Legislature to alter the charter of Bay City, so as to deprive the Mayor of the power to appoint subordinate officials and to vest this authority in the municipal council. As a majority of the members of the council belong to the A. P. A., they will make a clean sweep of the Catholics in office throughout the city departments.

The election of Mayor Mills, of Peoria, Ill., on a reform ticket by a large majority, and the existence of an unreformed city council, has brought on a dead-lock in municipal affairs, since the council refuses to recognize or confirm his official appointments. The Mayor has the support of the ministerial association and the better class of citizens, but is almost powerless.

On Thursday last 200 feet of the levee at Lake Port, Ark., gave way to the high-water pressure, and the Mississippi river flooded a portion of Chicot county, Ark., inflicting immense damage upon the growing cotton crop. It will be too late, when the water subsides, to plant another crop.

Spring Lake, a fine summer resort on Grand River, Mich., was burned by a spark from a passing steamer, suffering the loss of sixty dwellings, two churches, a large union school building and engine-house, and four stores. Damage about $100,000.

At Warren, Mass., Warren G. Butterworth, aged 70, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a rifle. His daughter Emma, who was trying to prevent her father from doing this rash act, received the bullet in her brain after it had passed through her father's head, and she died also.

On Tuesday the New York Central Empire State express, drawn by No. 999, made 102 miles an hour, a great record.

The National Republican League on Thursday, in session at Louisville, Ky., elected W. W. Tracey, of Springfield, Ill., president of the league.

Two weeks ago Jeff Barthol, an Italian, who owns a small farm in Conway county, Ark., suddenly became insane and jumped into a well and drowned himself. Barthol had a wife, several children, and two brothers—John and Alexander, who lived on the farm with him. His suicide preyed on the minds of the two brothers, and both became insane and had to be arrested and locked in the Merrillton jail. On Monday Joe Barthol, an employe in the Iron Mountain shops, on the north side of the river, and a brother to the insane men, went to Center Ridge to look after the effects of the brother who had committed suicide. He also became insane.

Alvan Clark & Sons, Cambridgeport, are making two huge telescopic instruments, soon destined to interest greatly the general public as well as astronomical students. These are the enormous forty-inch lens telescope, which is almost completed, for the Kenwood observatory of the University of Chicago, and the Bruce photographic telescope which is being made for the astronomical observatory of Harvard College.

Smallpox is ravaging Lunenburg county, Virginia. Courts had to suspend sessions on account of it.

Episcopal Bishop Bissell, of Vermont, is dead.

Mexico is about increasing its navy, by purchasing two war ships.

St. Louis merchants and other citizens of repute have formed an auxiliary department of the Salvation Army, with which it will co-operate.

On Sunday last, at Calumet, Mich., ten men were instantly killed in the Red Jacket shaft of the Calumet and Hecla mine. They were coming up in the cage for dinner when the coupling-pin broke and they were dashed down 3,000 feet to the bottom of the shaft.

Twenty-three prisoners detained in the Chautauqua county jail at Mayville, N. Y., awaiting trial or sentence, planned a bold attempt at escape which might have been successful had not their plans been made known by one of the prisoners, Charles Hawthorne, who had a grievance against the leader of the conspiracy.

The sudden death, April 27, in China, is announced of Rev. Dr. L. N. Wheeler, agent of the American Bible Society. Dr. Wheeler was about 50 years old. He was well known in both domestic and foreign missionary work.

The trustees of Lane Seminary, at Cincinnati, have voted to continue Prof. Henry P. Smith, the recalcitrant, in his chair for another year.

FOREIGN.

The steamship Hamburg, off the coast of England, in a fog, on Saturday, collided with the steamship Countess of Evelyn, from Spain, and the latter, with her crew of sixteen and nine passengers, immediately sank.

In a panic on the river Mste, in Russia, on Sunday, a ferryboat became unmanageable in midstream. Dozens of passengers were drowned and many were missing.

Italy will be compelled to import this year 113,500,000 bushels of grain in excess of the ordinary amount imported, owing to the damage to grain crops caused by the drought.

Von Bulow, the Prussian minister to the Vatican, visited Cardinal Rampolla, the papal Secretary of State, and expressed surprise, in behalf of the Prussian government, that his Holiness had departed from the customary limits of prudence in his recent political remarks to the Catholic pilgrims from Germany.

The official announcement is made that the queen has approved the appointment of the Earl of Aberdeen as Governor General of Canada.

At Liverpool, Eng., the Whitsuntide holidays will begin on Friday, May 19. The festivities will continue until Wednesday, May 24.

Wm. Townsend, the crank who attempted, the other day, to shoot Mr. Gladstone, has been committed for trial.

The official estimate of the Bengal wheat crop for the season just closed is 443,243 tons, against 249,930 tons for last year.

Spain is in a ferment, owing to the political contest between the Republican and Carlist factions in the national Cortez (or parliament) over the coming municipal elections. A ministerial crisis was on Friday deemed imminent. Popular excitement ran high, and cries for a republican form of government were loud and numerous, and its advocates are pressing their claims throughout the country. A crisis is at hand, unless the government is able to suppress the popular feeling.

In saying that Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, its proprietors make no idle or extravagant claim. The advertising of Hood's Sarsaparilla is always within the bounds of reason because it is true; it always appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people because it is true, and it is always fully substantiated by endorsements which, in the financial world, would be accepted without a moment's hesitation.

We give place, in this issue, to two articles of peculiar interest—"The Negro in the South," from the Plaindealer, and a letter from a Southern lady, in defence of her people, and in opposition to the recent article by Rev. S. F. Porter, on "The Situation in the South." Comment on either is superfluous.

Will friends kindly remember that the Foreign Fund of the Association, in distributing anti-secrecy literature, has been overdrawn, and contributions are promptly needed in behalf of this work. Our current expenses, too, just now, are drawing heavily upon our resources, and we must appeal for immediate and liberal money donations.

The recent blowing up of the residences of Prohibition leaders, in Muscatine, Iowa, with gunpowder, is another evidence of the depravity of the saloon power. Not satisfied with killing 100,000 drunkards annually in the United States, it does not hesitate to resort to other destructive elements to maintain its influence as the great destroyer of our youth.

The Christian Arbitrator, referring to the International Peace Congress, which is to be held in Chicago for one week, beginning Aug. 14, and its importance, desires that all societies of Friends in the United States and Canada may send delegations to participate in its deliberations. We would amend the proposition by adding another, that every Christian church in America may be ably represented at this gathering, in the interest and name of the great Prince of Peace.

"That mobs still do their bloody work in the South," says the Nashville (Tenn.) Advocate, "is true; that the victims are chiefly Negroes is true; that the instigators and abettors of these mobs usually escape punishment is true; that all this is profoundly to be deplored is true;" but it adds, seemingly with equal truth, that "in no instance has the mobbing of a Negro been punished by legal process north of the Ohio river." This is a serious charge; and if its truth can be established, moral and legal reform is needed as greatly in the North as in the South. Is the Negro always to be the scape-goat, or the victim, of our national sins?

The Sabbath-observance statute of Pennsylvania, enacted in 1855, under which the publishers of Sunday-newspapers and others have been recently arraigned and punished, is in danger of repeal, the Senate of that State having passed a bill to that effect, with the probability that the House will concur in its passage. It is hoped, however, that Governor Pattison will have sufficient grace in that event to use his veto and save the State from legalizing Sabbath prostitution. To repeal this law will be to weaken the cause of Christianity, not only in Pennsylvania, but create a precedent for all other States to ignore the divine command by corrupt legislation.

Looking over the various reports of the annual conferences of the Evangelical Association, one finds very decided and pious expressions in favor of Sabbath observance, temperance, education, Sunday-schools, etc., but not one word against the evils of the secret, oath-bound lodges that beset our state, family and church institutions and threaten to disrupt them. The mind of the average modern church member is a curious affair; it sees the need of some reformation, but not of putting away all error. The Apostle James (chapter 2: 10) understood this peculiarity. Without doubt, it is difficult to reconcile Christ and the lodge under one communion.

The new Immigration law has one peculiar feature that may be deemed unreasonable; but, with Secretary Carlisle's approval, the superintendent has made an important ruling, which overturns former practices as to the admission of idiot foreigners, when accompanied by their parents into the United States. He holds that it was the intention of the act to make each class of debarred immigrants separate and distinct. It debars an idiot absolutely, and the fact that the idiot might have a private fortune, or relations amply able to provide for his wants, cannot be taken into consideration any more than it might be taken into consideration in an application to take a person suffering from a loathsome or contagious disease. Possibly the framers of the law thought that the home supply of idiots is amply sufficient.

In a great international controversy like that now existing between the United States and Great Britain touching their rights in Bering Sea, it is no more than natural that the representatives of each nation should manifest a partisan bias for their respective interests. But in his address before the commission the other day, Mr. Carter, after impressively alluding to the right of the United States to protect its sealing interests and industry, went on to say that, however valuable to the United States the seal herd might be, its greatness as a nation forbade its accepting any decision until founded upon the principles of justice. He was convinced that Great Britain shared these views, and demanded only a decision dictated by these principles. The decision, said Mr. Carter, ought to be a monument for future generations. He appealed to the members of the court to dismiss from their breasts every feeling of partiality, and to give judgment not as citizens of any particular country, but as citizens of the world. The question at stake was a moral one. The controversy, however, was one between nations. The particular code of morals of each country, therefore, was inadmissible. The tribunal must base its decision upon a great moral principle common to all humanity. There is a broad and salutary spirit in this idea which it is hoped the tribunal may cherish to the end.

Judge Taft, on the 13th inst., rendered his decision at Cincinnati, in the Fairview United States case between the Conservative (or Radical) and Liberal branches of the United Brethren in Christ. Reviewing the case at length, the Judge overrules the demurrer of the Liberal defendants, and decides in favor of the Conservative plaintiffs, for the apparently pertinent reason that the commission, in order to have made their action legal in securing a vote upon the proposed changes in the form of belief and constitution, should have notified each member of the church of the day upon which the vote was to be taken. Bishop Wright, in the Dayton Christian Conservator, says: "We regard this as a great victory. It presages further triumphs in the highest courts. In these courts we have already gained two cases to one for the Liberals. We have never doubted the justice and legality of our claim in the courts of our country."

The Nauvoo (Ill.) Independent of a recent date records a death of rather more than ordinary interest, although it is probable that but few of the present generation were aware of the man's existence and the part that he bore in one of the most important events in the history of the Mormon dynasty. This was General Robert Smith, who died at his home in Hamilton, Ill., April 25, aged 86 years. Some years prior to the Mormon ascendancy in Hancock county he became captain of the Carthage Greys, and was in charge of that company on guard at the old Carthage jail, June 27, 1844, when the Mormon Prophets Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed by a mob. During the Mormon war General Smith had command of a military division and was wounded at the battle of Nauvoo in September, 1846. The surrender of the Mormons at Nauvoo followed this battle. General Smith was subsequently (1847) an officer in the Mexican war, and in 1861, at the beginning of the rebellion, was elected captain of company G, 16th Illinois infantry, at Quincy. He was afterwards made colonel and later breveted general for bravery. He served through the war and then settled in Hamilton. He was a warm friend of the late General W. T. Sherman, and the latter made several visits to his country home near Hamilton. A number of Nauvoo veterans served under General Smith in company G, 16th Illinois infantry. The Mormons have never forgiven him for his part in the death of their prophets.

FOUNDED ON THE BIBLE.

The claim that Masonry or Odd-fellowship is "founded on the Bible," must be taken, not with a "grain of salt," but with a good-sized lump.

If the Christian religion is founded on the Bible, and the saying of Chillingworth is true, "The Bible is the religion of Protestants," then it cannot be that anything which antagonizes Christianity in practice, or is irreconcilable with Christian doctrine and morals in principle, is also founded on the Bible. A palace and a hovel cannot stand together on the same foundation.

If the play called the "Black Crook" were to pause two or three times while a short psalm was read, or if one of the actors were now and then to repeat a text of Scripture, "ministers" and other "good men" would hardly be drawn there by the claim of the "Black Crook" show-bills that the play was "founded on the Bible."

The attraction would still be incomplete for sensible men, if the Bible were laid on a table behind the foot-lights, the scenery labeled Jachin, Boaz and Hiram, and a few of the leading actors called priests or priestesses.

I will not venture to predict the effect on a few weak-minded brethren, if an epilogue should gravely explain that the "Black Crook" was introduced into Jerusalem by a Moabitish wife of Solomon, and acted in the palace before the king on his return from the evening sacrifice in the temple.

It can hardly be doubted that so clear a description of Freemasonry in its ancient and original form, as is given in the eighth chapter of Ezekiel, would have been triumphantly cited as a constant support of the claim that Masonry is founded on the Bible, if it had not been marred for that use by such phrases as "great abominations," "greater abominations," and "wicked abominations." The last verse of the chapter must also be allowed as part of the objection.

Without these, this chapter would have gone far to prove what the entire biblical history of the temple seems signally to fail of proving, that Masonry is, in a truly Masonic sense, founded on the Bible. In this chapter, as nowhere in the history of Solomon, we find it undeniably in the sanctuary.

There is also one chapter in the New Testament that I find strongly associated in my mind with the phrase "founded on the Bible." The Grand Master of the lodge below, having succeeded in initiating Solomon, the wisest king of Israel, into the lodges of the Moabites, Edomites, Zidonians and other odd fellows of the same kind, ventured upon trying to draw into the fraternity one "greater than Solomon." He made the regular Masonic claim of ownership of the earth with its glory, and the usual Masonic offer of its possession upon worshipping the most "worshipful" lodge master.

There were three stations, the wilderness, the pinnacle of the temple at Jerusalem, and the high mountain. They may have stood east, south and west. The candidate would kneel, and, upon his refusal, the master of the lodge abandoned the attempted initiation. What would have appeared further on we cannot tell; but the ritual had already included a quotation from the ninety-first Psalm. It was also performed, in part, in the holy city and the temple.

In a manner truly Masonic, therefore, the temptation of our Lord was founded on the Bible.

PICKAXE.

MASONRY IN THE COURT ROOM.

The fact that liquor men are almost always members of the Masonic fraternity, are often "high up" in the order, and make use of their Masonic relations to gain favors from the law which they might not otherwise obtain, was strikingly illustrated in Philadelphia recently. We quote from the Public Ledger and Daily Transcript of that city:

"Judge Arnold, Grand Master of the Masonic fraternity in Pennsylvania, sitting with Judges Biddle and Hare in the license court yesterday, took cognizance of what any sharp-eyed observer might have noticed since the beginning of the court. In the large number of new applicants that daily appear to ask a license, a large proportion of them have conspicuously displayed Masonic marks ranging in dignity from the crescent and star of Lu Lu Temple, the cross and crown of the Knights Templars, down to the common square and compass of the Master. Yesterday Charles Koehler, applying for 1731 Germantown avenue, appeared before the bar of the court to ask for a license. His right hand nervously fingered a Masonic mark of one of the higher degrees, flashing it full in the face of Judge Arnold."

But to his credit the Judge was one of those men occasionally found in the Masonic lodge, who are too loyal to truth and honor to heed such appeals. The Ledger goes on to say:

"Koehler's attorney, Emanuel Furth, was making an explanation of the applicant's objects, and was about handing up letters from the Mayor of Reading and the president judge of the license court of Berks county, when Judge Arnold abruptly broke in with—'That man is unfit to have a license. I have been noticing such things all day. It is most disgusting. Call the next case.'"

The above, clipped from a secular paper of high standing and wide circulation, ought to prove to the satisfaction of every thinking person that Masonry is a powerful influence in our courts of law. Would there have been the ostentatious display of Masonic badges on the part of these saloonists if they had not had good reason to expect peculiar favors thereby?

We trow not.

And now here is the celebrated Dr. Graves' case. Mrs. Barnaby, a wealthy and estimable lady of Providence, R. I., was murdered while travelling in the West, by a bottle of poisoned whisky sent her through the mail from Boston. A lady friend who was with her at the time narrowly escaped the same fate. Dr. Graves was convicted on overwhelming evidence as the sender of the poisoned flask. But on ridiculous grounds a new trial was granted, which is set for May 22d. Meanwhile Dr. Graves is practically free, and has received the $25,000 left him by his victim. It is more than doubtful whether he will ever be called upon to go through with the farce of another trial, as Mrs. Barnaby's son-in-law, Mr. Conrad, after losing $30,000 in a vain attempt to bring him to justice, refuses to spend any more on the case, and the Colorado authorities say they have not the money to expend in summoning witnesses from the East. But it is evident that the defence has not lacked for "filthy lucre". Where did it come from?

Now notice the peculiar features in the case. Dr. Graves is a Mason, and months before his conviction it was confidently asserted in the papers that he would go free. Graves himself seemed to have the most perfect confidence that he would be cleared, and has been all through his trial, "serene," "hopeful," and "cheerful," to quote the newspaper reports.

Now take the opposite course pursued towards Lizzie Borden of Fall River, who, being a woman, is consequently not a Mason, privileged to give "the grand hailing sign of distress". She was refused bail—a favor granted to Dr. Graves—and for eight months has been kept in close confinement, waiting her trial for a crime that there is no reasonable evidence she ever committed. Why this gross partiality where there should be even-handed justice, knowing neither class nor sex?

We hope that this brief resume of notorious facts will set all white ribboners and workers for woman suffrage to thinking. Remember that when the law discriminates in favor of one class, it means that other classes, and especially women, who, not having the ballot, are at double disadvantage, must suffer injustice in exact proportion.—Home Light.

CONCLUSIONS OF AN EX-MASON OF HIGH DEGREE.

Friends have often asked me to state my conclusions on the subject of secret orders. Briefly, then, I sum up the following points:

1. In the grand brotherhood established through Jesus Christ, all men are admitted on equal terms. Now, while many are unworthy of so great an honor, yet the vast multitude of good men are there; the ones of whom we speak with pride, and love because of their personal attainments; those whom we reverence for their learning and piety; those whom we admire for their eloquence and wit—in fact all whom we love to know, and to be known of whom is an honor, are there in the fraternal order of our blessed Saviour.

On the other hand, the secret-order members claim fraternity in the lodge room with men whom they would never allow in their own homes; habitual drinkers, and many of them; common gamblers very often; felons who are at large through the lodge's improperly applied influence; men who are unable to speak without the emphasis (?) of profanity; and men whom all know to be living in open violation of the laws of their State, and who, without the patronage of their brethren, would be compelled to quit their illegal occupations. It is true they also claim the fellowship of a few reputable men, ministers of loose denominations, etc.; but if you attend lodge as regularly as I have attended it, you will very seldom find the more reputable members present, because the best among them have realized their folly; and, while they have not enough manhood publicly to renounce the lodge, they yet stay away to preserve some measure of self-respect. I have met all the disreputable classes named above in our lodge room repeatedly. The fact needs no proof that Sunday newspaper editors and owners, druggists who sell cigars and soda water on the Sabbath, theatrical managers who run their places on the same day, saloon-keepers who are known to sell on the Sabbath and to minors at the back doors, and many others of kindred character, are among the most regular attendants at lodge meetings.

2. Any man who would sign a contract without reading it first, would be proclaimed a fool by all; yet every man who unites with any oath or "on-honor" bound association is guilty of this very folly when he takes the obligation, or is pledged "on his sacred honor," before he is ushered into the mysteries (?) (thank God they are mysteries no longer) of the order. Yet I can say in his favor that had he first read and then signed, his folly would have been sublime indeed. Lodges would not be so powerful to-day if men were allowed to read the obligation first; for common sense and common decency would soon conquer curiosity, at once the greatest blessing and the greatest curse of all mankind.

3. Secret orders beguile men into believing that they provide a better guide and rule of life than the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. While God, or more properly a Supreme Creator, not the Supreme Creator, is acknowledged by most secret orders, yet our God, and especially our Christ, is disowned by all of them (with the exception of one young patriotic order which owns allegiance to our God), so that a man joining such an order thereby places himself on record as opposed to Christianity. I am convinced that any man who openly denies Christianity without furnishing a better rule of life and conduct, is a dangerous person to allow at liberty, especially among children.

4. Many men accept all the foregoing conclusions, and still join a secret order, because, they say, it will aid them in their business. Such a man is the worst of all, because he takes the step not through ignorance, or for alleged principle, but in order to gain money at the expense of his manhood, thus placing himself on a level with the unscrupulous money-getter who may even be a thief, a confidence-man, or the editor of a Sunday newspaper who barter his very soul for gold.

5. The man is worse than a fool, who, knowing all this, still remains in his lodge, and spends his evenings and his money among such men, instead of spending them with and for his wife and family, who, no doubt, would far rather have him stay home as a dignified gentleman, than to see him as a "brother," dressed like an Italian monkey, when some Free and Accepted Right Worshipful Master Scallawag is honored by a street parade.—A. F., in the Political Dissenter.

THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH.

A tall, handsome man was about to enter the Jim Crow car, when the brakeman stopped him with: "That is for colored people, sir. Next car for white gentlemen."

He stopped, smiled either at his own blunder or somebody else's mistake, thanked the brakeman and entered the car for white gentlemen. He had a fine face, which was improved by a Van Dyke beard of a reddish tinge. His hair was light and he looked the true type of the Southern aristocracy, one belonging to the best blood of the cavaliers, born to rule. He might be a college professor, a lawyer, or a literary man. He was the handsomest man in the car, and many of the ladies took a second look to make sure they made no mistake in pronouncing him such when he entered.

I wanted to meet a true born Southern gentleman, one born to ease and luxury, surrounded by refining influences all his life, and I made the excuse by asking a share of his seat. There was an instant flash of surprise at my request, followed immediately by a smile as he removed his traveling bag and made room for me at his side.

The weather opened the way for a conversation and an editorial in a Southern paper I had in my hand offered the excuse to sound this Southern gentleman on the question I wished to hear him discuss. It was an editorial in favor of a separate car law controlling street car management, and in this article was the assertion that the black Negro who stolidly held his seat when ladies entered could be tolerated, though he might be ragged and dirty, but the saddle-colored Negro who imitated the whites and politely offered his place to a lady was intolerable, because for the moment he compelled her to make some acknowledgment of his courtesy and recognize him as she would a gentleman.

"That seems extreme ground to a Northern man," I remarked, calling his attention to the article.

"It is," he replied. "But that is the tender spot with Southern people. The South justified slavery on the ground that the Negro was unfitted for anything but slavery. The Negro was not a man or woman. Not even the offspring of a slave could be better except to be taken for house servants instead of being sent to the field. There were some parts of the old South, this city we have just left, for instance, where no Southern family could move in the best society unless they had a saddle-colored coachman and saddle-colored slaves about the house. These servants learned the ways of polite society to a certain extent, and their masters were proud of them for their accomplishments. But they were slaves and no question was raised about their inferiority to the race they served.

"Some of the best strains of blood in the South coursed the veins of these saddle-colored slaves, but that was no stigma upon their masters. They took pride in having handsome slaves as they took pride in owning handsome horses with good blood. They liked blooded stock, whether they belonged to the human or the brute kind. But people never forgive their own folly or wrongs against others. We find these saddle-colored Negroes and some much lighter than the saddle color were more objectionable to the whites than the black men because the line of distinction was not so pronounced. It was something like the objection to putting servants in swallow-tailed coats like the guests. They were liable to be mistaken for gentlemen instead of niggers. This is the tender point with the Southern people. They dislike to have you Northern people make mistakes."

"But you draw no line where the white Negro ceases to be a Negro?"

"No. The descendants of slaves are all Negroes. They may be full-blooded black men, or have only one-sixteenth or one thirty-second of Negro blood, but they are Negroes. They come from a race of slaves, and our Southern people can recognize no man as a gentleman whose ancestry dates from slavery. They are Negroes, their children will be Negroes, and so will their grandchildren and their great-grandchildren. There is no escape for them should they become as fair as you or I."

"But there are so many of these saddle-colored Negroes in the South, is there not a possibility that barring out such blood as is almost as pure as that of the best whites will make them the predominant race in time?"

"There is that possibility and probability, but the coming generation must settle that question. Many of these lighter-colored Negroes have purer blood, as measured by the old aristocracy, than nine-tenths of the whites in the South. They are like the blooded race-horses—condemned to the plow because one place is lost in the pedigree. His blood will be found in his spirit and he will be found too highstrung for such drudgery. The white Negro is educating himself, pushing himself forward and determined to be recognized. He is recognized as a leader by the blacks. By classing them all together in the South is giving that class the majority, or will in a few years. It might become the Populist race, holding all shades of color, all strains of blood and all grades of talented energy, from the college professor and lawyer to the cotton-picker and ploughman.

"It might accumulate property and divide the wealth and the business with the old aristocracy so as to leave the latter in the minority with only its claim of blood to make it superior, and not even able to back up that claim with proof from the ancestral tree. Then might come an embarrassment equal to that of the New York society people, who found butchers, and manufacturers, and small tradesmen in Chicago. The millionaires are now in Chicago, and they are recognized, because commercial interests move the world and even guard the gates of society."

A number of others in the car had become interested in the conversation, and were delighted with the broad-minded Southerner, who was able to bury his prejudices and look at this question in a philosophical way. He was a illustration of the growth of the new South, and was a product of Henry W. Grady's teaching. His quiet manner, fair views, and consideration for the Negro showed that the whites of the South can be left to take care of this question without the intermeddling of the radicals of the North.

The train pulled into the "cradle of the Confederacy," and just as we were beginning to draw out of the young Southerner as to the place Jefferson Davis would eventually take in history, half a dozen passengers came in, took their seats, looked about, and then one of them went out to speak to the conductor. That official came in, leaned over, and spoke quietly to the gentleman by my side.

"You have made a mistake, sir. The first car in front is for colored passengers."

"Thank you for setting me right. I started to enter that car when I took the train, but your brakeman directed me to enter here."

Then turning to those who had been conversing with him, he said without a trace of bitterness in his voice:

"You see how easy it is to be mistaken in the South, and why such papers as the New Orleans Times-Democrat complain more of the 'saddle-colored nigger,' who acts like a gentleman, than of the black Negro whom nobody will mistake for anything else. I am a 'saddle-colored nigger,' and you have mistaken me for a gentleman. It will be necessary for people to carry the family record with them when they travel, after awhile. The separate car law is embarrassing to railroad conductors. The gentleman over there recognized me as the son of a woman who was born in slavery; and he also knows that my father was once the governor of this State, and that no name stood higher in the old South. This little interruption has possibly been embarrassing to you. If so, I regret it. Good day."

And he walked out of the car, still a handsome, proud man, but a Negro.—Plainedealer.

GOOD WORDS FROM LABOR LEADERS.

"Let no workingman say he will disobey the law or the command of the court. That would be anarchy; it would be setting a bad example; for a few years from now, when the people are in power, the monopolists would point to it as a precedent to follow. Obey the law at all hazards, even though it is a bad law—a law that is a disgrace to an enlightened people; but go to work at once to change the law. The only way out of the difficulty, the only patriotic action to take is to condemn the railroads, under the right of eminent domain, and place them under the control, ownership and direct management of the government."—T. V. Powderly, on the Toledo Decision.

"I am in favor of any movement looking to the abolishment of all Sunday labor other than works of mercy and necessity. It has been repeatedly demonstrated beyond a question or a doubt that all Sunday traffic upon railways can be dispensed with without any detriment or injury to the interests of the railway companies. Had I the authority, I would not allow a wheel to be turned between 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Sunday night."—Chief P. M. Arthur, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

A LUTHERAN ODD-FELLOW.

The Lutheran World, in some respects an excellent journal, reports without comment the following: "Rev. J. C. Kauffman was recently appointed Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Ohio of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. He will officiate at the next annual meeting, May 16-18, at Put-in-Bay. Bro. Kauffman addressed the fraternity (Tuscarawas county) of this same order on Wednesday, April 20th, at New Philadelphia, O. On the 30th of April he addressed the patriotic societies of Wadsworth in his church at the celebration of the 104th anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington, from the text: 'Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he has chosen for his own inheritance'." This Kauffman is a member of the East Ohio Synod in connection with the General Synod. That he is in good standing is evident from the fact that he is one of the representatives of this synod for the coming convention of the General Synod in Canton, O. What a conscience such a man must have! One day he proclaims from the pulpit salvation through Christ the Saviour of men; the next day (or rather night) he is intimately and officially and religiously united with those who would to-day, as did those of old, spit the Saviour in the face, smite him with their hands and drive those cruel nails through his hands. If this man does not make himself partaker of other men's sins, if he is not guilty of crucifying the Son of man afresh, then do we fail to comprehend what the Scriptures mean when they speak of these things. To have such men in the General Synod does not indicate that all is well in that body.—Lutheran Standard.

HOW THE DAYS FOLLOW EACH OTHER AROUND THE WORLD.

The maritime powers of the world have agreed to make London the time-centre, and the 180th degree of longitude from London (or Greenwich) as the point where the day changes. This meridian, therefore, leads the day. Its passage under the 180th, or midnight, celestial meridian marks the beginning of a new day for the earth; hence to-day becomes to-morrow. We have a new date for the month, and a new day for the week in the transition.

It is here, then, that Sabbath was born just to the west of Honolulu; but bear in mind that the day travels westward; therefore this new-born day does not visit Honolulu until it has made the circuit of the globe. Honolulu and New Zealand are only about 30 degrees apart in longitude, but they are a whole day apart as regards any particular day, because the point at which the day changes lies between them. Sabbath born on the 180th meridian is a long way off from Honolulu. It is morning there, too, but it is Saturday morning, while in New Zealand it is not yet day, but the Sabbath dawn is breaking. It is clear, then, that if it is Friday (near midnight) at Honolulu to the east of the line, and Sabbath (near 1 A. M.) to the west of it, a ship which sails from Honolulu to New Zealand, or from east to west, must sail out of Friday into Sabbath, and thereby skip the intervening Saturday, and gains a day; and vice versa, a ship which sails from New Zealand, where Sabbath has begun, to Honolulu, where Friday has just ended and Saturday begun, or, from west to east, must lose a day.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

LIGHT NEEDED.

"My people perish for want of knowledge."—Bible.

God's own "people perish for want of knowledge" imparted by the preacher in handling the Word of God, and applying the truth to every type of character. Character is spotted by the world, or made better, according to the company we keep. And whenever the minister is silent in the pulpit in regard to the associations of men, then there are those who "perish for want of knowledge."

Nothing exists that affects society in this or any other age, that the Bible does not approve or condemn. The glory-gilded "book of books" gives a light to every age.

Ministers are not slow or unpopular in condemning sin by the wholesale, and many vital doctrines are well-understood. But the sins of lodgery are not itemized in popular evangelization. Truth that would produce knowledge in regard to secret societies is neglected by some and ignored by others. The secrecy question is ignored as is no other subject, and if any "perish for want of knowledge," it is because they do not get the truth in regard to that which seeks "darkness rather than light." We know that God is true, and that many "perish for want of knowledge," and it must be caused by ignoring portions of truth in regard to sin. If we find out the subjects ignored, we have partly discovered the knowledge for which many perish.

"Cry aloud and spare not," by the grace of God, which is the right remedy. Silence in regard to sin for peace is the devil's quack medicine (poison.) Jesus is the great physician; if we trust him fully, we shall be shielded and armed against all sin.—Cyrus Smith in the Free Press.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A curious find—A sensible law—"Bricks without straw"—Colored Odd-fellows—Other matters—Sunday Closing of the World's Fair.

The idea that there is gold quartz among our New England hills starts up occasionally and causes a sporadic outburst of the "gold fever," as well as a little amateur "prospecting" which has so far yielded but small results. The other day a man in Connecticut, while so engaged, found—not the gold he was seeking for, but a marble statuette of Mother Eve nursing the serpent, which must have been buried under Old Ball Mountain for many years. The question is, Who buried it there? and why? Especially at a period when fine foreign works of art, as this is said to be, were so rare in New England. Buried gold is not so uncommon a find as buried pieces of sculpture. Hawthorne might, were he living now, have woven one of his weird romances about it and given us something quite equal to the "Marble Faun," in a Yankee setting.

A very sensible law, only it does not go quite far enough, has recently been enacted by the "Nutmeg State," that requires a physician, whenever so requested, to write out his prescription in plain English instead of the barbarous Latin now in vogue. It is a relic of the Dark Ages, like the curious way of making out leases for ninety-nine instead of a full hundred years—a practice for which no one can give any other reason except that it is founded on ancient English law. The present method of writing out medical prescriptions gives an opportunity for making mistakes when putting them up, and ought not to be endured longer by a civilized people. We Protestants long ago gave up the senseless practice of prayers in an unknown tongue; now let there be a general call for medical prescriptions written in the language of the common people, so that whether our doctor orders a blue pill or a tonic, we may at least have some idea what we are taking.

It may seem a pity, at first thought, that so many columns of statistics, and sound argument against tobacco, drink and the lodge, should never be read by the ones who most need them. "Why waste so much printers' ink on people already converted?" many a one ignorantly asks, without stopping to consider that all this is so much ammunition for reformers, and, consequently, is not wasted. Here is an item that Cynosure readers may find useful in waging their warfare against the Ugly Giant. The strike of the women cigar-makers recently developed the fact that they are required, as were the Hebrews in Egypt, to make bricks without straw. Given inferior tobacco, and little of it, they are forced to supply the "straw" with any material they can find, from tow and bits of wood to human hair. And these are the "fine imported" cigars!

"We have no patience with editors or other people who class the members of the Manchester Union and colored Odd-fellows with our own members in order to swell the numbers above other fraternal organizations." So remarks an I. O. O. F. writer in a leading New England paper. He further says: "American Odd-fellowship is old enough and strong enough to stand alone, without the fictitious support of the Manchester Unity and colored American Odd-fellows. We don't need such support." This is the organization that makes so much of "brotherly love," and whose practice in this regard we so often hear contrasted with that of the Christian Church to the decided disparagement of the latter. But what would even Odd-fellows themselves say to a Christianity which rejected a man for the color of his skin, or of any ecclesiastical denomination which refused to have colored members reckoned in its census?

It is said that Colorado is going to cover the dome of her State capitol with silver two inches thick, which will make our "gilded dome" at the Hub sink into nothing in comparison. But "won't it tarnish?" is the first thought that crosses a woman's brain, especially if she has had some experience with her grandmother's silver teaspoons, bought when nobody knew anything about "plated ware." I suppose they will have some way of keeping it bright less troublesome than going over it every six months or so with silver polish, and we Yankee housekeepers would be glad of the recipe. Speaking about teaspoons, the present ridiculous dictum of tea-table etiquette, that every thing must be eaten with a fork, from peas to ice-cream, is an absurdity that all sensible people should rebel against. I do not know of any proceeding calculated to make one look or feel more foolish than chasing a pea around one's plate for five minutes before finally capturing it. Dame Fashion is a tyrant, but her yoke is, after all, a very easy one to slip from under. It only needs a dash of wholesome self-assertion, coupled with a fine sense of discrimination between the essentials and non-essentials, and a sublime disregard of Mrs. Grundy.

The papers which have published with such minuteness of detail all the circumstances attending the last hours of Almy, the New Hampshire murderer, ought to be held responsible for the possible result on morbid minds. Almy was a man of good family, who seems to have been born with a depraved nature, but there was a spirit of revenge shown at his execution, especially in the rather unusual circumstance of the relatives of the murdered girl attending it, which took away from its judicial dignity, and cannot fail to give an added force to the arguments of those who favor the abolition of capital punishment. This is now being agitated in the Massachusetts Legislature; but it strikes me that if our law-givers would turn their attention to abolishing the chief causes of homicide, liquor and vile literature, it would be more to the purpose.

In one week Worcester, under no license, had only 22 arrests; under license, 144. And yet people who ought to know better are continually telling us that more liquor is sold under a prohibitory law.

Boston Chinamen are much agitated over the Geary law. Congress, when it passed that ridiculous measure, did not, like the immortal Sam Patch, look before it leaped. To deport the Chinese back to their own country will take at least a cool ten million out of Uncle Sam's pocket, to say nothing of serious results to our missionaries from retaliation measures on the part of China.

The Christian people of New England have never taken a deeper interest in any religious question than this, of closing the Columbian Exposition on Sunday; and, unfortunate as it may seem that there should be such a strife at its very beginning on a point that the managers by all considerations of honor ought to consider definitely settled by Congress, good is coming from it in more ways than one. These great issues are forging a bond of union between the Christians of America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and giving us something to do and think of besides mending up our tottering denominational fences, and splitting hairs over theological subtleties.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1893.

One of the most important international decisions ever made by the United States Supreme Court, particularly to the foreign missionary interests of the Christian churches of the United States, was that handed down by the court on Monday of this week, affirming the constitutionality of the Geary Chinese Exclusion act, and there is no question about its having been contrary to what was expected by a majority of those who had interested themselves in the case, including some of those who voted in Congress to make it a law. It is regarded as unfortunate that the court was not unanimously in favor of the decision. The dissenters were Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Brewer and Field. Justice Harlan being absent, a motion was made by the attorneys for the Chinese for a rehearing of the case before a full bench at the next term, but it was denied by a vote of five to three, the same as that upon the decision. So the Geary act stands as unimpeachable law,—that is, unimpeachable except by act of Congress repealing it or portions of it.

Those in a position to be best informed as to the intentions of the Chinese Government assert most emphatically that if the unregistered Chinese now in the United States (and considerably more than nine-tenths of them are unregistered) shall be forcibly deported, the Chinese government will retaliate by compelling every American residing in China to leave that country. It is estimated that at least $6,000,000 will be required to pay the expense of deporting all of the Chinese who failed to register within the specified time, and there is at this time less than $20,000 available for that purpose. The subject was discussed at a Cabinet meeting yesterday, and, although no official announcement was made as to the policy of the administration in enforcing the law, it is believed that a conservative course will be followed until the matter can again get before Congress, on the proposition to appropriate the money needed to carry the law into effect, and that few, if any, arrests will be made until Congress shall have acted.

Everything is in readiness for the meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly to-morrow, and most of the delegates are in town. It is expected that the session, which will probably last ten days or two weeks, will be unusually interesting, not only to Presbyterians, but to the general public.

The Attorney General has rendered an opinion to the effect that the law will not permit the opening on Sunday of the branch postoffice which is one of the government exhibits at the World's Fair. This opinion applies to all of the government exhibits. President Cleveland and all of the members of the Cabinet are receiving requests from every section asking them to take some action to prevent the proposed opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, but they have as yet decided upon nothing.

Here are some saloon statistics, just completed by the Census Bureau: 257 cities, with a total population of 15,316,167, have 61,336 saloons—an average, within a fraction, of one to every 250 persons. San Francisco has one saloon to every 103 persons; Buffalo, one to every 128; Philadelphia, one to every 870, and Pittsburgh one to every 2,460.

Hon. Charles Lyman, president of the civil service commission, delivered an interesting address on temperance, Sunday evening. Among other important statements, he said: "Two thousand millions of dollars a year is the sum expended in this country for drink. Were the country to be taxed by the government for any purpose for that amount the people would declare they were terribly tax-ridden. This is more than a tax; it is a waste—thrown away. It is a moral waste. I have no right to waste anything that comes into my possession, be it property or money. I am bound morally to use it for a good purpose. Nobody has ever succeeded in proving that beer benefits the system. The most intelligent physicians have stated that it is not good for medicine; therefore, money expended for it is absolute waste."

At the annual meeting of the Epworth League of the District of Columbia Rev. Hugh Johnson, the new pastor of the Metropolitan church, stated that the League now has 6,000 members, and that it was the greatest army of organized church workers among young people in the world.

Col. Bain, of Kentucky, the widely-known temperance orator, made a characteristic speech to a large meeting held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Sunday afternoon. He was particularly severe upon Congress for having failed to appoint a commission to investigate the liquor traffic. He expressed regret that drinking had been made respectable in the capital city, by wealth and influence and the example of state dinners, and closed with these words: "Not a mule that pulls a cart, a dog that watches a hen-coop, a snake that crawls in the grass, but better fulfills the purpose of God than the man who gets drunk."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 12, 1893.

I write after a pleasant meeting with the Swedish Congregationalist church in Hartford, a call on Aunt Catherine Dunning at her home, where she has so long and faithfully contended for the truth, and a conference with Bro. John C. Collins, who hopes to know more of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's methods after the Christian workers' conference, Nov. 9 to 16 next, in Atlanta, Ga. I am indebted to Bro. Collins for a number of practical suggestions, of which I propose to give our special work the benefit.

I had a respectful hearing, last evening, in the Swedish Lutheran church in this city, and am to remain for a second service this evening.

The orders are said to be very numerous and prosperous here, with very few to oppose their work. Scarcely enough remain free men and women to say "We, the people"; but, instead, it is, "We, the orders that control elections and run city affairs. We, the orders, muzzle the pulpits and the press, setting up and putting down whom we will."

The particular species of the hawk tribe most popular are "Knights of the Golden Eagle". I am stopping with one of these noted "birds of prey," whom I have been trying to induce to give up his cards and spend his leisure in reading the Bible. The wife spreads her motherly wings officially over the tender fledglings of "The Ladies of the Golden Eagle" and seems to possess all the instinctive fondness of the mother bird for her hopeful progeny. These strange feathered fowl seem to have departed from the ordinary law of their kind, for the female is not allowed to share the eyrie with the king of the tribe. She is, however, provided with a side rookery, to which the royal bird has free access. I suggested that the arrangement was hardly gallant on the part of the males, or fair for the female Eagles, but was assured that it was entirely proper, for the ladies would not be interested in seeing the gentlemen "ride the goat and climb the soaped pole". I venture a second suggestion: That such an occupation might do for monkeys and baboons, but to me it hardly seemed becoming among civilized, intelligent men. It seems strange that people as intelligent as my host and hostess should be so enamored of the gaudy show and empty titles of the lodge, and so blinded by the god of this world as to fail to comprehend the shameful and ridiculous character of the whole rookery knight owl business. But so it is.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 18, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—During the past week I have been enabled to advance the cause in this field somewhat, though hindered by protracted rain.

Last Friday was spent very pleasantly with friends at Utica, Ohio. The support of our friends there is as constant as the revolution of the season. Bro. Caleb Lyon, whose contributions in other years have been so generous, again expressed his purpose to aid what he could, and subscribed for twenty copies of our paper, to be sent to Y. M. C. A. reading-rooms. Though having passed the four-score mile-stone by more than a year, he still labors with accustomed vigor on the farm where he has passed so many happy years. Rev. Mr. Thompson, of the Covenant church, in pledging his support to our work for another year, spoke of having watched our progress with interest. He was satisfied that contributions placed in our hands were wisely expended in furtherance of the cause.

None of our officers and agents receive large salaries, each being willing to sacrifice for the good of the cause they hold dear. No matter how good the cause, if contributions are unwisely expended, the contributor would have little heart to continue. The N. C. A. books are always open, and those aiding us are invited to investigate.

A W. C. T. U. reading-room and library is talked of for Utica. Should this be arranged, our friends are willing to provide anti-secrecy books. One of the N. C. A. libraries might do much good there, as they have done elsewhere.

I reached Eighty-four, Washington county, Pa., on Saturday afternoon and proceeded in the rain to the country parsonage of the Pidgeon Creek U. P. church. Here I was met at the door by the pastor, Rev. C. W. Comin, who extended the right hand of fellowship, as our Methodist brethren would say. I received a warmer welcome than I would had I been a Mason and relied upon the grip. As a traveler for about ten years, I can recommend a Christian spirit as being worth more in obtaining help while traveling than all the winks, tips and signs that the devil ever invented. Two services were arranged for me on Sabbath, and a lecture for Monday evening. Considering the weather, roads, and general surroundings, they were all well-attended. Several Cynosure subscriptions were added to our list, and the collection indicated a willingness to help. The Junior Order of American Mechanics had succeeded in getting some of the young men of this church to join them, led them into the woods and set them to dancing. The session had found it its duty to exercise discipline in the expulsion of some unrepentant ones. It is hoped that as these young men grow older, they will see the folly of continuing with this dancing concern, and again return to their first love. Would that every Christian church was as prompt and loyal to truth in the exercise of its discipline!

In compliance with the request of Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania, has appointed a delegate to meet with delegates from other States in Chicago, June 5th and 6th, prox., to consider unlawful coal and other combinations that oppress the people. It is hoped this meeting may suggest measures that will suppress these combinations. Mr. J. B. Corey, of Braddock, has been appointed by the governor as the delegate from this State.

Bro. Corey is a member of the State Executive Committee for the furtherance of our cause in this State. A meeting of that committee is called for 2 o'clock on Wednesday, May 24th, to assemble in Mr. C.'s office, 95 Fifth Ave., Pittsburgh. It is hoped at this meeting to devise ways and means for the furtherance of our work in the State.

Through the kindness and energy of Mr. Jas. Tibby, of Sharpsburg, the Y. M. C. A. hall has been secured for your agent to lecture in on Thursday evening, May 25th. As this meeting is arranged with no little expense and effort, it is hoped that much good may result.

My movements for some days to come will be affected by the condition of the weather. Any writing will reach me by addressing it to general delivery, Pittsburgh postoffice.

WORK ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

CANBY, Ore., May 13, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have good reason to take courage. The Lord is preparing the way for success in the reform work on this coast.

My late acquaintance with Rev. P. B. Williams is satisfactory proof that the Lord has prepared for us the man we need. He has spoken for us several times on moral reform. He wields the sword of the Spirit with much ease and force and with beautiful application to the question under consideration. He has wisely sent forth some twenty-three appointments among the friends of the cause, who will wisely publish them for him.

We expect a large attendance at our convention, on the 15th of August, 1893. We would be very thankful if the National Christian Association would send us a good speaker to this convention. We cannot promise to pay the expenses of the delegate whom you may send, as we will have all we can do to pay the necessary liabilities otherwise incurred.

Most of the anti-secrecy people have very little to give. There are a few that can and will help on with this very important work after we get them wide awake to their duty. We really need financial aid now, very much. We need a cheap paper, but are not able to have it at present.

The secret lodges are more against the prosperity of the church than anything else. The money that supports the lodge would do a great and good work in educating the heathen and in giving them the truth of the Gospel of Christ.

The lodges are a great bar to the unity and Christian fellowship of the church. How is it possible for us to have true Christian fellowship for ministers and members who take the Masonic obligations, with those dreadful and unscriptural oaths and penalties of the many degrees that are taken by thousands of them? We may, with our loving hearts, make every effort to fellowship them, but it will be a failure, as fellowship cannot be forced.

Again, suppose the Masons themselves have no fellowship with God the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ; how is it possible for them to have Christian fellowship with each other? That they are friendly toward each other we do not doubt; but Christian fellowship is another thing.

If Freemasonry was a good institution, and in harmony with the Christian religion, how is it that the authorities of the orthodox churches generally refuse investigation? The General Conference of the M. E. church did positively refuse to investigate Freemasonry, at its last session. Anything that takes shelter in the darkness of secrecy, and claims to be good and benevolent, and refuses the light of investigation, lays a good foundation for suspicion that the hidden thing is not good; especially when an extrajudicial, profane oath has been taken to ever conceal and never reveal the things that have been concealed. This concealment must signify a desire for advantage; and, if real advantage, then those that are not members of the lodge must be losing something. Some one may say, Let those who are not Masons become Masons. Well, then, suppose that everybody were Masons; there would be no concealment nor secrecy nor advantage to be taken. In that case the Masons would have the lame, the halt, the blind, with the decrepit, to care for, as well as able-bodied men, and the women also; which would turn Masonry into a benevolent institution, and Freemasonry would be at an end; because it lives on selfishness and advantage. If Masons were bound to be charitable and benevolent, in a true and general way, it would kill them immediately.

S. MATHEW.

I. R. B. ARNOLD AMONG THE LUMBERMEN.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., May 15, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You will see by the enclosed photograph that the floating chapel is now among the sawmills at Evansville, Ind. Meetings are conducted every night by Bro. D. W. Rose, while I am lecturing and preaching in various parts of the city, giving especial attention to the colored people. Owing to continued high water, we have concluded to remain here till later before going South up the Tennessee river.

All who have good papers, magazines and books which they would like to have distributed among the freedmen, or among the cotton-mill or sawmill hands, may send them by freight to us at Evansville, Ind. I take this method of answering many inquiries.

Yours in Christ, I. R. B. ARNOLD.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

The N. C. A. Corresponding Secretary visited Marseilles, Ill., on Sabbath the 14th inst., and spoke morning and evening, setting forth the principles that distinguish our reform, to interested congregations. He was very cordially welcomed by Rev. A. Ethridge, pastor of the church, and others, among whom the name of Mrs. Wilson should be mentioned. The convictions of her revered father, Rev. N. Bingham, of Newark, Ill., are earnestly maintained by his daughter. Marseilles is quite a manufacturing center, beautifully located on the Illinois River, which furnishes a constant and valuable water-power. The church of which Bro. Ethridge is pastor is a felt power for righteousness in the community, and God has blessed their work.

—A daily paper, the Columbian, "the only official newspaper of the World's Columbian Exposition," is published regularly at the Fair grounds, under the editorial charge of Major Handy, Chief of the Department of Publicity and Promotion. It presents to its readers daily programs of all special entertainments, all official orders issued by chiefs of departments for the guidance of exhibitors, rates of transportation and other prices to be charged on the grounds, lists of officers and offices, the orders of the Director General, and official awards of premiums as made from time to time.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE SITUATION IN THE SOUTH."

CALVARY, Va., May, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your paper of May 11, there appears an article to which I must take exceptions. This is the second time within the short space that I have been taking your paper that your writers have attempted to misrepresent the real "situation in the South"; and it seems that I can hold my peace no longer. I believe that your correspondents are ignorant on these subjects, or that they wilfully misrepresent the facts. I was born and raised in North Carolina, and think that I have had, at least, some opportunity to know something of the real situation of the two races there.

I know that in my native State the Negro has the same privileges that the white man has. He can vote, hold office (if he can be elected to one), and his rights are protected by the laws of the State. The schools are separate, and the churches are mostly so. The Negroes have State schools, the same as the whites. Now what more do you want? Do you think that we ought to take him into our parlors, when we have company, and let him make love to and marry our daughters? If you think this, I wish to tell you, once for all time, that this cannot be. Do you do so up North? I venture to say no, believing that I will not be contradicted. Now, if you think that the Negro is so badly treated in the South, then please come down and take him up North and treat him better. We will divide up with you, and if you are not satisfied with part, you may have the whole.

How do you treat your white hired servants up North? Do you take them into your parlors when you have company? Again I venture to answer no. I have so been informed by good authority. Then do you wish us to treat the Negro better than you treat your white servants? I think it would be well for you to clean before your own doors, before you try to clean ours.

I wonder who informed Rev. S. F. Porter that the white bosses rule over the Negro with dagger and pistol? I have never seen the like in my life, and I simply disbelieve all such statements. I would simply ask Rev. Mr. Porter and all others to come and see for themselves before making such statements again. I think Mr. Porter should have gone farther South than Eastern Virginia to learn the condition of the people.

I believe that such pieces as you have published have a tendency to stir up the spirit of animosity, not only between the races in the South, but between North and South, of which no good can come. If we need a rebuke, then give it to us well; but "be sure you are right, and then go ahead."

I have been truly delighted with your opposition to the secret lodge, but when you have spoken so disrespectfully of the Southern people it has made me feel badly, and I have almost become disgusted with your paper.

(Mrs.) M. L. CARPENTER.

EXTRACTS FROM RECENT LETTERS.

DARLINGTON, Mo., May 12, 1893.

...I am much pleased with the Cynosure, and am so glad that amid the carnival of riot and revelry the N. C. A. and other elevating agencies are doing all they can to turn the tide in the right direction. The educational and reformatory forces are needed, if ever, and out of all may evolve great and lasting good, in some directions, at least. I trust that the (N. C. A.) exhibit during the six months will reach multitudes.

M. N. BUTLER.

CAMBRIDGEBORO, Pa., May 13, 1893.

I read an article in the Gospel News relative to the so called "social evil" in Chicago, in which it was estimated that between 40,000 and 50,000 new girls would be needed to run the business this year. Cannot the Christian people of this country do something to save these girls from eternal destruction? It seems to me that God will never prosper us if something is not done. I am an anti-secret man, and read the Cynosure every week, and very much enjoy it.

M. D. GRAY, M. D.

[The report referred to, we understand, was an exaggeration, and also, we believe, the white ribbon department of the W. C. T. U. is active in the prevention of this new evil.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

May 15, 1893.

My Cynosure of last week hasn't come to me. I begin to suspect foul play, as the same thing has happened several times within a year or two. It used to come often on Wednesday; regularly as soon as Thursday. Of late it gets here sometimes on Thursday, but often not until Saturday. A few times it has failed altogether. To-day I have been to the postoffice, and not getting it, spoke to the postmaster about it. He and his son both seemed agitated and confused. This is not the only paper which I think may have been kept back from me there, and so I begin to feel—well, you can imagine!—all the more because the postmaster and his assistant, his son, though Congregational church-members—the father a deacon—are warm advocates of Masonry and anti-prohibitionists.

[We shall keep track of this postmaster.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

"There is still a God to over-rule." The last general election was his handwriting on the wall, and we see the Republican party chastised, to make it do right, as he chastises those whom he loves. Moral reform, represented by the N. C. A., and the prohibition of the liquor-traffic, have the elements of success, and have 'come to stay.' The voters will get behind these reforms. 'History repeats itself.' The best political statesmen are in the Republican party. Let them adopt a platform less like that of the Democrats, embrace these reforms, and fight it out on that line, and victory is sure. The people want reform.

LITERATURE.

THE WONDERFUL LAW. By H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian. Boston: Published by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill. Paper, pp. 118. Price 20 cents.

This little volume is another of the many unanswerable arguments that have been produced to sustain the truth of the Bible. Not only does the history of the Jews undeniably support the reality of God's dealings with mankind as set forth in the Scriptures, but in connection with these "peculiar people," the chosen of God, we have, besides, the wonderful LAW which he proclaimed for their government under the Theocracy which he established. It is no argument against the majestic character of this law that Israel so frequently disobeyed it. The fault was theirs. So long as they respected and obeyed it, they were greatly blessed and prospered; but with their disobedience, in every instance, came sorrow and trouble. Never had any nation a better prospect for peace, longevity and success. Led by the Almighty power, owing no allegiance to any other, crowned with blessing, and living under a promise which God had sworn to fulfill through Abraham and his seed, they should have been the happiest of the happy. But they were not. The law was good, but their human nature did not comprehend its goodness; and they faltered, and sinned, and slaved, and mourned, through thousands of years, simply because they did not believe in God. When the Anointed Son of the Father came, to bless and not destroy, to give the law a new and better interpretation of man's duty towards God and his fellow man, it was the same. They rejected him and his teachings, and were cast out among all other nations, without a land and without a national name. But the law stands, and will stand; not one jot or tittle of it shall pass until the Lord's prophecies are fulfilled. Let us be thankful for this, and be careful lest we, too, come into condemnation for our national disobedience to this same wonderful law.

THE MEDLEY OF MEDLEYS. By Ray Rand. Chicago: T. B. Arnold, printer. Paper, pp. 96. Price, one dime.

The author of this outspoken book, which is issued under an assumed name, is one of our sterling reformers, and has been frequently sterling from, through the Cynosure, in the anti-secrecy work. A thoughtful patriot, he stands opposed to everything that arrays itself against the integrity of our American institutions, and his views and opinions in this direction form the staple of this "Medley," a title that does not convey an intelligent idea of its interest and value.

Its peculiar arrangement, large type and low price, are strong commendations in its favor. The chapter on Catholicism deserves a wide reading, as that subject just now touches our republic and its institutions very nearly—more nearly than many imagine. The false and worldly religions of the day also come in for a chapter of proper animadversion, as do some of the spurious "reforms" that show their hydra-heads, yet do not reform, or attempt to reform, the worst evils with which we have, as a people, to contend. Other chapters deal plainly with "Political Deflections," which are deceiving and weakening the masses who do not think for themselves, but are willing to be led to the polls by unscrupulous politicians; "A New Political Era," advocating some important governmental reforms in which every citizen should unite; "Some Humbugs," including the Roman Catholic war upon our public school system—a war which is carried on under a specious and suspicious love for religion and the republic—too thin a veil to humbug any except those who will not see the diabolism which it covers; "Bogus Americans"—an apt exposition of our natural love for man-worship and high-sounding titles, whether applied to lodge officers or jacks-in-office of any kind; "The American Republic"—its glory, and our bounden duty to maintain it in the spirit of patriotism with which our forefathers founded it for us. Not with an unkind hand does the author discover to us our foibles and danger, but in a manner to arouse us to a better knowledge of our condition and prospects, political and religious.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The editor of Home and Country apparently designs to produce a magazine for the American people, in which interesting and timely articles, replete with instruction and entertainment for the masses, and not high-sounding names, are to be the attractive features. The May number is especially gratifying in its contents and make-up, and under its recent new management, indicates progress in letter-press, illustration and financial success. Prominent among its contributions are the following papers: A Nation's Tribute, the Story of Memorial Day, illustrated; A Utopian Socialism, a Primitive Government without poverty, property, politics or religion, as found and investigated by M. Jules Cairn, and related by the editor; A Bundle of Famous Autograph Letters; Origin of the American Aborigines—Do the Indians Descend from the Jews? by Samuel Jaros; Madame Casario the Aeronaut; Taming and Training of Wild Animals, illustrated; with a number of stories and poems that will find interested readers. New York: 53 Tenth street. $2.50 a year.

PAMPHLETS.

We think our Cynosure friends will be especially interested in a 16-page pamphlet, entitled "Hinderances to the More Speedy Conversion of the World, an Address on Moral Reform," by Bishop H. J. Becker, D. D., of the (Radical) United Brethren Church, delivered at Canby, Oregon, December 8, 1892. This discourse was preached on the urgent invitation of Rev. S. Mathew, of the Methodist church of Canby, and reported by Rev. R. Loggan. It is founded on the passage in Acts 10:34, and is principally devoted to the evils of intemperance and secret societies. We consider it a sound document in the interest of general and special reform, both practically and spiritually. It can be obtained from Bishop H. J. Becker at Akron, Ohio, Rev. R. Loggan, or Rev. H. L. Barkley, at Woodburn, Oregon. Price: Single copy, 5 cents; seven copies to one address, 30 cents; thirty copies, or more, 3½ cents each, postage prepaid. An excellent extract from it will be found in the Temperance Department of this issue of the Cynosure.

The American Citizen Company, 7 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass., issue the following excellent reform literature:

"Romanism not Christianity" is written by Rev. J. Robert Love, a finely-educated Negro clergyman of the Anglican Church in Jamaica, West Indies. The author received a university education in the United States; travelled extensively in Europe and Asia, and stands very high in the estimation of those who know him. The book contains 250 pages.

"Rome and the Indians." Gen. T. J. Morgan, late Indian Commissioner, is the author. Some interesting revelations are made.

"The Letter of Pope Pius IX. to Jefferson Davis" is issued in form for framing.

"The Episcopal Bishops and Romanism," and "Eminent Unitarians Against Romanism," and "Eminent Congregationalists and Romanism," and "Eminent Methodists and Romanism," are the titles of four pamphlets just issued.

"Jesuitical Influences on the Public Press," by Prof. L. T. Townsend, is having an immense circulation, as is his other pamphlet, "Rome's Suppression of History in the Schools." Both these are published by the American Citizen Co.

The following pamphlets have been received from their authors:

"Our Republic: Its Free Schools and Institutions—Are They Christian?" Extracts from the note-books of J. B. Turner, Jacksonville, Ill. Printed for the author by the Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago. Pp. 32.

A new pamphlet just issued is Rev. J. M. Foster's three Music Hall lectures, "Romanism and the Remedy."

"Mortal Man" (a poem). By Arago Easton. Published by the Easton Co., Chicago.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

OBITUARY.

J. D. ANDERSON

was born in Perth, Scotland, in 1814, and died in Baltimore, Md., 1893. He came to America when twenty years of age. As a business man he was successful.

Having secured a competency, he has for years given away, it is supposed, as much as he made. Being much enlisted in the anti-slavery struggle, and interested since the war in the freedmen, he is known to have given large contributions, through the American and other boards, to aid this people. He was for nearly fifty years a member of the United Presbyterian church; for about forty years superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and treasurer. The missions of this church were constantly remembered in his contributions.

He never married.

The most of his property, it is thought (fifty thousand dollars), is given to the foreign mission work of the church of his choice.

The benevolent institutions of his city all lose a friend and supporter in his death.

The writer has not known him long; but our short acquaintance has been happy. I have never applied to him for aid in vain. He read the Cynosure with interest. His abhorrence for "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain" was marked. He was a man of few words. But his actions spoke louder than words.

The world will be better for his having lived. How many souls may be won for the Master by the missionaries which his generous contributions support, only eternity may reveal.

MASONIC.

The Chicago Masonic "Fraternal Congress" is to meet at Masonic Temple, city of Chicago, on Monday, August 14, 1893, at 10 o'clock A. M., where members will register and leave their city address. The Grand Master of Illinois will call the congress to order promptly at the above time and place. Not later than June 24th, he will appoint one delegate from each Grand Lodge jurisdiction, who will act as a committee on permanent organization. He will also appoint a committee on rules and a committee on credentials.

MASONIC CHARITY IN ARKANSAS.

Within the jurisdiction of every subordinate lodge in this State there is, doubtless, a Mason's widow in actual need of help, or a Mason's orphan child that should be fed, clothed, educated and rendered self-supporting and capable of filling an honorable place in the manhood or womanhood of our beloved State. If no helping hand is stretched out to them that widow may starve or be driven by the pangs of hunger to a life that is even worse than death itself; that brother's child may grow up in ignorance and poverty, and graduate only in sin and crime. We, above all men, are pledged to be our brother's keeper, and we least of all should shirk our solemn duty in this regard. All around us, in other jurisdictions, the craft are at labor. In more than half the States of the Union they have built and endowed, or are now engaged in building, homes for the widows and orphans of our brothers. What are we doing? We have nearly four hundred and fifty lodges and more than thirteen thousand able-bodied Masons in Arkansas, and yet our record is that within the last ten years we have supported and educated, and that principally by individual effort, one, only one— orphan child. During the same period our Grand Secretary's books show that we have spent about fifty thousand dollars in paying the expenses of the annual communication of this grand body. Just think of it, will you? Fifty thousand dollars or more spent to maintain the organization of a charitable body, and not a single dollar in the form of organized,

WITH YOUR HANDS TIED by some chronic "female complaint" or weakness, what can you expect? There's nothing you can accomplish—nothing you can enjoy. And no good reason for it. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure you, safely and certainly, if you'll give it faithful use.

For every one of these womanly troubles, this is the only remedy so sure that it can be guaranteed.

In periodical pains, bearing-down sensations, organic displacements, and every kindred ailment, and in all the nervous disorders caused by functional derangements—if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1893.

A PLEA FOR REFORM.

The Hartford (Conn.) Post is calling strenuously for reform, and in a long editorial sets forth a graphic description of the political condition of that State. The situation is peculiar. The cities have been greatly increasing in population and importance—wonderfully so in comparison with the towns. The legislature has been deteriorating in ability, and charges of corruption are not infrequent. Besides, it is unwieldy, being the largest legislative body, with one or two exceptions, in the United States, and nearly rivaling in membership the lower house of Congress. Business is delayed and unnecessary expense is entailed upon the citizens on this account. Intelligent and able young men have practically no chance to serve the State in a legislative capacity. These and other causes demand a change in the administration of affairs. Perhaps the most singular phase of the situation is the following:

"The legislative affairs of the State are to-day absolutely controlled by farmers. They outnumber the representatives of any other vocation ten to one. Nothing can be done without their consent. Farmers are usually cliquey, sometimes obstinate. Lately they have become selfish. They are likely to become more so in the future. They boast of their power.

"The Grange is a secret order. It is powerful. It assumes not to interfere in politics; but in reality if a man or men control the Grange—and some men can work subtly and conceal their real purposes—he or they will have little difficulty in being a mighty factor in legislation at the State House."

The Post lays down several propositions for reforming these evils. It calls for a commission "to cut down the present size of the House of Representatives, increase the Senate, and provide for the division of the entire State into election districts. Each town in the State should be represented in the General Assembly. No town not having at least five thousand inhabitants should be entitled to more than one representative," etc.

Perhaps the first important step to be taken by the people is to put down the Grange and reform the farmers. Where they frequent the lodge they will be "cliquey" and "obstinate". It is the nature of the oath-bound secret system of politics to be arrogant and persistent in its opposition to all other persons outside of their cliques.

Abolish them first, and the cleansing of the other Augean stables may more easily be accomplished; but what can honest, untrammelled citizens do in the face of such opposition, until it is squelched by the power of public opinion? What Connecticut needs is evidently a new declaration of independence, pledging "the lives, the fortunes and the sacred honor" of the people to free themselves from the evils that beset them.

"Who would be free, himself must strike the blow."

OUR CHINESE RELATIONS.

The Supreme Court of the United States has declared the Geary Chinese-exclusion law constitutional; in other words, the decision is to the effect that the act is within the power of Congress, as laid down in the Constitution and interpreted by the courts.

Eight of the nine justices sat in the case, Justice Harlan being absent. The court stood five for the act and three dissenting. The three dissenters were the venerable Justice Field, of California; Justice Brewer and Chief Justice Fuller. The dissenting opinion of Judge Brewer was long, and that of Judge Field was severe, not to say bitter. But it does not appear that either of the three denied the truth of the broad ground taken by the five judges who rendered the decision, namely:

The power of this nation to restrict or prohibit the immigration of any aliens into the country, or to require such aliens already in the country to remove therefrom, was a well-settled principle of international law, and was confirmed by an unbroken line of decisions in this court.

It was in the light of this fundamental view of the law that the court arrived at its decision, which removes the suspension of the law decreed by President Cleveland, and leaves the country in a very unpleasant attitude towards the empire of China.

Chief Justice Fuller, in dissenting from the decision of the court, said that he entertained no doubt that the provisions of the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the national Constitution were universal in their application, and that while the general government was invested, so far as foreign countries were concerned, with all the powers necessary to the maintenance of its absolute independence and security, it could not, in virtue of a supposed inherent sovereignty, absolutely deal with persons lawfully and peacefully within its domain. The act before the court was not an act to abrogate or repeal a treaty, nor to expel Chinamen lawfully here, and no such intent could be imputed to Congress. Its object was to prescribe a method of registration, and the deportation denounced by way of punishment was, in his view, an unusual punishment not authorized by the Constitution.

Attorney General Olney said until the line of action to be pursued by our government was mapped out he could say nothing on the subject, except that the department of justice had no money available for deporting Chinese. Conservative estimates place the amount necessary to deport the unregistered Chinese at $6,000,000, with only $16,806 available for the purpose. Intimations are heard that Congress may be convened to consider the matter. The suggestion is made in official circles that Chinese unregistered may now go the courts and ask to be allowed to register and remain in this country. In any view of the case Treasury officers expect to experience great difficulty in carrying out the mandate of the law that the Chinese must go.

Enough is known to make it certain that the government of the Empire will soon forward its opinion of the situation; until then the minister from China will take no action in the premises, and our government now indicates a corresponding intention of not enforcing the law until further developments are made.

The Chinese Vice-consul at San Francisco, Cal., is credited with saying: "I have nothing to say in regard to the immediate effect the final decision of the Supreme Court can have on the Chinese in America. It will be a great blow to business in Chinatown. As to what the Chinese government may do in the matter I have still less to say. The treaty between China and America has been broken by the government at Washington and is no longer a contract, and will not be regarded by the Chinese government as a factor in any action they may see fit to take."

In our Washington Letter, on page 4, will be found some additional particulars relating to this subject.

NO ADMITTANCE ON SUNDAY.

Contrary to all expectation, and in opposition to the predetermination of the World's Fair Directory, the gates of the Columbian Exposition were closed to visitors all day last Sunday. Their supplementary action, on Friday last, is embodied in the following:

WHEREAS, On May 12, 1893, this board adopted a rule to open the gates of the grounds of Jackson Park on Sundays at an admission charge of 25 cents, and

WHEREAS, On May 16 this board adopted, as empowered under section 7 of the act of Congress, a general rule to open the entire exhibition on Sundays at the admission price of 50 cents, and

WHEREAS, This rule last named has been duly certified to the World's Columbian Commission for such modification, if any, as that body may desire to make under the law, and

WHEREAS, Said commission has not yet reached definite action; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in order to avoid action that may anywhere be characterized as precipitate, the operation of the rule above referred to be suspended for one week, and that on Sunday, May 21, the gates be closed.

This, however, is but a temporary truce in the contest between those who honor the Christian Sabbath and those who would desecrate it by attending "the biggest show on earth" on that day. The National Commission, representing the nation, and to whom even the local Directory yields the question, has now thrown upon it the responsibility of disgracing the government that created its authority by disobeying the law of Congress, or of lifting up the legal standard of Sabbath observance, to the glory of God and the joy of his true followers.

There has been a remarkably healthy and powerful spirit manifested during the past week on the part of the Christian people of this land in relation to this question of Sunday opening. The threats of the Christian Endeavor societies, 1,500,000 strong, not to visit the Fair if its gates were opened on Sunday; the threatened withdrawal of prominent Baptist clergymen—Lawrence, Henson and Parker—from participation in even the World's Fair Auxiliary congresses, in case the directors' scheme was carried into effect; the united voices of thousands of other Christian denominations raised in solemn protest against this enormity; the stirring appeals to the Attorney General and President Cleveland to interfere with the majesty of supreme law—all these have made manifest the true spirit of Christianity; yea, they have done more to cement a Christian unity of sentiment among the various denominations than a hundred years of controversy between them could have accomplished.

AS FOOLISH AS WICKED.

Delegates from the great labor organizations assembled last Sunday, in this city, and discussed the feasibility of going to Jackson Park, if the World's Fair gates are closed to the public on next Sunday, tearing down the fences and forcing their way into the Exposition in defiance of law. They claimed the right to do this on the vague promise of a man who is now a World's Fair Director, that if the workingmen would contribute funds by purchasing Fair stock, the Exhibition should be opened on Sunday. The proceedings were anarchistic in the extreme, and the determination of those present was thus curtly expressed: "I propose"—the language is that of President James Linehan, of the Trade and Labor Assembly—"I propose that we say to the Fair authorities: 'We are willing to pay 50 cents each to get into the Exposition on Sundays, and if you do not let us in on those terms we will go in anyhow.' Let us name a day and hour when we will march to the grounds and tear down the fences, if our just demands are not acceded to."

The strong hand of the Federal Government, which created the Exposition, and the presence of Federal troops may be called upon to suppress this riotous demonstration; but it must be suppressed at all hazards. The aggressions of the oath-bound secret lodges must not become the law of the land.

MR. MOODY—NORTHFIELD—JUNE EXERCISES.

The summer program of meetings at Northfield, Mass. (the home of Mr. Moody), has been issued. The following occur in June:

Tuesday, June 6, "The Northfield" opens.

Friday, June 9, Allen Prize Declamation in Recitation Hall, Mt. Hermon, evening.

Saturday, June 10, Meeting of Northfield Seminary Board of Trustees at "The Northfield," afternoon. Alumni Prize Debate in Recitation Hall, Mt. Hermon, evening.

Sunday, June 11, Graduating Sermon to Mt. Hermon and Northfield Seminary senior classes, preached by Mr. D. L. Moody, at Northfield Trinitarian church, forenoon. Special services at Stone Hall and Mt. Hermon in afternoon and evening, also conducted by Mr. Moody.

Monday, June 12, Meeting of Mt. Hermon School Board of Trustees at "The Northfield," forenoon. Class Day Exercises at Mt. Hermon, afternoon. Meeting of the Students' Aid Society of Northfield Seminary at "The Northfield," afternoon. Concert at Stone Hall, given by Northfield Seminary and Mt. Hermon students, evening.

Tuesday, June 13, Commencement Exercises at Mt. Hermon, forenoon. Annual Business Meeting of Mt. Hermon Alumni at Mt. Hermon, afternoon. Annual Dinner of Mt. Hermon Alumni at Mt. Hermon, evening.

Wednesday, June 14, Commencement Exercises of Northfield Seminary in Stone Hall. Address by Rev. Tunis C. Hamlin, D.D., of Washington, D. C., forenoon.

Thursday, June 15, Annual Meeting of Northfield Seminary Alumnae at "The Northfield," evening.

Following these interesting exercises will be the Young Women's Conference, June 22 to 29. For these meetings the following speakers are expected: Mr. Robert E. Speer, New York City; James McConaughy, Mt. Hermon; Maj. D. W.

Whittle and Miss Mary Whittle, Northfield, Mass.; Miss Grace Dodge, New York City; Mrs. Bainbridge; Mrs. William Boyd, Kansas City, Mo.; Miss Elizabeth Wilson, Chicago, International Y. W. C. A. Secretary; besides many well-known Christian workers from this and foreign lands. Mr. D. L. Moody will lead the evening and Sunday services, speaking several times.

For additional information as to trains, accommodations, etc., apply to A. G. Moody, E. Northfield, Mass.

The programs for the July and August meetings will appear hereafter.

MRS. LAURA HAVILAND.

Among the prominent women in the Woman's Congress, last week, was Mrs. Laura Haviland, whom Cynosure readers long ago learned to esteem for her interest in the anti-slavery and other important reforms. In a recent editorial, the Inter Ocean refers to her as follows:

"Laura Haviland has been before the people of the United States as an active and influential philanthropist for more than fifty years. She is now in her eighty-fifth year, but is clear-headed and takes great interest in the Woman's Congress, and can be seen there at almost every session. She was an active, earnest Abolitionist in the days when it took great courage to be such. She was the trusted friend of William Lloyd Garrison and Levi Coffin, when the former was the chief anti-slavery agitator and the latter was president of the underground railway.

"She is a member of the Society of Friends, and sits at the head of their meeting in this city. She has raised a family of children, of whom Mrs. Brownell, who resides in Chicago, is one. Mrs. Haviland, a few years ago, wrote and published her autobiography, a most interesting book. Those ignorant of the great anti-slavery struggle will find nothing that will give them a clearer insight into it than this book.

"Among the many distinguished women who assemble daily at the Art Palace, there is none more deserving of reverence from those younger in the work for elevating woman than this quiet little Quakeress, who is almost as old as the century. When Amanda Smith, the colored evangelist, met her, for the first time, at the Congress on Tuesday, she was much moved. Knowing what Mrs. Haviland had done for her race, she paid her homage that came from the heart."

—Rev. Charles E. Hulbert, Field Secretary of the Christian Unity Association, addressed the College Church of Christ at Wheaton, Ill., on Sunday last.

—A note from Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, of New York, informs us that he has been laid aside several weeks with neuralgia, but that he is now slowly improving.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the College agent, writes that near Lidgerwood, N. D., he is (D. V.) to supply three places—Dexter, every Sabbath, and Wyndmere and Geneseo every other Sabbath. Lidgerwood will be his postoffice address. All appear to be encouraged in his new field.

—It is reported by officials who have been making investigations at the port of New York, that immigration from Europe promises to be very large this year—much greater than usual—but that the recent arrivals are not at all objectionable under the new law. On the whole, they express themselves quite well-satisfied with its workings.

—Some unknown person has sent us a copy of the New York World, issued on Sunday, May 7—an anniversary number, and, no doubt, the largest single newspaper ever printed. Including the cover, it contains 100 pages of the usual size. As a curiosity, it is immense in more senses than one; but as a Sunday newspaper, sent to its 426,237 patrons, to be read on the Sabbath, it carries an influence that is creditable neither to its publishers nor those who devote their Sundays to the perusal of such literature.

—Referring to a note in our Religious News column of April 6, Rev. Thos. C. Hunt, pastor of the First Congregational church at Riverside, Cal., sends us the following correction: "Three Congregational clergymen, all formerly from other denominations, within the past few years have gone over to the Unitarian denomination in California. None of them took any appreciable part of his congregation with him into the new fold." The correction is cheerfully accepted, inasmuch as the original item (copied from some exchange paper), made the charge against the Congregational ministers much more flagrant.

—Rev. Edgar B. Wylie, of Summerdale Station, Chicago, one of the directors of the N. C. A., was recently ordained to the Congregational ministry and installed as pastor of the Summerdale church. For some time past he has been officiating as a licentiate in the church there, which, although not large, is vigorous and hopeful. The services on this occasion were conducted by the official council. A very able sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. Dr. Hulbert, Mrs. Wylie's father, formerly president of Middlebury College, Vermont, the alma mater of Pres. J. Blanchard. At the close of the afternoon service a bountiful collation was spread in an adjoining building, of which all present partook. In the evening, the services were the ordaining and installing prayer by Prof. Wilcox of the Seminary, the charge to the pastor by Dr. Goodwin, the charge to the people by President Blanchard, singing by the choir and congregation, reading of the minutes by the scribe, reading of the Scriptures by Rev. G. L. Smith, prayer by Rev. D. W. Wise, and the benediction by the pastor. Among those who participated in the afternoon services were also Dr. Loba, of Evanston, and Dr. J. G. Johnson of the New England church, with others. Those who best know Mr. Wylie declare him to be a faithful witness for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The church is to be congratulated upon his retention.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.

2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.

3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

SUNDAY OPENING AT THE FAIR.

From correspondence it seems that there is a misapprehension as to the position of the N. C. A., as an exhibitor, and the effort to open the gates of the World's Fair on the Sabbath day. Among the friends of our cause in Chicago and vicinity the committee in charge of the exhibit has found but one opinion; and there are no friends of the Sabbath cause who are willing to sacrifice more for that precious reform than some we could name among this circle. Indeed, few have accomplished more through their personal and public efforts for the Sabbath than some of this number.

The question was early raised in the committee on the Fair, whether the application of our Association should be withdrawn or not, in view of the Sunday-opening efforts. The position then taken we trust there will be no reason to change. It was this.

1. The Fair belongs to the people of the United States.

Through their representatives in Congress they undertook the enterprise, selected Chicago as the place, fixed upon the time, invited foreign nations to participate, voted money again and again, and appointed a National Commission, who are in charge of everything under law. Congress has appropriated millions, beside the gift of $2,500,000 in souvenir coins.

2. In this last appropriation the vote was overwhelming against Sunday opening.

Now it must be remembered that there has been no popular movement asking Congress to rescind that act. The people of this country, who own the Fair and have made a rule for its patronage six days in the week, are most unlikely to change that law. The only agitation of the question for a change is about Chicago. And because the Fair is located here, an idea prevails that it is managed here. That is a mistake; while Congress is adjourned, the National Commission controls.

The local Directory of Chicago men may attempt what measures they please, they are controlled by that law.

3. Until Congress rescinds that law the Fair cannot be legally opened seven days in the week.

The discussion is now brought within this limit: Can the National Commission act independently of Congress; make its own laws; and, yielding to the demands of the Chicago Directory, open the gates on the Lord's day? Pressure is brought to bear on this point: to get the Commission to declare itself independent of the power that appointed it. But there are men enough in the body who understand law to so far resist the clamor from without, and therefore the law has been respected AND THE GATES CLOSED.

The Directory have tried one quibble after another. They claimed that Congress broke its contract about the souvenir coins, when it voted that $570,000 of that sum could be appropriated for awards. But this is practically abandoned, since it has been fairly discussed. The next scheme was to draw a line at the doors of the buildings and vote to throw open the grounds. This was so evidently a pretense that it was abandoned, almost without discussion.

Three Sabbaths have passed. The law has been respected. The gates have remained shut to the public. And it is not at all probable that any change will be made in this matter. The Commission has shown itself unwilling to yield to the Directory. A larger vote than a mere quorum is needed to decide against the act of Congress. This number is not present, and though most urgent efforts are made to get the men here, the responses show that the absentees are likely to stay away, and by this means prevent any action favorable to Sunday opening. The U. S. Attorney General has given his opinion that the Commission is bound by the act of Congress, and has no liberty in the matter except to make rules closing the gates. There are other legal considerations which we have no room to mention.

The question before the N. C. A. committee was, therefore, Shall we go forward under law; or, by withdrawing, recognize the arguments and seductive influence of men who wish the law violated, and encourage them in their vicious attempt? There was but one answer.

Humanly speaking, the Fair may yet be turned over to Sabbath-breakers. But let us not leave God out of the account, as many misguided Chicago men are trying to do. He yet rules among men, and all these questions are easy for him to settle. Christian people have been faithful in their effort; their testimony has prevailed; they can ask the Lord with clear consciences to do for his law and his honor all that they cannot do. They cannot by force come and close the gates. They can pray God to direct the minds of men aright in this momentous question. He is doing so. The people are not besieging the gates in crowds, as some lying sheets have set forth. The Directory are backing down from one point and another, until they seem rather to be anxious to drop the controversy and save their so-called honor. Let us never give up this battle. The victory is worth all it costs.

THE HOME.

DECORATION DAY.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

Hark! how the martial music
 Resounds o'er hill and plain!
 The soldiers of the North and South
 In peace have met again.
 See! from afar they rally,
 Swiftly in line they fall;
 The buglers of the North and South
 Have sounded the recall.

Beneath the pine and palm,
 'Neath Freedom's pine and palm,
 The Blue and Gray clasp hands again.
 Beneath the pine and palm.

Ah! well do we remember
 Those fiery battle-years.
 When the North and South, with hands
 upraised,
 Looked up through blinding tears.
 Cold Harbor, Chickamauga,
 Antietam, Malvern Hills,
 The gory heights of Gettysburgh—
 Ah! how the memory thrills!

Bleeding, with pain and anguish,
 Up to the Northern skies,
 The stricken South, that sunny land,
 Looks up with pleading eyes.
 Gone is her look of passion,
 She drops her weapons down;
 Her right hand holds a broken sword,
 Her left a withered crown.

When Heaven's celestial bugler
 Shall sound the reveille,
 And the soldier-dead shall leap at the sound
 From their graves on land and sea;
 Then without sound of fife or drum,
 To a land of endless day,
 Shoulder to shoulder and side by side,
 Shall march the Blue and the Gray.

Beneath the pine and palm,
 'Neath Freedom's pine and palm,
 The Blue and Gray clasp hands again
 Beneath the pine and palm.

HOME TRAINING.

(From "The Commandment with Promise.")

Mrs. Aston. But how is this to be done?

Author. By dedication of yourself to God. By bending the suppliant knee at the throne of grace, imploring for the child about to be born into this wicked world, a preparation of grace. By beseeching the Lord to take it into his gracious charge, to instruct you in wisdom and holiness, to train up the child in the way it should go. To aspire to its being an heir of heaven, and imploring the riches of Christ to prepare and adorn it in a readiness for the glorious privilege, coveting nothing earthly, but earnestly wrestling for heavenly blessings. Making the everlasting salvation of your children your intense desire, and proving it to be so by the care, example, education, and direction of them, when born and given into your arms. While hanging on the breast, let them, as it were, draw in the internal sigh of your bosom for pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace; and provide for them, as they grow in years, whatever instruction or holy helps may tend to fix their minds on the high destination of the children of God; enriching their souls with the Word of God, and teaching them to pray for the enlightening grace of the Holy Ghost.

"Really, my dear sir," Mrs. Evans again interrupted, "you appall me by your language, but yet, I confess you interest me; only it is anything but amusement."

Author. If it be profitable, we can lay by amusement, for a little, without much loss.

Mrs. Aston. I should like to know if any mother has ever done thus?

Author. I have the unspeakable pleasure of knowing some who have; few, indeed; but I have watched the case for many years, and know its blessed results; but we can turn immediately to some Scripture examples. If you read the history of the promise of a son to Manoah and his wife, Judges 13, you will find an exceedingly interesting illustration of the subject; one to which I would always wish to direct the attention of every parent. With the promise there was given a direction from the angel of the Lord, how Manoah's wife should conduct herself: "Now, therefore, beware, I pray thee, that thou drink not wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing." This enjoined, through typical observances, the watchful circumspection of the mother, and renunciation of all sin, and that particularly not only on her own account, but on account of the son she should bear. The child's destination, too, was declared to be that of a Nazarite from the womb, that is, devoted to God. When she relates the circumstance to her husband, in the 7th verse, she marks that she was duly impressed with her duty to obey the injunction; neither does she forget to relate the destination of the child. Then Manoah entreated the Lord, and said, "O my God, let the man of God, whom thou didst send, come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born." And again, in the 12th verse, "how shall we order the child, and how shall we do unto him?" which draws again the duties of the mother forth, with this solemn conclusion: "All that I commanded her, let her observe;" and in the 24th verse we are told, the child grew, and the Lord blessed him.

In the first chapter of Samuel, we read of Hannah's conduct; her earnest desire for a child was presented to the Lord, in his place of worship; she said to Eli, "I have poured out my soul before the Lord;" and Eli said, "Go in peace, and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him." And when she bore a son she called him Samuel, "because I have asked him of the Lord". And she bore in mind her promise to give him up unto the Lord all the days of his life; and when she had weaned him she said, "I will bring him that he may appear before the Lord, and there abide forever." And she took him up to the Lord with her offerings, and said, "For this child I prayed, and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him; therefore, also, I have lent him to the Lord; as long as he liveth he shall be lent unto the Lord; and he worshiped the Lord there." There are some other instances in Scripture, from which we learn the same; as in the case of Jeremiah; in that of Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist; and, above all, of the Virgin Mary; their retreat being, doubtless, that of devotional preparation of soul for the great maternal privileges to which they were appointed.

Mrs. Aston. But, you must confess, these were all very particular cases, where the offspring were evidently appointed of God to peculiar offices.

Author. That is very true. But why should not every mother seek to be highly honored in being the blessed instrument of bringing a child of God into the world, and of receiving into her own bosom the hope of it, by earnest prayer to the Lord, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not; and why should they not continually say, "Lord, teach us what we shall do to this child?" "How shall we order the child?"

Mrs. Aston. Then it seems you would make the child's obedience dependent on the parent's devotion.

Author. Not dependent. There is no dependence but in God, for this pious disposition; but it (as a means) must be greatly facilitated by a proper direction of the mind, and reference to God; and it is an arduous thing for a child to learn to honor those in whom he sees not the principle calculated to inspire him with respect and honor. If you would have your children honor and obey you, you should seek to exhibit before them that which is honorable, and to lay upon them those commands which are agreeable to the mind and will of God. There is a promise to parents who so act: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Nevertheless, the duty of the child is imperious; he is to honor and obey in the Lord, as father and mother, for there is sufficient claim in all to this duty, on the ground of the natural right they possess, and the natural protection they extend.

"I am glad," said Mrs. Conway, "you have come to this conclusion, as it brings out the practical part of the duty, and engages me more to look into the other arguments you have used."

Author. I, too, am glad that you feel so engaged; but let us all recollect the faith and grace it requires to apply the precept, in hope of the promise, to a practical effect on our own hearts. But we are forgetting the flight of time; we must not neglect our engagement to the young people in the other room.

When we entered the room we found a fine assembly of children of different ages, from about six to fifteen years. They had just finished their refreshments, and were beginning to arrange themselves according to their own fancy, choosing their seats near to their own favorite companions; and it was not a little curious to see how, by this means, they had unconsciously classed themselves. They all rose at our entrance, and showed the exterior mark of respect for their seniors, whether it were prompted by innate feeling, or inculcated by education.

"Welcome, my dear young friends," I said, as I approached them; "but let me survey my little flock, and endeavor to know each particularly. This is the good Shepherd's plan, as we read in the tenth chapter of John: 'I am the good Shepherd, and I know my sheep, and am known of mine.' So let us, in the name of that good Shepherd, know each other. I see William, and Isabella, Maria, Anna, Mary, Louisa, and her brothers Charles and George. I think, too, I see all the party I invited at Mrs. Evans', one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight; and, beside, some countenances new to me; may I beg them to be introduced?"

Mrs. Evans stepped forward, and said, "These are three children of my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Graham."

"So I have just nineteen. Now observe, I count you like young sheep; I know you each by name, and a shepherd always desires to keep up his flock—to lose none—desirous to give in his account, presenting them to his master. How beautiful is that assurance we have in Scripture, that the Lord Jesus will keep those who obey him. He laid down his life to keep them, and therefore he will say when he presents them to the Father, 'Behold, I and the children whom thou hast given me.' 'Of all that thou hast given me have I lost none.'

"In his name may we be assembled and held together, for the sacred purpose of learning how to manifest true love to him!"

(This easy address calmed the agitation which was visible in some, fearing they knew not what; and those with whom I had before been acquainted, looked pleased to be thus welcomed.)

"In the fourteenth chapter of John, at the fifteenth verse, Jesus thus speaks to his disciples: 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.' With this persuasive plea, how sweet do the commandments of the Lord appear! They are thus laid by the Gospel on the basis of love. Obedience is named as the proof of love to Jesus. Now, my dear Maria, does not this accord with your motto, 'All for love?'"

She smiled, and said "Yes".

Author. And though you thought that "Honor thy father and mother" sounded so cold, you see it is a commandment to be kept for love.

She smiled again.

Author. We may now turn to the twenty-first verse, and we shall see a farther explanation, which is to put our love to the proof. We cannot keep any thing, you know, which we do not possess; we must first have it; and we cannot attempt to keep a command of which we know nothing. We must first know it. So we read, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." When we love the Lord, we shall inquire after his will—what he would have us to do. We shall receive our instruction, and we shall endeavor to keep it. It is a proof of the Lord's grace to us when he gives us his commands, and acquaints us with his will; and it is a proof of our love to him, when we receive and keep his gifts. You wear in your bosom, Maria, a token of your own and your father's mutual love. I dare say you asked for it; he gave it, and you keep it. But if, like Anna, we receive a gift, and lose it, it is not like true, disinterested love. The commandments of God are a kind of picture of our God; he is holy, just and good, and they are holy, just and good; and when we lose them, and would substitute any other thing in their place, we are at once proved to be without love; for it is written in the twenty-fourth verse, "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings."

Now, there is another thing in love—it cannot be satisfied without a return; therefore, it is promised to them that love the Lord, in the twenty-first verse, "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him." Here is a rich promise, repeated in the twenty-third verse: "If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." But I will ask Louisa a question:

Is this love to God natural to us?

Louisa: No, uncle, for St. John says, "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us. We love him, because he first loved us."

Author. True, the source of love is God. "God is love." And it is written in the second chapter of 1 John, "Whoso keepeth his word, in him, verily, is the love of God perfected. Hereby know we that we are in him." What I desire, my dear young friends, to convey to you in this view, is, that we have the blessed privilege of being under the law to Christ (1 Cor. 9:21), whom to serve is perfect freedom; all whose commandments are in love; and who giveth the principle of love as the spring of the obedience of faith.

Tell me, now, dear Mary, what is the fifth commandment?

Mary. "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Author. Where was it given?

Mary. At Mount Sinai, in the wilderness.

Author. To whom was it given?

Mary. To all the children of Israel.

Author. And at what time?

Mary hesitated, not being ready with a reply; and Charles modestly said, "Just after they had been delivered from Egypt."

Author. Do you remember what the land of Egypt was called by the Lord?

Mary. Do you mean, uncle, at the time he gave the ten commandments?

Author. I do.

Mary. "The house of bondage," do you mean?

Author. Yes; by which I mean to show that when the ten commandments were given, the Israelites were in a state of redemption, and that the law was given to them as to a people freed from the bondage of Egypt; the ten commandments being prefaced by this declaration—"I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." And they were no sooner put under the law than they had, beside, the types of the Gospel in Jesus, through the blood of the slain lamb. So the terrors of the strictness of the law were softened by the provision of the typical sacrifice without spot or blemish, offered as an atonement; so that even then, they who had faith might be said to be under the law to Christ, which it is said, Gal. 3:19, was ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator.

(To be concluded.)

ARGUING WITH A ROBBER.

Mercy in the way of forgiving wrong becomes our duty when any person does us an injury.

Here is the way a robber was forgiven and saved:

A servant of the Rev. Rowland Hill suddenly died, and his master preached his funeral sermon to a numerous audience, in the course of which he mentioned the following anecdote: "Many persons present were acquainted with the deceased, and have had it in their power to observe his character and conduct. They can bear witness that I speak the truth when I assert that he has proved himself a perfectly sober, honest, industrious, and religious man, faithfully performing, as far as it lay in his power, the duties of his station in life, and serving God with constancy and zeal; yet this very man, this virtuous and pious man, was once a robber on the highway. More than thirty years ago he stopped me on the highway and demanded my money. Not at all intimidated, I argued with him. I asked him what could induce him to pursue so iniquitous a course of life. 'I have been a coachman, sir,' said he, 'but got out of a place, and not being able to get a character, can get no employment, and am, therefore, obliged to resort to this means of gaining a subsistence.' I desired him to call upon me; he promised he would, and kept his word. I talked further with him, and offered to take him into my service. He consented, and ever since that period has served me faithfully, and not me only, but he has faithfully served God. And instead of having finished his life in a public, ignominious manner, with a depraved and hardened mind, as he probably soon would have done, he has died in peace, rejoicing in hope, and prepared, we trust, for the society of just men made perfect."—John N. Kramer, in the Right Road.

GOD OUR REFUGE.

The Lord our refuge is,
And ever will remain;
Since he hath made us his,
He will our cause maintain;
In vain our enemies oppose,
For God is stronger than his foes.

The Lord our portion is,
What can we wish for more?
As long as we are his,
We never can be poor;
In vain do earth and hell oppose,
For God is stronger than his foes.

Our God our Father is,
Our names are on his heart;
We ever shall be his,
He ne'er from us will part;
In vain the world and flesh oppose,
For God is stronger than his foes.

TEMPERANCE.

MEN WHO ARE TO BE PITIED.

The man who has to walk, in order that the whisky-seller may ride in a carriage.

The man who has to go ragged, bleary-eyed and red-nosed, in order that the bar-keeper may wear good clothes and sport diamonds.

The man who takes the very blood out of his veins to help keep in motion the machinery that grinds up good corn and makes it into bad whisky.

The man who has to go without butter and live on dry bread and cold liver, in order that the beer peddler may have porterhouse steak and hot coffee.

The man who has to take bread out of his mouth to help put a grand piano into the home of the devil's adjutant-general, who supplies him with bitters.

The man who has to steal from his own wife and children in order that the family of the political philanthropist who puts parties in power and men in the ditch, may continue to fare sumptuously every day.—Selected.

AN EXPERIENCE WITH GOOD TEMPLARS.

[From an Address delivered by Bishop H. J. Decker, D.D., of the Radical U. B. church, at Canby, Oregon, Dec. 8, 1892.]

My people have been charged with opposition to Good Templarism. I do not know how much that may mean; but I am quite certain that we are not favorably impressed with the manner the I. O. G. T. has been winking at the liquor question on the Pacific coast. They trifle with it as if it were a poor little delicate thing, deserving the sympathy of the people. Their members talk temperance for the good of the order on lodge nights, and on election day vote for platforms and men that they know to be in favor of the traffic, for the suppression of which they claim their lodge was organized. In 1882 I was traveling in Yolo county, California, and arrived at a little town at dusk, and looked about for a hotel. "Is there no hotel in town, where I can get lodging without going to a place where liquor is sold?" I inquired. "No place here. They all sell liquor." I looked about, and bought a few crackers for a lunch, to avoid going to a hotel, hoping to see some one with whom I could spend the night where vice and immorality would not molest me. Sure enough, an upper room was lit up, and I learned that there would be a temperance gathering there that night. I thought, now I shall see some one who will invite me home with him, and I shall be delivered from the horrors of that liquor hole. I went, and would have entered, but, alas! I did not have a certain word, which they said was absolutely necessary in order to get in. It was the "pass-word" I lacked. Oh, if I only had the pass-word I could then have gone in among the elite and absorbed (?) the very essence of temperance!

Who, I desire to know, will arise and modify the force of the insult to a temperance man?

Shall a minister of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus be thus set aside, simply because he has not received the shibboleth of the lodge? Is a minister, ordained by his church, and recognized as an advocate of the strongest ecclesiastical law extant, to be subjected to the childish acts of an institution claiming to be organized for the suppression of the liquor traffic? Who, I repeat, will venture to apologize for the ill-designed act by which an ordained minister of a denomination, having a temperance law as much higher than theirs as the heavens are higher than the earth, suffer the cold hospitality of an hotel, with a rum-scented couch, while their members revel in the foolish pastimes of their vain lodge rituals in an upper room guarded by sentinels, and all this in the name of temperance? If to oppose such conduct is to them a displeasure, the sooner they so act as to command the respect of those without, the better it will be for them and the world.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

It is often debated whether rum-selling is a sin, per se, or only a sin in its consequences. This query need not detain long an alert and practical mind. Whether a sin in itself, or only in its consequences, or in both respects, it is certain that rum-selling, as a business, is so mischievous that after many decades of discussion the general Protestant rule is to exclude the rum-seller from church membership. This large and indisputable temperance fact has many sides.

1. Any business which justly excludes the man who practices it from church membership, cannot be consistently licensed, or in any way legalized, by Christian votes. One and the same church cannot, without self-contradiction, exclude rum-sellers from church membership and also favor the legal sanction of rum-sellers. It cannot, in reason or honor, with one hand make rum-sellers and with the other excommunicate rum-sellers.

2. Any business which justly excludes the man who practices it from church membership, cannot be legalized without sin. This is the official and very memorable declaration of the Methodist church in the United States, and is the level to which all churches that exclude rum-sellers from church membership ought, in simple Christian consistency, to rise. Logical consistency requires this level.

3. Any business which justly excludes the man who practices it from church membership ought not to be legalized by the State.

4. Any business which justly excludes the man who practices it from church membership, cannot be legalized by a free State depending on the votes of a free church which excludes rum-sellers from membership, unless by the disloyalty of Christians to their principles.

5. As no rum-seller ought to be a church member, no political party that proposes to legalize rum-selling can be consistently supported by Christian votes.

The five propositions are only the different sides of a single pentagon. If the churches were consistent with themselves and were to exhibit unanimity within the defenses of this pentagon, there is no political party in the republic whose policy, in regard to the liquor traffic, might not be brought gradually into harmony with Christian principles. Let the churches make the liquor traffic an outlaw, and ultimately the State must do so.—Joseph Cook, in the Advance.

Thirty-one members of the Glasgow Town Council are abstainers.

The Prohibition party in Idaho is rapidly gaining ground. Many converts are reported. The Populists are losing ground every day. State Chairman N. H. Clark of our party was elected trustee of Idaho Falls on a straight Prohibition ticket.

The Republican press of Iowa boldly declares in favor of the repeal of the present prohibitory law. Eleven members of the Republican State Committee in interviews in the Register favor the modification of the law. The Young Men's Republican clubs of Tippecanoe and other places have voted for the law as it stands, much to the disgust of the Republican press and the politicians. There are evidences on every hand of a conspiracy to break down the law in that State.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The right demeanor in public worship. V. 1. A great evil of the present day is the lack of reverence for the house of God. Who of us, if invited to the court of some great king or emperor, would not be careful to avoid the slightest thing in our dress, manners or conversation which savored of disrespect. Should we not be far more careful when we come into the courts of the King of kings. There are many reasons why people go to church. Some go to meet their friends or to while away the time; others to see the fashions or display some new triumph of millinery; while many go to hear eloquent preaching or fine music. All such vain, formal worship God regards as "the sacrifice of fools." Going to church merely because custom demands it may be far less acceptable to him than staying at home. "They consider not that they do evil." Much of the irreverence in public worship is thoughtless rather than intentional; but it is the mark which distinguishes a wise man from a fool, that the latter never stops to consider, while the former carefully weighs his words beforehand. "Be more ready to hear." We must first be sincere and humble hearers of the Word before we can be doers of it, and it is impossible for the truth to find entrance into minds that are filled with worldly and frivolous matters.

2. In regard to performing our vows. Vs. 2-7. "Be not rash with thy mouth." Let us be sure that our prayers are not lip-service, repeated, parrot-like, with little thought of their meaning. Let us, on the other hand, beware of rash and ill-considered prayers. Let us not pray like the mother of Zebedee's children, without understanding what we are asking for. It may be some great spiritual blessing, which will require us to pass through a baptism of fire before we can be vessels meet to receive it. Or we may ask for a coveted temporal good, and God may give us our wish, yet send leanness into our souls. "Let thy words be few," or, as it is expressed in Matthew, "use not vain repetitions." "A multitude of words" mark the "fool," or one devoid of sound reason and judgment. "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it." This passage has sometimes been wrested by would-be defenders of Masonry, to prove that lodge vows ought to be kept. But it proves rather the opposite, for Masonic vows are not made to God. Would he who has said in his Word, "Thou shalt not kill," and "Thou shalt not forswear thyself," sanction such murderous oaths, taken in ignorance, and whose fearful consequences, if violated, cannot be foreseen by the candidate? Such vows are made to Satan and not to God. In India the natives call a Masonic lodge, "Shaitan Khana"—Satan's House; and even the untutored African who calls the rum which Christian America exports to her shore "shame water," has a name equally truthful for these hidden haunts of darkness—"devil houses." It is a terrible sin to make such Satanic vows at all, but it is a far worse sin to keep them. Wicked oaths, made in the spirit of Satan, like that made by Herod or the forty Jews who bound themselves not to eat nor drink until they had killed Paul, are always vows to the devil, no matter how many times the name of God may be used. But in the lesson before us it is the vows which a man actually makes to God that are to be considered; vows to serve him, made, perhaps, in sickness or adversity, and forgotten with the return of health and prosperous times. It is an impious and soul-destroying thing to thus vow and not perform. "Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin;" that is, do not make a vow to fast, if one has not the strength or ability to keep it. Fasting as a religious duty is not incumbent at all times, or on all persons. In this respect it is very different from a vow to abstain from intoxicating liquors or any other evil appetite. The one is optional; the other is not. In the former we are to take into consideration our own peculiar circumstances, and judge whether it is best for us to make such a vow or not. So, in relation to what part of our property we can give to God's service, and other things of a like nature. The latter is not optional. A man addicted to drink, or any other evil habit, in resolving to break it off, is not to consider his environments at all, but, to believe in God, who will give him the needed strength. "Neither say thou before the angel;"—that is God's prophet or minister—in reference to any righteous vow, that it was a mistake to make it.

3. Regarding oppression. V. 8. "If thou seest the oppression of the poor," etc. Oriental injustice is proverbial; but even here, where secret societies rule the courts, and money is on the side of the wrong-doer, we often see this "violent perverting of judgment and justice." "Marvel not at the matter;" at God's will or purpose in allowing it. "This is the patience and faith of the saints," that they are willing to wait the unfolding of his great plan, sure that all oppressors will be punished sooner or later.

4. The vanity of riches. Vs. 9-13. A millionaire cannot eat more than other men, or live in more than one house at a time; and, beset by cares and anxieties, he cannot enjoy the sweet sleep of the laboring man. He may, it is true, wear a better coat, indulge in daintier fare, and live in a palace, but none of these things will keep away death, while their tendency will be to prevent his seeking anything better, and thus fulfilling our Saviour's words, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—The Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Montreal in July will, this year, occupy five days instead of four, beginning Wednesday evening, July 5, and ending Sunday evening, July 9; none of the sessions being more than two hours in length. Forty-five States, five Territories, and eleven Provinces, also Great Britain and Europe, India, Australia, China, Japan and Africa are to be represented. Twenty-five different evangelical denominations will speak from the same platform. Already delegates to the number of 17,000 have manifested their intention of visiting Montreal at this time. The Christian Endeavor societies of Canada and the citizens of Montreal are making ready to act as hosts.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—After an absence of fifteen years from Chicago. Rev. Wm. and Mrs. M. B. Holyoke now return to the city as their permanent residence. Their address is 1170 Washington Boulevard, near California Ave.

—Dr. J. E. Roy gave his new illustrated address on Africa and America, at the Oak Park church, on Sunday evening, to a large and attentive audience. The choir added interest to the occasion by singing several of the Jubilee songs.

—It was an interesting scene at the Wauwatoosa, Wis., church when, in connection with the reception of twenty-one members, Rev. Luther Clapp baptized an infant whose great-great-grandparents had been his parishioners twenty years. The great-grandparents and the grandparent were also his parishioners. The sweet and crowing little representative of the fifth generation seemed to realize that it was sharing in no common scene.

—The Mills meetings closed in Milwaukee May 8, having continued from April 5 with increasing power to the close. Several thousand have signed cards pledging themselves to a Christian life. As another result of the meetings a rescue mission has been organized to reach the homeless and outcast.

—Dr. A. T. Pierson, who has been preaching in the pulpit of Spurgeon's tabernacle in London, returns to the United States this month.

FREE METHODIST.

—This church has now twenty-nine annual conferences. The Southern California conference has been organized since the last General conference; hence it is not described in the discipline.

—Sister Bradley of the Olive Branch Mission has again been very sick, and a convert is taking charge while she goes to the country for a few days of rest. The work is still blessed of God, and souls are saved. Remember Sister B. and this mission in your prayers. Rent and gas bills must be met promptly if the mission is kept open.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The memorial window presented to Wesley's chapel in City road, London (the mother church of Methodism), by the Free Methodists, was unveiled a few days ago.

—Rev. Dr. Blodgett, pastor of First church, Galesburg, Ill., has been selected to deliver the Auditorium oration on Decoration day in this city.

—Miss Willard writes concerning her plans for the summer that her friends "are to think of her as keeping, so far as possible, in quiet country places, dictating a part of every day, and spending much time in the open air." She expects to return for the annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in October.

—Rev. A. Bower of Benson, Ill., has in his possession a tablet made from the wood of a sycamore tree planted in Epworth churchyard by Samuel Wesley on the birth of John Wesley in 1702.

—Seven hundred and fifty Methodist preachers have been appointed members of the Advisory Council of the World's Congress of Religions. The list was made up in the office of the Epworth Herald.

—Kansas City churches gave over $1,500 for the cause of Southern education. Secretaries Hartzell and Hamilton are rejoicing.

—The annual meeting of the national association of local preachers will be held in Washington, D. C., at Hamline church.

—There is no marked change in the condition of Bishop Foss. He is comparatively free from pain, and the danger dreaded from erysipelas has apparently passed. We hope and expect to chronicle soon his complete recovery.

—The General Missionary Committee will meet at Minneapolis, in Wesley church, at 9 o'clock on Nov. 8.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Southern Presbyterians are proposing to purchase a steam boat for the Congo, by issuing 10,000 shares of stock of $1.00 each, these shares to be purchased by the children and the Sunday-schools of the church.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The Archbishop of Canterbury, England, has announced that he will invite all the bishops of the Anglican communion, and of the American church, to meet at Lambeth in 1897. The conference is due in 1893, but as the former date is the thirteen hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Augustine in Kent, the Archbishop has resolved thus to commemorate the event. The first of these gatherings at Lambeth was in 1867, when seventy-six bishops attended; the second was in 1878, when one hundred bishops met; and the third and last was in 1888, at which assembly 145 prelates were present.

—Bishop Matthews, of the Church of England, bishop of Lahore, India, has given women permission to baptize in cases of necessity.

—The board of managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal church has decided to hold the October meeting of the Missionary Council in San Francisco. Hitherto it has not been held farther west than Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—The General conference of the Church of the (Radical) United Brethren in Christ met at Hudson, Indiana, on Thursday of last week at 2 o'clock P. M.

—The Liberals announced that they were reduced to about 197,000 members soon after the York General conference. They now claim about 204,000, or an addition of about 7,000 in the past four years. View this in the light of their claim that they received from 20,000 to 25,000 members each year of the quadrennium, which would aggregate 80,000 or 100,000 received during the past four years. Out of this gross number they have held only 7,000, according to their showing.—Conservator.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The death is announced of Rev. Dr. R. W. McAll, aged seventy-seven. He was the founder of the remarkable mission movement in Paris which bears his name. He was born in England in 1821. He studied architecture, and afterward turned his attention to theology, and for twenty-four years was a Congregational pastor in England. In 1871 he and his wife made a brief holiday visit in Paris, and were so impressed with the spiritual destitution of the working classes that they resolved to devote themselves to an effort to evangelize them. Their work was successful beyond their hopes, and more than three hundred stations have been established in Paris and other parts of France.

—The seventy-four slum officers of England cost the Salvation Army $225 a week—an average of about $3.00.

—The tenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 14-21.

—Hunan Province, south of the Yangtse, contains probably 16,000,000 of people. It is the largest mass of heathenism in the world, without one resident Protestant missionary.

—James Croll, of Canada, classifies the Protestant Christians of the world as follows:

Lutherans	35,000,000
Methodists	25,000,000
Episcopalians	22,000,000
Presbyterians	20,000,000
Baptists	17,000,000
Congregationalists	6,000,000
All other denominations	12,000,000

Total 137,000,000

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The ninth annual convention of the National Editorial Association, with about 400 delegates, representing 400 newspapers, and in all some 1,500 editors, assembled on Tuesday in this city and discussed matters of interest to the secular press.

Large delegations of women, of many tongues, representing numerous districts of the United States and several foreign countries, held a Woman's Congress, last week, at the Art Palace in this city. The gathering was the first of the World's Fair Auxiliary Congresses to be held during the existence of the Columbian Exposition. The sessions were held in divisions, attended by immense crowds of ladies, and were devoted to matters designed to enlarge and elevate the sphere of women in society, reforms and politics. A great accumulation of intellect and refinement was the distinguishing feature of the sessions; but the practical results are still in abeyance.

The Princess Eulalia, Infanta of Spain, arrived here this week, and met with a cordial reception.

On Thursday the magnificent Illinois Building at the World's Fair was dedicated, in the presence of 5,000 persons from all parts of the State. The ceremonies were appropriate and on a scale befitting the occasion.

Police Inspector Hunt charges half-a-dozen city detectives with working a black-mailing scheme which, it is said, has resulted in the practical licensing of crooks to work the World's Fair crowds, as well as the persecution of innocent men who have been compelled to give to the police every cent they possessed in order to escape arrest. Investigation will be made.

A suit at law has been begun in the Circuit Court against the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Company (otherwise known as the whisky trust) which has a capital of $35,000,000. It is a quo warranto proceeding, brought by Attorney General Moloney, in the name of the people of the State of Illinois, to compel the trust to appear in court and show by what warrant it has misused and perverted its powers and franchises, and now assumes such liberties, powers, and privileges as it exercises.

Sunday afternoon, in a picturesque spot of Humboldt park, a statue of the great Plattdeutsch poet-novelist, Fritz Reuter, was unveiled with appropriate exercises in the presence of an assemblage variously estimated at from fifty to seventy-five thousand people, representing all the nationalities of cosmopolitan Chicago, but chiefly the low German element of the city's population.

Superintendents of police from many large cities assembled in convention here last week, for the purpose of forming a national association, the object being to secure more uniform practices in the large cities and to devise means of better caring for criminals.

Thirty-seven governors have favorably responded to the invitation of Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, to send delegates to the anti-combine convention, called to meet in this city June 5 and 6. This is beyond the expectation of the promoters of the conference. The first thought was to consider the coal monopoly only, but it broadened out into a general anti-trust movement.

COUNTRY.

Representatives of about 70 trade-unions met at Des Moines, Iowa, for the purpose of forming a State federation of labor organizations.

In the Kansas Conference of the United Brethren shameful frauds in the election of delegates were charged, involving, also, the crime of forgery, to secure a coveted representation in the quadrennial convention.

A Kokomo (Ind.) dispatch of the 18th says: "The plate-glass trust is now assuming tangible form and is an assured fact. It will embrace the four largest factories in the United States—the Diamond works of Kokomo; a branch of the same company at Elwood, Ind.; the Charleroi in Pennsylvania and the Crystal City of Missouri. The factory here, employing 1,600 men, is closed, while an inventory is being taken preparatory to the transfer to the syndicate. The Diamond stock will go in at $7,000,000.

Seven men employed at the Pope glucose mills at Geneva, Ill., on the 15th, were killed by the explosion of a "converter" used in the manufacture of glucose. The mill was destroyed. Carelessness is believed to have caused the disaster.

The steamship Campania, of the Cunard line, made the run from New York to Queenstown in five days, seventeen hours and twenty-seven minutes—2½ hours less time than the previous record of the fastest of other eastward-bound steamships.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage reiterates his statement that he will resign his pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle unless the indebtedness of the church is immediately canceled—that is, the floating debt of about $100,000.

The lower house of the Michigan Legislature has passed a bill reinstating capital punishment for murderers only who are convicted on direct testimony, and not on circumstantial evidence.

The stockmen are happy because of heavy rains that have fallen in Central New Mexico and Northern Arizona, from the Pecos river to the Colorado desert. There was a washout of three-fourths of a mile of track on the Atlantic and Pacific railroad at a point in the Colorado desert, where no rain had fallen for seven years.

Numerous failures of business houses, in various parts of the country, occurred last week.

Henry Villard has resigned the presidency of the Northern Pacific railroad.

Five of the big distilleries at Peoria have withdrawn from the whisky trust. The five, it is stated, will be run independently.

WHAT SCIENCE HAS DONE FOR DEAFNESS.

Transmitting Sound to the Ear by the Use of a Simple Device.

There is little doubt but that the treatment of deafness has been revolutionized by the invention of Sound Discs. The development and growth of the use of this device is phenomenal, and is well worthy the attention it has received in medical circles, where it has been wisely discussed and most heartily approved. A prominent physician has gone so far as to estimate that fully three-quarters of all the deafness which has been relieved in the United States during the past two years has been by the aid of this instrument; and he considers it an easy triumph over this most distressing affliction.

While the idea of such an instrument is not strictly new, yet the restoration of such a large number of desperate and abandoned cases by its use has proven it to be of vastly more importance than was at first supposed. A recent interview with the inventor of the instrument, Mr. H. A. Wales, at his office in Ashland Block, Chicago, discloses how the idea of such an ingenious instrument occurred to him. It was learned that it was first suggested from the fact that most people who suffer from defective hearing, hear better in a noise, or on a moving train, which is caused by the increased vibration of the ear. From this, Mr. Wales said he was confident that he could invent a device which could be worn with comfort by the patient, and which would focus the smaller waves of sound on the drumhead, thus increasing its vibration, and enabling the patient to hear ordinary conversation and public speaking. After many experiments the final outcome of this happy thought has been the present device, which must be an ideal one, as it is worn in the ear out of sight for months at a time.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

Cook fresh vegetables rapidly and take up as soon as they are well done. Do not let them soak on the back of the stove.

Do not cook too great a variety of foods at one time. A simple meal of a few kinds, but those well selected and prepared, is more healthful than a greater variety.

Lemon juice makes a healthful substitute for vinegar as a dressing for salads and other food which is usually used with vinegar. The best cider vinegar used moderately may not do much harm; but the vinegar usually found in groceries is a vile compound unfit to put into the human stomach.

It is of great importance to cook food properly. Underdone or overdone vegetables, scorched or otherwise badly cooked, cannot be wholesome. Scorching food especially spoils it. Every cook should put her mind upon the business in hand and see that the food is well cooked, appetizing and wholesome, which it will be if of good material and well prepared.

"Vitality" is a word much used by some. Certain people are said to have little, while others have much. The person who is born feeble with seemingly a small hold on life or little vitality, is, however, often the longest-lived after all. Why? Because the strong and vigorous man is apt to be presumptuous and thinks because healthy he can endure anything. Wise care of the body will ensure necessary vitality usually.

It is a fanciful and foolish fashion that demands that the feet and hands shall be smaller in proportion than the other parts of the body. The man or woman who tries to squeeze the foot into a shoe or boot one or two sizes too small, or the hands into tight kid gloves, is not far ahead of the Chinese custom of foot bondage. Wear common sense shoes, a common size, and you will not be distressed with bunions and ingrowing nails.

It is not possible for anybody to keep in perfect health long without sufficient sleep. Seven to eight hours of uninterrupted repose is not too much. If disturbed at night or obliged to rise very early it is best to take a daily nap. You can run on for a time without enough sleep, but nature will take her pay eventually for every such transgression and the results are the almost universal "nervous debility" or "prostration" of the times.

Use discretion in taking out-of-door exercise. Riding to a park or a shady grove and then resting in the cool shade and inhaling the pure air is best when tired out; but a brisk walk and hearty exercise with hoe and spade, or in any other way, is good for the man who sits at his work. Wood sawing is good for ministers, book-keepers and the like, while swinging in a hammock in the purest air obtainable is best for the weary house-keeper who has been on her feet all day.

CANNED VEGETABLES.

There are few things more unappetizing than the canned goods put up in tins, as they are ordinarily served—that is, simply turned out into a saucepan and heated.

A very important precaution to take is to turn out the contents of a can several hours before they are wanted, which will cause them to lose the peculiar, stifled, close taste, frequently combined with solder, that too often clings to them.

Peas should be drained of their liquor and heated with a spoonful of water, a lump of butter, half a teaspoonful of fine sugar and salt and pepper. Or, make a thin white sauce with milk, butter, seasoning and a little flour, and heat them in this.

Canned corn needs a little milk or cream, butter, and seasoning, and it must only get thoroughly hot. Cooking toughens it.

For corn pancakes mix as above, adding half a cupful more of milk, flour to make a thin batter and a teaspoonful of baking powder.

You can make a corn pudding with two cupfuls of chopped canned corn, one

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 800 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disavow all secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. H. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5cts each.

FARM NOTES.

The average farmer comprises the majority of the farmers of the country. He is not, necessarily, the best of farmers, for his hap-hazard system of farming is that which depletes the average yield of grain of the careful farmer twenty-five to thirty per cent.

A Mississippi farmer educated his son at the agricultural and mechanical college of that State. After graduating, the son returned home and took charge of his father's farm and managed it for one half the proceeds. Now the old man gets as much rent as he formerly made from the entire farm.

The yield of peas will average twenty-five bushels to an acre, but a full crop on good land is thirty-five to forty-five bushels. When peas and oats are sown together on good land the yield has been at times seventy-five bushels per acre; but half that is, perhaps, the average. This double crop produces most abundantly by early sowing.

If any one will travel in any direction some distance from any town or city in America, he will not consider the subject debatable whether or not our road laws need readjusting to suit our changed conditions. This is a subject not to be argued. The present condition of our roads and highways is an urgent appeal for good laws and their enforcement.

The cost of feeding a flock of fowls is one dollar a year for the grain needed, and pasture or a feeding range must be supplied as well. The space for the range should not be less than one acre for one hundred fowls. The house for such a flock must be at least thirty feet long, twelve feet wide and eight feet high at the front with five feet in the rear, the roof sloping that way. It will be only inviting failure to keep more than one hundred hens in one yard or house, as the birds cannot withstand too close quarters, and the most scrupulous cleanliness is indispensable.

Henry Wallace, in his valuable work on clover culture, very properly makes the enrichment of the land by the frequent turning under of green clover a leading requisite in all rotations. Other leguminous crops are useful, but none possess all the advantages of clover. Another requisite is the abridgment of labor by means of making one crop prepare the ground for the next one that is to follow, and he proposes the following, which has been successfully adopted in some portions of the West, and requires only two plowings for seven years of crops: 1, corn; 2, clover; 3, wheat; 4, mixed clover and orchard grass; 5, meadow; 6, pasture; 7 pasture.—Exchange.

"In 1888," says a writer in the Stockman, "I grew sixty bushels of Red Wethersfield onions on twelve rods of ground. This is at the rate of eight hundred bushels to the acre. I raised them as an experiment, and contrary to all the rules for onion growing laid down in the books. The seed was sown late, on the 14th of May, and on sod ground without manure. It was in the corner of the pasture field that had not been ploughed in twenty years; it was rich, however, for the stock had stood there a good deal. The sod was completely inverted, and then its upper surface pulverized with a fine tooth harrow. This gave the right conditions for an onion seed bed, two inches of fine earth on the surface and firm beneath. It was little trouble to weed them, for but very few weeds came through the sod. They ripened nicely, and some of the largest weighed over a pound each. I would repeat the process if I desired to grow a quantity of the vegetable and had similar soil. All the pay I got out of it was the flattering results of the unique experiment, for onions brought nothing that season."

The best field of onions we remember of seeing, was where the seeds were sown in hot frames, and when they were about six inches high, the ground was thoroughly prepared and the onions were set out in rows. This avoided all early weeding, gave the plants a good start, and produced a splendid crop of this most useful and healthful vegetable.

By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, with a history of the first Christian mission on the Congo. 12mo., 530 pages with maps, portraits and numerous illustrations, $2.00
"A conscientious piece of work, and gives a very clear account of what has been done by the Protestant missions to evangelize the barbarous races of Central Africa.
He who wants to know what missionary effort means in these days may well learn from this volume. The reader who goes carefully through will have a good bird's eye view of recent events in Africa, with all the results of modern travel.
The work contains solid information of use to all who are interested in the future of this wonderful country. The many illustrations throw light upon savage customs and costumes."—Graphic.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 15th page).

The people of Richmond, Va., propose to make May 31 a holiday, because on that day the remains of Jeff Davis will be laid to rest in that city.

Solomon Jones Homer, a full-blooded Choctaw speaker from the Indian Territory, declares her belief in the Senior Class of Roanoke College, Virginia, will deliver the valedictory at the commencement on June 7.

Conservative estimates place the attendance at the German Baptist or Dunkard National meeting at Muncie, Ind., last Sunday, at 20,000, and the indications are that the crowd would have been nearly double that number had not the rain interfered.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, after a long interview with Lizzie Borden, the alleged murderess of her father and stepmother, declares her belief in the prisoner's innocence. Mrs. Livermore says that Lizzie Borden talks of the case freely, but sadly and calmly. She feels her position keenly.

Owing to an alarm made by a confused woman, the Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the largest loan company in St. Paul, Minnesota, made a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors. There was also a run on the neighboring bank—the Farmers' and Merchants'—which closed its doors. Both banks will probably be all right soon.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States convened at Washington, D. C., on Thursday of last week, the 105th gathering since its organization. Dr. Willis G. Craig, President of McCormick Theological Seminary, was elected Moderator on the first ballot.

Severe storms of wind and rain, beginning Monday, wrought great damage at the East and caused loss of life on the lakes. Northeastern Ohio and Northwestern Pennsylvania suffered terribly from floods. Rain fell for sixty hours in Western Pennsylvania, causing rivers and creeks to overflow, with great loss of property, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Titusville and other towns were inundated. Trains had to be abandoned; great manufactories were damaged, bridges destroyed, and general devastation prevailed. Boats were wrecked and fourteen lives were lost on lakes Erie and Huron.

The floating debt of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's Brooklyn Tabernacle has been settled, and he will remain as its pastor.

Naval commanders in foreign ports dread to grant shore leave to their sailors. The four British ships have lost 180 men in New York. Deserters from most of the other ships of the foreign squadrons are also reported. It is difficult to arrest deserters on American soil. The war of 1812 settled that.

Edie Hickman, an old Negress, is an ex-slave, and has brought suit against her master, Joseph Hickman, of Cooper county, for $5 a month wages as a family domestic for twenty-four years, during which time she claims to have been kept in ignorance of her emancipation. The suit was instituted in 1889 for $1,400 and resulted in a judgment in her favor for $700. Defendant appealed to the Kansas City Court of Appeals, which remanded the case to the Circuit Court, which now renders a decision for the defendant. A motion for a new trial has been filed and public sentiment is in favor of the old Negress, who has toiled for her master for a quarter of a century without remuneration.

Forest fires are destroying immense amounts of property in Northeastern Michigan, and lives are reported lost. At Sands, a lumber camp, ten men perished; near Tustin a mother and two children were burned to death.

Pine woods fires in Northern Wisconsin have wiped out the town of Bryant, and other localities have suffered severely, causing great losses in property and rendering hundreds homeless.

The Blaine Memorial association, at Augusta, Me., proposes to build a monument to James G. Blaine, but it will accept no contributions from outside the State except from those who are natives of Maine.

At St. Louis a resolution was introduced by a Chicago delegate to the International Horseshoers' convention asking that a boycott be declared against Armour & Co., for refusing to grant ten hours' pay for nine hours' work. The resolution was referred to the grievance committee.

FOREIGN.

More Australian banks have failed the Bank of North Queensland; the Queensland National Bank, and the Commercial Banking Co., of Sydney, involving their branches and embarrassing some of their corresponding bankers. The assets, and especially the liabilities, are large. The deposits in the Queensland National Bank last December amounted to £8,500,000, one-half from Great Britain. The subscribed capital is £15,000,000, of which one-half was paid up, and a reserve fund of £485,000 was claimed. The bank has a branch in Sydney, New South Wales, and its connection extended to other places in Australia.

The drought of the last two months has caused a great loss of farm and market garden products in the south of England. Grain, vegetable and fruit crops are withering throughout wide strips of country. A plague of caterpillars is destroying the leaves, blossoms, and small fruit in the apple and pear orchards. In Hampshire, Devonshire, and Cornwall streams are drying up and springs are running low.

The coming papal consistory at Rome will certainly be held in the first week in June, and probably five new cardinals will be named by the pope.

The City of Melbourne Bank (Australia) has suspended, owing depositors over $20,000.

A London dispatch reports that Le Caron, the famous British spy and detective, is dying.

Clean your Straw Hat with Pearline.

Directions.

First brush out all the dirt possible. Then, with a sponge, wash the hat with the ordinary Pearline solution (in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a pail of water.) Steam it well over the nozzle of a kettle; rinse well with sponge and warm water; press into shape, and dry.

You can do all this at home at a cost of less than one penny. It's simple enough, if you have Pearline—but, with Pearline, every kind of washing and cleaning is simple.

Directions for the easiest way, on every package.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, do the honest thing—send it back. 341 JAMES PYLE, New York.

An interesting letter from Rev. J. P. Stoddard and several other matters of more or less importance are crowded out of this number of the Cynosure. They will probably appear next week.

The Women's Congress, the Women's Press Association and the National Editorial Convention, in session here last week, discussed problems relating to their various interests with intense earnestness and wonderful volubility.

The Presbyterian General Assembly at Washington is trying Dr. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, for heresy. If all parties are not satisfied with its decision, the case may drag its slow and slimy trail through the secular courts for a term of years.

In relation to the recent proposal of the 850 operators belonging to the order of Railway Telegraphers and employed by the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company (which was happily averted), Grand-chief Ramsay expressed himself as follows: "Although there are about 900 personally interested in this strike, there are 23,000 in the order, and I have the power to order them all out if necessary." We refer to this to indicate the tremendous evil of the one-man power when backed up with the obligations of a secret oath-bound organization.

A rather surprising article appeared in the Catholic Review for May 21, entitled: "Read the Bible," in which "the people, especially intelligent Catholics," are urged to do so. It is well known that the more liberal Catholics, in former times, shared in the common zeal that then existed for diffusing knowledge of the Scriptures; but though many versions have been prepared by Catholics, the Romish church has consistently maintained its opposition to the general circulation of the Scriptures without ecclesiastical comment. Witness the malignant letter to Catholics recently issued by the Bishop of Sinaloa, Mexico, which was printed in the Cynosure for May 18, 1893. It is only Protestant Bibles that Catholics may not read.

Considerable space has been given to the subject of the opening of the World's Fair gates on Sunday, in this issue; but it is because of the great interest which all true Christians feel in the sanctity of Sunday as the Lord's day. The reopening of the controversy has called forth strong and earnest protests from most Protestant churches and societies, and the decision of the management is looked upon as a species of anarchy, in support of which no Christian will desire to have a voice.

The recent visit of Rev. John G. Paton, the distinguished preacher among the natives of the New Hebrides, to the United States to induce our government to help in suppressing the traffic in fire-arms, intoxicating liquors and opium in the New Hebrides and other Pacific islands, is an event in which every true Christian ought to have an interest. As Rev. Dr. Cuyler expresses it: "Just think of it! A lot of converted cannibals begging a Christian government not to send them any more muskets and rum!" And again: "Ships sail from American ports with missionaries as passengers to Africa, and with thousands of gallons of rum in their cargo; heaven goes in the cabin, and hell goes in the ship's hold. How long will it take us to convert the heathen in this style?" Can a Christian nation suffer these things to be done without coming into judgment?

At the suggestion of a gentleman connected with the Christian at Work, eighteen religious newspapers have combined to advocate the same reform on the last week of each month for one year, beginning with the liquor problem this month. The other chosen topics are: The Public School, The Gambling Evil, Political Reform, The Separation of Church and State, Marriage and Divorce Laws, How to Reach and Help the Poor, The Problem of the Foreigner, Crime and Criminals, Industrial Reform, Municipal Reform, The Church and the Masses. This is undoubtedly a very commendable combination in a good cause. We regret, however, that they did not include in their discussions the flagrant evils of the secret, oath-bound lodge system, that great enemy of the state, the church and the family, which performs its anti-Christian work in the name of religion!

With reference to Miss Willard, Joseph Cook writes to the Christian Statesman that, as he expected, she "is meeting with phenomenal success in England and Scotland. Her presence is greatly needed in this country to organize a protest against rumselling at the World's Fair, but we believe that her present career will be estimated, in cool retrospect, as one of the most fruitful, as it certainly is one of the most laborious periods of her crowded and often overtasked life. She is to return so as to be present at the World's Congresses held in connection with the Columbian Exposition. It is already announced in the Union Signal that in about two years Miss Willard and Lady Somerset expect to make a tour of the world together and present a petition, already of unprecedented length and weight, for prohibition of the traffic in alcohol and narcotics to the representatives of all the prominent governments of the earth."

A new labor society, to be composed wholly of railroad employes, and designed to take the place of all the various railway labor organizations, is proposed. Its name is to be the American Railway Union, and a meeting to perfect the details of its organization is to be held in this city, June 20. The country is to be divided into twelve districts, in which of each an organizer will establish subordinate unions. Large cities are to be selected for central meeting-places, and the society will endeavor to take in as many as possible of all railroad employes. We are told, but can hardly believe, that it is not to be "a secret, oath-bound," institution, but to admit its members upon their individual "word of honor." This is the pledge in the Odd-fellows' lodges, but it is never taken without the additional promise to "always conceal and never reveal," or words to that effect.

The Dunkards' National Assembly, last week, at Muncie, Ind., received from the Ohio Synod of the church a paper which reflected on secret societies, as follows:

WHEREAS, The great number of secret societies is multiplying in the land to the detriment of the family, the church and the civil government, and,

WHEREAS, There are reports in places of the brethren holding membership in secret societies, and,

WHEREAS, Some elders seem to be unwilling to take action in the matter, and are inclined rather to shield a member belonging to a secret order or is reported as so belonging, be it

Resolved, That if any elder refuses to act or delays action in the case then the complaining member shall reduce the complaint to writing, with one or more names signed, and shall present it to the elders, whose duty it will be to investigate the complaint, and also the unfaithfulness of the elder or elders for not investigating the report.

The paper was received, but not unanimously. At the next meeting of the Assembly, it is hoped that more wisdom and better counsels concerning the evils of secret societies in their relation to all Christian churches may result in a more specific and unanimous denunciation of them.

At the close of his lecture at Sharpsburg, Penn., last week, on "The Comparison of Christian and Masonic Religion," Rev W. B. Stoddard was attacked by an infuriated Mason named Steel, who did not attempt to meet Bro. S.'s statements with argument, but with abusive language. The Pittsburgh Post of last Friday gives the following report: "I would like to ask the speaker if he is a minister," he said. Mr. Stoddard replied that he was. "Then why don't you stick to preaching?" asked Mr. Steel. Half the audience clapped their hands, and a man in the back of the room cheered. This encouraged Mr. Steel, and he continued: "What is it your business whether I or this whole community belong to secret societies? You attend to your business and we'll attend to ours." The crowd cheered again. A voice said "That's good." Then an Odd-fellow yelled out: "Why not mention some of the good which secret societies do?" Mr. Stoddard asked that persons refrain from applause. The crowd cheered and jeered in his face, and he closed the meeting with a prayer, which was interrupted by the audience leaving. After the meeting Mr. Steel was tendered an ovation on the street. He made an address in which he denounced Mr. Stoddard."

PENTECOSTAL DRINKING.

BY REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN.

Dr. Rainsford's demand for Christian saloons, on the ground that the Bible does not condemn the use, but only the abuse, of wine, requires a re-examination of the Scripture teachings on the subject. This is the more requisite since changes in the English language materially affect the meaning expressed by the translators. Thus Webster's International Dictionary says that "drunken is now rarely used except as a verbal adjective in the sense of habitually intoxicated". But our English Bibles constantly use "drunken" as part of the verb "to drink," and it is often understood as expressing intoxication when the text has no such idea.

Acts 2:13-15 is a case in point. The scoffing

Jews said of those who spake with tongues at the pentecostal outpouring of the Spirit, "They are filled with new wine;" and Peter replied, "They are not drunken, as ye suppose."

1. Notice here the scoffers' charge. They say, "Filled with glukous". The grammarians tell us that the verb here translated "filled" has no reference to drink; it denotes simple fullness and gives no hint of intoxication. "Glukous" is a Greek noun that occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. Liddell & Scott give its meaning as: "Latin mustum, must, i. e., sweet new wine". Charles Anthon, L.L.D., the eminent professor in Columbia College, New York, in his edition of Horace, gives an excursus on ancient wines. On pages 684 and 685 he describes glukous as grape juice that exuded before the grapes were subjected to the press, and was kept in an unfermented state. M'Clintock & Strong's Encyclopædia says: "The name itself is not conclusive as to its being an unfermented liquor... It might have been applied, just as mustum was by the Romans, to wine that had been preserved for about a year in an unfermented state." Hackett, on Acts, quotes Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman antiquities as authority, and says: "Glukous designated properly the sweet, unfermented juice of the grape; but it was applied also to old wine preserved in its original state. The ancients had various ways of arresting fermentation. One of them, in use among Greeks and Romans, was this: An amphora was taken and coated with pitch within and without; it was filled with mustum livivum, i. e., the juice before the grapes had been fully trodden, and was corked so as to be perfectly air-tight. It was then immersed in a tank of cold, fresh water, or buried in wet sand, and allowed to remain for six weeks or two months. The contents, after this process, were found to remain unfermented for a year."

If the scoffers supposed the apostles were intoxicated, their use of this mild phrase, instead of the common and familiar one for that state, is inexplicable, as they did not say "drunken with wine". It is evident that this gross charge was not supposable; and certainly the manifestations did not in any wise appear like "drunkenness". But the words they used, denoting only the innocent excitement of a sober festal occasion, were a plausible explanation of the pentecostal phenomena. The idea is still current in the common phrase, "after dinner-eloquence".

2. Notice Peter's denial. "These are not drunken." The word translated "drunken" is not the verbal adjective that means intoxicated; neither is it the past participle nor the passive voice, which in early English would be so translated; but it is the active verb in the indicative present. Literally Peter said: Ou houtoi methousin, i. e., These are not drinking. He mentions no drink; yet he uses a word that sometimes occurs in connection with intoxication, but means only to drink freely, as the revisers translate it in John 2:10. It is translated in Gen. 43:34, "were merry"; in Ps. 36:8, "abundantly satisfied"; and in Song 5:1, "drink abundantly". In these instances it cannot mean intoxication, and its Bible sense is limited to social feasting. But whatever may have been the accusation, whether social drinking or drunkenness—Peter's denial is stronger in this sense of his words than in the other. For to say "they are not drunken" denies only excessive drinking; but "they are not drinking" denies even the taste of drink. The connection, as we shall now see, confirms the translation that Peter denied, not drunkenness, but drinking, of any kind or degree.

3. Notice Peter's plea: "Seeing it is but the third hour of the day." This would be 9 A. M. in our reckoning. Hackett says: "This was the first hour of public prayer, at which time the morning sacrifice was offered in the temple. During their festival the Jews considered it unlawful to take food earlier than this, still more to drink wine." Alford says: "The first hour of prayer, before which no pious Jew might eat or drink." Was it customary for pious Jews to get "drunk" after the morning prayer? Would the drunkard's plea that it was only 9 A. M. settle the question of his sobriety? Drunkards to-day must have their morning dram; and Isaiah 5:11 says that "they rise early to follow strong drink". Drunkards ever say, "When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again;" they stop at no times; their orgies are at any and every hour. This plea would only be good for sober men of regular habits; and Peter's use of it implies that the disciples were not suspected of drunkenness, but were known to be orderly observers of religious rites. Peter's plea claims that they were observing an absolute fast, and had taken neither food nor drink, and therefore that what was witnessed was not the result of social drinking.

4. Notice Peter's explanation. He ascribes the speaking with tongues to the Holy Spirit as promised by the Prophet Joel. To compare such utterances to those of a "drunken" man is a blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, which is not in the words of the scoffers; and for Peter to impute to them what they did not utter would be false dealing with them, with the disciples, and with the Holy Spirit. Intoxicants are sometimes sought as an inspiration to speech; but when used to intoxication they stupefy the mind, thicken the tongue and inspire silliness and sleep instead of eloquence. There is no comparison between spirituous and spiritual fullness, but absolute opposition and dissimilitude; they cannot be mistaken for each other. The holy fervor and intelligent enthusiasm imparted to the apostles by the Holy Spirit were marveled at, and the mighty works of God spoken in every known tongue thrilled all the hearers; but the suggestion of "drunkenness" as the cause exalts that damning vice as well as degrades the Holy Spirit. To have classed the pentecostal utterances with those of drunken revelers would have refuted itself; its falsity would have been seen in the radiant looks, the noble bearing and the seraphic words of the Spirit-filled company. The "speaking with tongues as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance" might have been plausibly attributed to the quickened faculties of the sober and devout men, stimulated by social festivities and the wine that cheers without inebriation. It was only to this plausible sneer that Peter made reply; and his answer was not the evasive one,—"they are not drunken"; but it is the complete refutation: These are not drinking, as ye suppose; but to this hour they have tasted neither food nor drink.

It is time the word "drunken" should cease to cast its dark shadow upon the pentecostal scene, and especially so when it is used to justify the Christian use of intoxicating wine and the opening of Christian saloons!

HOME REFORMS AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

BY REV. H. W. JOHNSTON, OF AFRICA.

Bro. M. A. Gault stated, in an article in the Cynosure of January 19, "I cannot but feel that it is a part of Satan's scheme to try to silence the testimony of reform churches by diverting their interest out of the channel of reform work into the channel of foreign missions." Bro. Gault believes in foreign missions, but thinks that the work belongs to the popular churches. Now the writer is a member of a "reform" church, has spent several years in special lines of reform work, yet is now in the foreign field and is seeking to stir up the home church to greater effort in that direction; hence it is not strange that he sees the matter from another standpoint.

If our reform churches were merely societies organized for the special purpose of doing reform work and combatting special evils, Bro. Gault might be correct. For instance, the N. C. A. was organized to combat secret societies. For it to embark in foreign missions would be a mistake. But a church, if it is a church, no matter how few its communicants, stands on a wider basis—a basis as wide as God's purpose in establishing it. At present we only require those coming into our communions to forsake the world and its sins. They may, or may not, be especially pressed to engage in reform work, but, primarily, are seeking a pure church home, where holiness unto the Lord is the watchword. Now, if our churches become merely associations for reform work, only such will gravitate toward our communions as are impressed with the primary importance of the special reforms that we champion. To the contrary, our churches ought to be the natural home of anyone who has swung clear for God, no matter what line of Christian activity engages his efforts. Again, if we do no foreign mission work, then the children of our churches must either ignore God's call to the foreign field, in case they have one, or go from us to what we consider sin-fellowshipping churches, to reach the foreign field.

If we broaden our activities, God will enlarge us. If we narrow our field of labor, we will remain weak. If we run all to reform, we will dry up and wither away. Nothing can keep alive a reform church but the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost will abide with us in greater or less power, according to our faithfulness to the mission of a church, not least of which is to carry the Gospel to the unevangelized of the earth. Let us have an all-around aggressive movement on the part of our reform churches, and neglect no line of practical usefulness. I don't think the home work is weakened by the foreign work.

Besides, the proposition to leave the mission work to the popular churches is open to protest. Just inasmuch as these churches are in need of reformation at home, they are liable to be found wanting abroad. It is a mistake to suppose that people of a low spirituality will do for the heathen. Heathendom needs the purest and brightest that Christendom can give. Send them Paul and Barnabas. Missionaries sent out by the popular churches are often better than the churches that send them, but not always. Hence it has happened that unregenerate men have been sent to teach the heathen regeneration; that tobacco-users have been sent to teach the heathen to cast away all filthiness; wine-bibbers, to teach them temperance; scouters of holiness, to teach holiness; secret society men, to rebuke works of darkness; men of violent passions, to set forth the meek and lowly Jesus. We will not be able to get perfect men, perhaps; but Christendom ought at least to give heathendom clean men.

Let not the reform work be curtailed one whit. Nor will it be; for the reform churches will prosper and widen their influence just in proportion as they fulfill their measure of aggressive, worldwide Christian activity.

THE SECRET DOMAIN.

(Extracts from Exchanges.)

The New York Tribune, of May 16, contained the report of a sermon preached on the preceding evening, at the Church of the Annunciation in that city, by Rev. "Father" Sherman, the priestly son of Gen. Wm. Tecumseh Sherman. In the course of his sermon he referred to several secret orders. First, he mentioned "the Orangemen of Canada and Ireland, whom he pictured as being untrue to the principles of manhood, their country and religion. He then produced a manual of the secret rites and services of the 'Junior Order of American Workingmen,' from which he read the initiatory service. This service, according to his reading, caused the novice to swear allegiance to a constitution, the principal object of which was the suppression of the Jesuits. The service included the use of a Jesuit in a cowl. And, continuing, Father Sherman denounced all secret societies in unmeasured terms."

The reader will remember that the Jesuits (or the "Society of Jesus") is itself one of the most unsavory secret societies on the globe, so corrupt in principles and practices as to cause several European nations to cast them out as inimical to the best and purest elements of human government.

From Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa there are reported frequent instances of dastardly insults offered to unoffending Catholics at the instance of the secret, oath-bound association called the "American Protective Association," popularly known as the "A. P. A." A large proportion of the strength of the A. P. A. has been declared to be composed of foreigners, many of them not even citizens. That may be, but among the native-born element in the movement there is no doubt that the Methodists predominate.—Catholic Review.

The "Junior Order of Workingmen," like the Freemasons, the socialists, and some of the labor organizations, are making extraordinary efforts, under false pretences, to attract Catholics into their societies; for they well know that, when they are initiated, they rarely abandon them, and, as in Europe, often become the most cruel persecutors of the Catholic church.—Catholic Review.

The Orangemen of Ireland are the only people on the face of the earth who have ever celebrated the anniversary of the conquest and enslavement of their country by a foreign prince, and continue to carry his standard and wear his colors as evidence of their hatred for the Catholics whom they have driven from their homes. They are not Irishmen nor Englishmen, nor are they loyal British subjects.—Ibid.

If Father Sherman "denounced all secret societies in unmeasured terms," it was because they have sworn allegiance to a "higher law" and cannot be true to the Constitution of the United States, nor to the laws governing any other State. For this reason the secret societies are constantly fomenting revolution. This they do by pretending sympathy and friendship for working men, for the poor and the oppressed; but history has always shown that mobs and factions and revolutionists are the greatest of tyrants and the most implacable enemies of the people.—Ibid.

Witness the secret oath-bound labor organizations in this and other countries and their demonstrations against the lives and property of other persons.

The Lutheran Synod of Texas, at its recent session, adopted the following, among other theses:

As Evangelical Lutheran Christians we reject all mixing of creeds, confessions and churches by which existing distinctions are represented as inventions of men, or even as fraud of crafty men, by which either the doctrine of our church or even the essence of Christianity is surrendered.

If any associations whatsoever—be they public, liberal, be they secret—teach and uphold such doctrines as (a) do not recognize Jesus Christ; (b) consider the church of Jesus Christ as one sect among many; (c) consider an upright conduct as sufficient for the admission to life eternal; (d) intend a union of all churches and religions, but not on the foundation laid down by Jesus Christ; then we reject them as leading away from Christianity. Then we warn all members of our church from pollution of their Christianity by joining them. Then we admonish all who have been induced by misleading representations to join them that they consider this question in the light of God's Word, and that they leave all associations which can be proved to have and hold such doctrines, aims and objects.

The fact that an association is secret is not by itself immoral, but can easily be misused, and has been misused. It is a question whether the good designs connected with so-called secret "fraternities" cannot be attained in like manner, in a manner which is not endangered by such misuse.

We must distinguish (a) between such fraternities which have not merely any objects of society or mutual aid, but have the above (Theses 6) mentioned religious tendency; (b) and between such fraternities whose end and aim is not a religious one.

A letter from Ohio, printed in the Deseret (Utah) Weekly, says: "The social condition of society and business in Columbus seems to be confined to the different lodges. Each one sustains its own members, and very little patronage is given to an outsider."

To offset the secret society organized by the liquor men, for the purpose of repealing and defeating prohibitory laws, a secret organization called the Anti-Saloon Army, whose object is to unite all opponents of the saloon for the overthrow of the liquor traffic, has been organized at Clinton, Mo. The leaders propose to organize all persons in every school district throughout the land, of the age of sixteen and over, who are opposed to the sale of intoxicants.—Pacific Ensign.

In order to more easily drill the Irish Catholics, and prepare them for the impending conflict, the Jesuits have organized them into a great number of secret societies, the principal of which are: Ancient Order of Hibernians; Irish-American Society; Knights of St. Patrick; St. Patrick's Cadets; Apostles of Liberty; Benevolent Sons of the Emerald Isle, etc. Almost all these secret associations are military ones, well-drilled and officered by army experts, and number 700,000 men.

RUFUS SMITH, OF WHEATON, ILLINOIS,

STILL IN FRONT OF THE BATTLE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please let me say a few words to cheer God's workers in all the world:

Beloved—Being at the front of God's great battle against all sin for more than fifty years, by the order of our great Commander, I want to give you a few items of my experience, to help you in this conflict. I am furnished with what I call "a double-barrel Gospel gun".

I get all my ammunition direct from God. For wadding I use, as may be seen in Romans 1:8, "the faith and love of saints". I have only time to name one in this letter. I found, last November, in Syracuse, N. Y., a brother by the name of H. B. Andrews, who has many stores, teams, and many, very many worldly cares. I worked with him in the Rescue Mission, in his city, and enjoyed greatly his "saints' room" and bed, in his own house. I saw what he was doing for the mission there, and the Master's work in general, as well as in many particular cases. I saw his Gospel wagon, mission house, etc.

I will now say that in the few days which I spent, last November, with him and his, and his dear workers who labor with him, I got there, and brought from there, more Gospel wadding than I have found in the last twenty-five years in the United States and Canada. He was not satisfied with doing so little for the Master; hence he has started what I look upon as the great, grand and glorious movement of America: the following clipping from a Syracuse (N. Y.) newspaper.

GOOD NEWS AFLOAT.

CARRYING THE GOSPEL TO CANALERS.

Last night the new Rescue Mission boat, the Good News, was thrown open for the inspection of friends of the work. It was moored in the Oswego canal near the North Salina street hoist bridge, and was conveniently reached. The venture is certainly unique. The Rescue Mission on wheels has for the last few years been a familiar sight about the city, and now there is to be a Rescue Mission afloat. At the back of the enterprise is the mission's old friend, Harlow B. Andrews. He bought the canal boat of Signor Sautelle, and fitted it up at his own expense.

The arrangements of the boat are very convenient. There is in the cabin a meeting room, emblazoned with Scriptural texts and homilies, capable of seating about seventy-five people comfortably. An organ and a Bible stand make up the chapel-like interior. The seats are comfortable camp chairs. At the stern of the boat is a kitchen, with a range and a complete outfit of crockery and utensils and all the conveniences for cooking, and at the prow is a comfortable little parlor and lavatory. It contains a folding bed and easy chairs, and is quite homelike. The upper deck will seat 150 people and will be used for open-air meetings.

Mr. Gibbud is a man of very original ideas, and inasmuch as the craft is to be under his direction (he calls himself Commodore Gibbud now) he means to carry out some of his new schemes. One of them is to advertise by means of fire works. For instance, when the boat draws up to a village landing with a flourish, he will let off three Chinese bombs and a lot of red fire. The natives will rush down to see what the strange commotion is about, and they will at once be lassoed, dragged into the boat and assaulted with Gospel hymns, metaphorically, of course. Another contrivance Mr. Gibbud has gotten up is something to work canal boats on the fly. It is nothing more or less than a long fish pole, on the end of which will be tied a bundle of tracts. Thus the canalers will be supplied with a choice and varied assortment of Sunday reading.

The Good News runs no danger of being taken for a circus boat except by the illiterate, for her sides are covered with texts and warnings in big letters. She will cruise between Buffalo and Albany as long as the canal is open and meetings will be held wherever there is an opportunity. During the day the missionaries will make calls among the non-church going classes doing regular Christian work and they will hold probably two meetings a day during the entire year. In the winter the boat will be tied at the packet dock in this city, or in some other convenient locality.

Although Mr. Gibbud has the boat under his direction he will not be on it during its cruises. For this work Mr. and Mrs. Charles MacClinchy, of New York, have been engaged to come here. Mr. MacClinchy left a lucrative place in a wholesale boot and shoe store to enter upon this phase of evangelical enterprise, and he comes with no stated salary, relying upon the Lord to keep him going. Incidentally church people will be expected to support the scheme through a finance committee different from that which runs the treasury of the Rescue Mission. It will also be expected that the ravens and farmers along the canal will drop in a bushel of potatoes and other provisions now and then. The missionaries do not ask for this assistance, they simply hope for it, and without a doubt if the farmers understand the deserving character of the work they will keep the Good News well supplied. Mr. and Mrs. MacClinchy will be assisted by Sanford Van Luxen of this city, a convert of the Rescue Mission and an efficient worker. Mr. Van Luxen leaves a position in the Chilled Plow works to go with the Good News. The idea is said to be entirely new in this country, though something like it has been tried successfully by the McAll Mission in France. The promoters of the local enterprise have all possible faith in the success of it, and the missionaries start out with plenty of enthusiasm over the work. The boat will start about the first of next month, and between now and then a few meetings will be held in it here in this city to get the work well formulated.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Standard, May 12.

PERSECUTION OF A BIBLE-DISTRIBUTOR.

In the Cynosure for May 18 was given the story, in part, of the persecution which a Protestant Bible distributor, our old friend and correspondent, B. B. Blachly, has recently undergone in the State of Sinaloa, Mexico, from the papists.

This week we are enabled to present additional particulars of Mr. Blachly's trials in that district.

Regarding the Bible work in Mexico, Mr. Blachly says: "The American Bible Society has twenty-eight or thirty men distributing Bibles, and in 1891 we, the colporteurs, put in circulation 17,000 volumes. In the first six months of 1892, more money was taken in, through sales of Bibles, than in the whole of 1890 or 1891, showing the great increase of desire to possess the Word."

"Since my last letter to you, I have been permitted to visit a great many towns. I have seen girls crying for the Bible, women pawning their flat-irons, selling their clothes, and going without food and water, and Catholics giving up their saints and images, in order to buy the Word. This shows the great hungering there is in the hearts of these people for opportunities to read the Bible and get into the light."

"In Nagales, Arizona, in four or five days, I disposed of more than sixty Bibles and Testaments. In Tucson, Arizona, we sold ninety-two Bibles and ninety-nine Testaments; also, at Fairbank, Tombstone and Bisbee, we had grand sales of Bibles and Testaments—all in the Spanish language, as I carry none other."

"In Juarez, Mexico, across the river from El Paso, Texas, I disposed of forty-nine Bibles and thirteen Testaments within three days. On the first day I was put into jail and kept there from 5 o'clock in the evening until 11 o'clock the next day, and also fined five dollars."

"I was arrested because I refused to take back Bibles that I had sold and refund the money. But the people are now, everywhere, getting their eyes open as to the desires of the priests to keep them in ignorance of the truth. 'The entrance of thy Word giveth light,' Psa. 119: 130.

"We shall go down the big Grand River to the Gulf, to do Bible-work among the Mexicans. The field is great, and the men to work it are very, very few. How many readers would go without food in order to obtain a Bible?"

Bro. Blachly writes from a standpoint where he can plainly see the necessity and importance of his work among these benighted Mexicans, and, feeling the need of it, appeals earnestly for funds to enlarge it.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A Girls' Brigade.—Paderevski.—A Legislature adjourns to witness a base ball game.—Smoking on the cars.—A monument of folly.—The Borden case.

"Every man has his characteristic temptation, as he has his own handwriting," said Prof. Drummond in the Amherst College church on a recent Sunday. This is probably as true as the analogous fact in nature that every plant has its particular parasite. I am not quite sure that Prof. Drummond is in all respects a safe teacher to follow, but the beauty of what he says is its suggestiveness. And it is always the suggestive writer who is the most helpful to thoughtful people. We grow into nobler living, higher thinking, and more complete consecration, as much by what we reject as what we choose. One of his mistakes is his endorsement of the Boys' Brigade. "Over a thousand young warriors in line. The parade reviewed by Governor Russel." This is the heading, in big capitals, of a column which appeared lately in the papers descriptive of the annual field-day at Malden, Mass., of the high-school boys, with its roll of life and drum, and "lines of steel bayonets gleaming over youthful shoulders." This inculcation of the war spirit in school-boys is bad enough, but in Sunday-school scholars it is a hundred-fold more objectionable. Then what shall we say to the idea of a Girls' Brigade, advocated by a Winsted pastor in a recent number of the Congregationalist? "After presenting the claims of the Boys' clubs to a congregation recently," says Mr. Kinney, "I was surprised to find the girls more interested than the boys, and for the second time in my pastoral experience I was asked to form a permanent military company for girls." He argues that a drill is better than the dance, and adds: "Dancing is of course prohibited under church auspices—what else is there for fun for exemplary young ladies except sewing circles, mission bands, speaking in meeting and cooking for sociables?" Young people must have fun, and the church is bound to provide it! This is the new Gospel not according to St. Paul. What would he have said to a company of young Amazons as an adjunct to the Corinthian or Philipian churches? There is still another side to the question. Perhaps, in the abstract, it is no worse for a girl to drill and practice military tactics than a boy; but as we all think, reasonably or not, that a cigar between the lips of a woman looks worse than if she was of the opposite sex, so to old-fashioned conservatives, like the writer, the idea of a military drill for girls seems utterly opposed to that feminine delicacy which is a woman's true charm. Mr. Kinney would make the Girls' Brigade a tentacle to keep the so-called "giddy girls" in the Sunday-school; but, in fact, these are the kind with whom anything masculine in training should be eschewed; who rather need an especial education on the feminine side. Why intensify the coarser part of their nature by this Amazonian kind of training?

Paderevski thinks he can live in peace and quiet for some time on the gross receipts from his American trip—$180,000. Most of us could manage to live on even a little less. It is singular that the very nationalities which supply us with our lowest type of the foreign immigrant are the ones that send these artists to our shores who reap such golden harvests from the American public. Things have changed since what are known as "the province lands," on the tip-end of Cape Cod, were bought of Indian Samson for six brass kettles, with a few "sundries" thrown in; when one pound of tea in a family (and they had big families in colonial times) would answer for a year's consumption; and spinning-wheels instead of sewing machines, "hummed in the house of the farmer and filled the chambers with music." The idea of such a large sum leaving the country to line the pockets of one man would have fairly electrified our honest forefathers; but perhaps some other things in our progressive age would have amazed them just as much; as, for instance, the great and General Court of Massachusetts adjourning one afternoon, as they did a few days since, unmindful of the adage which puts business before pleasure, and all to witness a baseball game! I am glad to say that a few of the members protested, but they were in a very decided minority. When a few women like Mrs. Livermore and others of that ilk get into the Legislature, will they be any check on these frivolous tendencies of the sterner sex, I wonder? I am glad to see that there will be no wine served in the State building at the World's Fair on Massachusetts Day, June 17. The Bay State honors herself as well as Chicago by the omission.

The managers of the Old Colony Railroad have refused, very properly and righteously, to transport drunken men who take the late trains from Boston for their homes in the suburban towns, to the discomfort and disgust of all decent passengers who are obliged to put up with their company and behavior. This action should be followed by all the railroads, and it would be if their patrons demanded it. We are ourselves to blame for many of the ills we so quietly endure. Another "great and sore evil under the sun" is the smoking nuisance on board the electric cars. The Boston W. C. T. U. is moving in this matter, under the leadership of its noble president, Mrs. Gordon. In a recent address before the county convention, she made a strong plea for the rights of the non-smokers, who form the large majority of the traveling public. Though smokers are allowed only the three rear seats, the reversing of the cars on each trip practically gives them six seats instead of three. The petitions which are being circulated for the abatement of this nuisance ought to find many signers. One accident, at least, caused by the "deadly electric," which happened to a celebrated surgeon of Boston a few months ago, would never have occurred if the West End Company had made it a rule to forbid smoking on its cars the year through. I can vouch for the correctness of the story, having just heard it from his own lips. He and his wife had just boarded an open electric, but found themselves in the seats reserved for smokers, which were too filthy to sit down in. The doctor moved along on the outside in quest of others more agreeable, and in doing so was struck by another car, which inflicted on him severe injuries, both internal and external, from which he will probably never fully recover. This man has suffered tortures and been obliged temporarily to drop a lucrative practice, all because the tobacco-fiend has thus been allowed to invade the rights of the traveling public.

The Hopkins-Searles palace, or castle, or whatever that nondescript structure in Great Barrington may be called, is now a vast, deserted pile. It stands on the banks of the Housatonic, a thing of gables, and towers, and walls, and mullioned windows, built with the sole object to display the wealth of its owner. It is neither a public building nor a home; it has no history to make it venerable. It stands a monument of human folly. What might have been done to evangelize the world had the money employed to erect this useless pile been given to God and humanity; and what an imperishable name she might have gained who will now be remembered for a few brief years as an eccentric old woman, and then be lost in the deep sea of oblivion as completely as if she had been a penniless town pauper. I believe that a vast overgrown fortune works in the brain of the owner a kind of slow madness, analogous to that which attends the possession of unlimited power. American life is full of unnatural conditions, and this concentration of wealth in the hands of a few is one of the most menacing. Money will buy all things, even his forfeited citizenship for one who has been a State prison convict, as in the case of Stokes, who killed Jim Fisk, the Erie king of malodorous memory, who, beginning his career as a tin-peddler among the New Hampshire hills, was certainly as good or bad a specimen of nouveaux riches as could be cited. Why did Grover Cleveland restore to this homicide his citizen's privileges? Simply because he was wealthy and possessed political influence that would be of value to Cleveland as an aspirant for a second presidential term. Nobody supposes for a moment that if Stokes had been a poor man he would have been thus reinstated in his justly forfeited political rights.

The Borden case will soon be on the docket, and behooves all intelligent Protestants to follow it closely, praying, meanwhile, that the machinations of Rome, so plainly visible, will be brought to confusion.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 24, 1893.

The proceedings of the Presbyterian General Assembly, which has been in session here since last Thursday, and which, from present indications, will remain in session for at least a week longer, are growing decidedly interesting, not only to Presbyterians, but to the religious public. It has spoken in thunder-tones on the relation of the temperance question to the church, and has adopted a strong resolution in opposition to the proposed opening of the World's Fair on Sunday.

The Assembly has also decided, by adopting the report of its judicial committee, to hear the appeal from the New York Presbytery in the now celebrated case of Dr. Briggs, which has probably attracted more attention throughout the entire religious world than any similar case ever did before, and the trial, now begun, whatever may be its result, will probably continue to be talked about long after all those who take part in it are dead. It is already evident that it is to be bitterly—much too bitterly, many conservative people think—contested on both sides. It seems to be conceded that the Assembly, as it stands to-day, is anti-Briggs by a considerable majority; but Dr. Briggs, who will conduct his own defense, and his friends, appear to be confident that their arguments will change the opinions of many who are now wavering, if not actually against Dr. Briggs. There is fear, in many cases openly spoken, that the result will be the withdrawal of many ministers, if not an actual split in the church. There are hot-headed men on both sides, and it is feared they will make trouble as the trial proceeds. Some of them have already done so. Many earnest prayers are being offered for divine assistance to do the right thing, and, as the "prayer of the righteous availeth much," let us all hope that the Lord will direct the utterances of those who take part in this trial as well as their votes when the time arrives for the Assembly to render its verdict, from which there will be no earthly appeal.

While the question of home missions was before the Assembly, Dr. Roberts, secretary of the Board of Home Missions, in urging the necessity for raising and spending more money in extending and pushing the work, made a statement which it seems to me is of vital interest to every Protestant church in America. He said that lack of money was largely the cause of the fact that beyond the Mississippi river Protestants were outnumbered by Roman Catholics ten to one. Surely that is something to think about.

Secretary Smith intends, it is announced, to place at least two-thirds of the Indian agencies under control of army officers, and will only appoint civilian agents in places where the Indians are in an advanced stage of civilization.

Attorney-General Olney is fully determined to use all of the judicial machinery of the government to prevent the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, or to close the gates if they are opened on that day; but opinion is divided as to whether the judicial machinery will be sufficient. If the matter be taken to the courts after the gates are opened on Sunday, the case may not be finally decided until after the Exposition is over.

Assistant Secretary Curtis, of the Treasury Department, has been and deserves to be highly commended for the stand which he has taken against appointing liquor-dealers to office. An applicant for a position under him, accompanied by his member of Congress, called on Mr. Curtis to ask him to recommend his appointment to Secretary Carlisle, and the following conversation is said to have taken place between Mr. Curtis and the Congressman: Mr. C.—"Is it true this man is a saloon-keeper?" Congressman.—"Yes; what has that to do with his getting this office?" Mr. C.—"Just this: I will not recommend the appointment of a saloon-keeper."

The Spanish Infanta Eulalia, who is the personal representative of the Queen Regent of Spain, and her suite, have been in Washington since last Friday as official guests of the United States. To-morrow they go to New York, and from there to the World's Fair. Last night President and Mrs. Cleveland gave a state dinner in her honor.

REFORM NEWS.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 25, 1893.

According to call, the executive committee of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A., met at the office of Mr. Corry, 95 Fifth Ave., Pittsburgh, yesterday.

Rev. D. C. Martin presided. Rev. R. C. Wylie was appointed secretary.

A report of progress in the State work was presented by Rev. W. B. Stoddard, the Eastern agent.

A discussion of ways and means to further the cause in the State occupied considerable time. All felt that the time for strong and united effort is at hand.

The committee authorized the publication of a circular setting forth what has been accomplished, and a request for further aid from friends of the cause in the State. It was suggested that this circular should be prepared in time for distribution in the early fall campaign.

The outlook for the anti-secrecy reform in Pennsylvania is bright.

All contributions should be sent to Rev. R. C. Wylie, Treasurer, Wilkesburg, Pa.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A statement that I have often heard has been made regarding my work during the past week. Though foolish, it is often spoken by those who should know better.

A gentleman said that if I would leave the lodges alone, and seek to save souls, I might accomplish much more good. The thought is to get people converted and they will be all right. When a statement of this kind is made, it at once suggests the questions: What is conversion? How is it effected? No man ever converted another. No church ever converted a soul. It is not man's business, nor the church's business, to convert men. God uses men and churches to accomplish this end. How may they be used? In proclaiming the truth in the power of the Divine Spirit. To talk of "saving souls" without preaching the truth of God as opposed to error is simple nonsense. The business of the Christian and the Christian church is to exalt Christ, oppose all that opposes him, and he will do his own work in leading men to himself.

Last Sabbath was spent in this city. During the day I worshiped with friends in the Eighth Street Covenant church, Rev. D. McAllister, D.D., pastor.

In response to invitations, I addressed the Sabbath-school and took part in the services. Without request, the discussion at Sharpsburg, to-night, was spoken of, and friends were invited to attend. This discussion was started by the Doctor.

In response to an invitation he delivered the anniversary sermon for the Y. M. C. A. of that place. In speaking of the downward course of a young man several steps were mentioned. He broke his engagement with the girl whom he agreed to marry. He joined the Masons, etc. Though the allusion to Masonry was slight, it caused a sensation.

Masons are generally sensitive, and evidently afraid that their neighbors may find out their evil deeds. The matter was discussed in a private way, and our friend James Tibby was blamed for getting the Doctor to speak.

Mr. Tibby, in a manly way, proposed a discussion, and gave a challenge for one, but none was found willing to publicly advocate the Masonic side. [What to-night may bring I know not.] Mr. Tibby's next movement was to hire the Y. M. C. A. hall of the committee having it in charge. The meeting was then advertised in the papers and through the churches. The Y. M. C. A. directors learning of the purpose gathering, called a special meeting and voted that a discussion of the lodge question should not be allowed in their hall. As a reason for this action, it was argued that some might be alienated who would otherwise pay into their treasury. While they would get rent for the hall, this would not, in the directors' judgment, balance the last. Mr. Tibby, being a peaceable young man, hired another hall, and the discussion will be (D. V.) to-night.

I was glad, on Sabbath evening, to be able to help Dr. Littell, of the Second U. P. church in this city. It will be remembered that our convention two years ago was held in this church. The Doctor narrowly escaped having his house burned. He was glad to rest while I addressed his people Sabbath evening.

One of the pleasantest drives I have enjoyed for some time was over the hills and through the woods in the upper part of Beaver Co., Pa. My conveyance was kindly furnished by Rev. Mr. Patterson, of Darlington. He is an aged warrior in reforms. I found him slowly recovering from a severe sickness. May the Lord bless him.

Stopping at Beaver Falls, I found Dr. H. H. George and family at home. One cannot long converse with this honored man of God without feeling encouraged to press the battle on. When you want a man in the front ranks for sharp-shooting, call on Dr. George. An elocutionary exercise at the college was very entertaining. One not looking at the watch would scarcely have thought it eleven o'clock, when the exercises were brought to a close.

This being Commencement week at Geneva College, as would be expected, "All goes merry as a marriage bell."

Rev. Mr. Calvert, pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Sharpsburg, has invited me to fill his pulpit next Sabbath, as he is at the General Assembly meeting, at Monmouth, Ill.

REV. R. N. COUNTEE'S WORK IN TEXAS.

AUSTIN, Tex., May 20, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I last wrote you from Galveston ("the Island City"), Texas. There I did some effectual work, and the pastors, Rev. Messrs. A. Barbour, A. A. Hubbs, W. Terrell and E. Wright, publicly endorsed my services and have invited me to return to their city in July and hold services and deliver lectures during the entire month. If possible, I desire to do so. I also wrote you that I would go from there to Houston. I made about five talks in that city; but I was only invited to speak in one place the second time.

The situation beggars description. The cause of our Lord is suffering greatly in the hands of those who profess to be its friends. Policy-playing, the Louisiana Lottery, beer, gin and whisky-drinking, buying and selling on the Sabbath, etc., are indulged in by ministers and people. One minister took a flask from his pocket and very politely asked me if I drank, and urged me to take a little of his "the very best gin in the city". I preached the brother a sermon, and he did not attempt to drink any in my presence, but he did not throw the bottle away. I am told that if I dare say anything in a certain church, in which I am to speak, on the subject of rum, secret societies, or policy-playing, I will get hurt. I shall try it, and if there be any serious consequences you will learn of it.

It seems to me that the secret society influence has every thing its own way here. I have talked with several persons privately, as I conceive that much can be done in this way, and I have convinced one dear good brother of the error of his way.

Last Sunday I made two talks—one in the Baptist church, and one in a Methodist church, in each of which I condemned, and hurled my sentiments in unmeasured terms against, the evils of secret societies, rum, and other evils in our churches. You are no doubt aware of the fact that our people are very responsive in their service, and seldom fail to let you know that they endorse your preaching, by exclaiming "Amen! Praise the Lord!" and other methods which are peculiarly our own; but I got no endorsement in that way. They seemed to be dazed. When I had concluded my remarks, the preacher, or pastor, arose and said: "I had a good notion to ask this brother, while he was preaching, where he came from." They gave me no collection, nor did they invite me to come again.

I went from this church-house to another one. It was only 9:30 in the evening, and there I found a massive congregation, and a dear brother was preaching to them with all his power. I

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONSERVATIVE UNITED BRETHREN.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AT HUDSON, INDIANA.

HUDSON, Ind., May 23.

Last Sabbath Bishop Milton Wright, D.D., preached at the U. B. church; Bishop H. T. Barnaby, D.D., in the M. E. church; Bishop H. Floyd, D.D., in the German-Reformed church, and Bishop H. J. Beckers, D. D., in the Lake Valley church. There were also services in the U. B. and M. E. churches Sunday evening.

Monday was a time of rejoicing and devout thanksgiving over the reading of extracts from the full text of Judge Taft's decision on the famous church case now engaging the attention of the courts throughout the United States. This noted jurist has recently rendered a decision which occasions great rejoicing among the Radicals, or Conservatives, who have been so persistently denounced as seceders.

He holds that the church is a compact, having the constitution and confession as its seal; that the creation of a new or revised Confession of Faith and constitution was an often flagrant and avowed violation of the organized compact; that the identity of the church is with those who adhere to the original compact, and that those who adopt the new are seceders.

As to the famous case of Watson vs. Jones, the judge holds that while a church has the right to adjudicate matters of discipline, it cannot receive the sanction of the United States courts to justify revolution, the essential difference between this case and Watson vs. Jones being the matter of revolution in this case, and the existence of two general conferences; while in the case cited there was no division, but parties acknowledged the authority of the general conference of the church which adjudicated it. He holds that committee No. 6 was in itself a conspiracy against the church to overthrow its fundamental government. He holds that to make a lawful change in the constitution there should be a day appointed for the taking of the vote, and that full and ample notice should be given to each member. Of course such notice was not given.

It is just to say that this was a trial on demurrer, and the facts remain to be presented on issues in trial.

WILEY GENERAL HOSPITAL.

KUCHENG, China, April 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Herewith I send an account of the opening of Wiley Hospital, in which many of your readers will, I have no doubt, be interested. The Lord's work is progressing favorably in this mission.

This important event occurred March 23, 1893. The principal address was given by Rev. Nathan Sites, D. D., the senior member of the Foochow Mission. Remarks were made by others—native and foreign, and instrumental music was furnished by Miss Sites and by Mrs. M. C. Wilcox. Owing to the heavy rain, the attendance was smaller than was expected; yet a representative audience assembled, and the exercises were interesting and profitable.

In the course of his address Dr. Sites described his first visit to Kucheng, about twenty-eight years ago. He was the first missionary of any society to visit this city, and to him belongs the honor of opening missionary work in this beautiful part of the Fuhkien province. He also sketched the history of the work then begun, speaking of the opposition formerly manifested to the Gospel, especially in 1870, when the place of worship of the English Church Missionary Society, as well as our own, was demolished, and both missions were obliged to locate their headquarters in other parts of the city. But after a time a friendlier spirit began to be shown, and the work throughout this region has grown more and more prosperous, especially since foreign missionaries have made this city their residence. For instance, five years ago the Kucheng district had 372 members and probationers. At conference, last fall, 803 were reported—an increase of 431, or 113 per cent. But the opening of this new department of mission work will, we believe, help accelerate this rate of increase.

Peculiarly appropriate is the name chosen for the hospital by its superintendent and adopted by the board of managers of the missionary society at New York. Throughout the Methodist Episcopal Church the name of Bishop Wiley is "as ointment poured forth." As Rev. Isaac W. Wiley, M. D., he came to Foochow in 1851. His health failing, he returned to America in 1854. After serving the church as pastor, as president of Pennington Seminary and as editor of the Ladies' Repository, he was elected bishop in 1872. To the end of his life missionary affairs commanded a large share of his attention and sympathy. China was especially dear to him. Twice he revisited this empire in an official capacity. In 1877 he organized the Foochow Annual Conference. Returning in 1884, he was unable to preside over the conference, but during its sessions closed his earthly labors at Foochow, where all that was mortal awaits the resurrection morn.

Under the skillful superintendence of Dr. Gregory, the Wiley General Hospital—the first of the parent board in this province—can hardly fail to be a potent instrumentality for extending the Redeemer's kingdom. An earnest native preacher has been secured as chaplain, and the religious features of the work will receive careful attention.

As a rule, patients are expected to pay their own expenses while in the hospital. But many, who greatly need somewhat prolonged medical treatment, are too poor to do this. To meet the needs of such, it is proposed to provide a number of free beds (including food). The cost of one such bed is estimated at $20 per year, U. S. money. The native officials and gentry of this city will be asked to contribute for this purpose. But we also appeal to others, and especially to those who knew Bishop Wiley, to help in this laudable undertaking. Perhaps some one who reads these lines would like to endow a bed, so it, together with food, would be forever free to poor patients. This would require a sum sufficient to yield $20 per year interest. Are there not individuals or Sunday-schools that would contribute smaller amounts—say enough to provide for one or two free beds for a year at $20 each? Money, whether designed for immediate use or as endowment, can be sent to Secretary C. C. McCabe, D. D., 150 Fifth Avenue, New York; or friends who desire to make temporary provision for beds can forward their contributions directly to Dr. J. J. Gregory. All gifts, large and small, will be gratefully received and the money carefully administered for the benefit of the very poor.

It seems needless to say that such contributions as we earnestly ask for will make it possible to alleviate much suffering and at the same time to reach and win to a knowledge of the truth hundreds and thousands who are now "without God and without hope in the world." Any inquiries addressed to Dr. Gregory, or to the writer (Foochow, China), will receive prompt attention.

Pray for all departments of our mission work, but do not forget the Wiley General Hospital.

(Rev.) M. C. WILCOX.

LOGIC RUN MAD.

WAUPACA, Wis., 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Boys' Brigade, the organ of the church foolishness whose name it bears, has a department called the "Secretary's Question-Box". Among the queries propounded in one issue is the following:

"Is not military drill contrary to the Gospel?" The answer of the Secretary: "It does not follow that because boys drill in line, and are trained in the exercises and evolutions of a soldier, that they must needs go to war."

True; but neither does it follow that because boys and girls go to dancing-school, they must needs go to balls and dancing parties. Nor does it necessarily follow that boys who learn to play cards in their mother's parlor must needs become gamblers. Some boys have been in the habit of visiting saloons, and yet never became drunkards. There are cases on record where brewers, distillers and bar-tenders remained personally temperate and even total abstainers.

But it is strange logic, indeed, when men infer that therefore it is safe and wise for young men to engage in these things. Dr. Parkhurst and some noble Christian women have, on occasion, gone to houses of ill-fame, and were uncontaminated; but we do not send our boys there. The truth is that all people, especially the young, are greatly influenced by their surroundings, and that military drill will as certainly tend to the love and practice of war as boxing, under a professional trainer, would lead the way to the prize-ring.

The great mistake of those who have inaugurated this movement is in assuming that the professional soldier—that is, the man who stands ready, "without question and without remark," to engage in any war that his government may declare—is acting in harmony with Christian principles. The assumption is wholly untenable. There is a law higher than any human enactment, and it is to this higher law that we ought to teach the supreme obligation. To teach them the art of war is not only to dignify the profession of a soldier, but it is to place them in a position where they will most inevitably drift into the first war in which their country is engaged. The essentially evil principle in Jesuitism is its military feature—the oath of the subordinate to give unquestioned obedience to his superior. It is this principle that has made the order a reproach to Christianity, and a most malign influence in civil society. We want no Jesuitism in the education of our youth. H. H. HINMAN.

THE RUSSIAN-AMERICAN EXTRADITION TREATY.

SEAL, Pa., May, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In the last number of Free Russia, "the organ of the Society of Friends of Russian Freedom," I note an objection made to the proposed treaty as involving "a consideration of the most weighty character." It explains that among the offences provided for in the treaty, as drawn six years ago, was the "crime of forgery, by which is understood the utterance of forged papers, and also the counterfeiting of public, sovereign, or governmental acts." A clause like this—and it is sure to recur in the new treaty—fills the cup of infamy to overflowing. Everybody knows, who knows anything of Russia, that the false passport, which is a forged paper in the sense of the clause cited, is the one indispensable means of freedom to the man who in that country takes his life in his hand and makes a "dash for liberty." Escape from the prisons of Russia and the Siberian mines without the use of a counterfeited paper is impossible. Nor can the Russian frontier be crossed without one of these falsified documents.

Sympathizing with every wisely directed movement designed to be promotive of righteousness, temperance and truth, I incline to believe that no undertaking will ultimately prosper which is presumed to be dependent for success upon methods that are deceitful and untruthful. Straightforwardness will meet a better issue in the long run. Forgery, even for a righteous object, with deceit and stratagem, will be met by corresponding overreaching or cunning devices, while the protestations of the workers for greater political freedom that they are not engaged in secret murderous intrigues, will not be believed by the powers that bear rule.

It were well, therefore, that the meetings in this country called to protest against the acceptance of the proposed extradition treaty with Russia, should give expression to the conviction that open, straightforward, non-deceiving methods of political agitation and action have the sympathy of the American people. The other kind must tend to confusion and strife, and a hopeless widening of the breach. Strong reprobation, indeed, let there be for despotism and barbarity, wherever exhibited, but let us have a care how we subscribe to the refrain that "counterfeited paper" and "falsified documents" are "indispensable means of freedom." Neither in business nor in politics is this a sound or safe principle to proceed upon. JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

LITERATURE.

CHURCH AND STATE: Three Lectures. I. Religious Equality—National Disaster; II. Erastian Establishments—Ecclesiastical Dishonor; III. Scriptural Establishment—Imperial Glory. By the Rev. James Kerr, D.D., Glasgow. "The two appointed ones standing before the Lord of the whole earth." Glasgow: David Bryce & Son, 129 Buchanan Street. 8 vo., paper, pp. 54. 1893.

Rev. Dr. Kerr is one of the acknowledged great lights of the pulpit, well-known to Americans, who hold him and the Scottish church in high estimation, and who can well afford to give these lectures a careful perusal, if not a hearty endorsement.

The topics selected as the bases of these lectures are too profound for discussion here, as they would occupy too much space and require closer study than ordinary newspaper readers would care to expend upon them.

While they have special reference to a particular church, and that one spiritually a Christian power, the principles evolved may be applied with equal aptness to any church of the same spiritual excellence, and to which no true Christian should be ashamed to belong.

The Doctor, in discussing "religious equality," bears hardly upon a peculiarity found in our American system of multifarious denominations, all of which, under our constitution and laws, are equal in the enjoyment of religious freedom. In this view he finds much to deprecate, presenting a number of the propositions set forth by the advocates of religious equality under the law, and adds:

These quotations reveal the character of the plan of campaign to which the supporters of religious equality have committed themselves. It is a campaign for the unreserved destruction of all religious distinctions of a national character. The admissions of Roman Catholics, atheists, and Mohammedans to political offices are cited with satisfaction as illustrative triumphs of religious equality. A well-known minister in a Presbyterian Assembly boasted of the admission of Bradlaugh, the atheist, to Parliament as "an evidence of the growing power of religious equality." It will place the religion of the Christ on an equality, in the eye of kings and rulers, as such, with popery, atheism and idolatry—all of them equally outside national recognition and approval. It will require legislators, as such, not to concern themselves whether Leo XIII., Allah, or Jesus Christ is the King or Lord of this empire—political Gallios. It sets the ruler the duty of de-Christianizing the state, and of expelling all religion from his legislation and official conduct.

The second lecture relates to "Erastianism," the contrast between which and religious equality is thus outlined:

The former denies to the state the right of giving preference to any church—denounces the exercises of that right as intolerance. The latter reduces to servitude the church to which preference is extended. Both are rival forces to a right establishment; each takes the crown from the head of Christ, and haughtily sets it on its own. Both are assaults of his royal prerogatives—blots on Christ's diadem.

The third lecture is given up to a glowing description of the "Scriptural Establishment," in which Imperial glory shall crown the union of Christianity working in love and justice and truth under the supreme kingship of Christ and his teachings, so that both church and state shall be alike and together in entire and perfect harmony with themselves and him. This is the spiritual and political condition of the millennial government; and, blessed as is its contemplation, it is to be feared that until the millennium comes it will never be realized on earth.

Every opponent of church and state should read this book, if it is only to learn what are the true relations between them, which seem at present to be very imperfectly understood.

PRE-NATAL CULTURE: Suggestions to Parents Relative to Systematic Methods of Moulding the Tendencies of Offspring Before Birth. By A. E. Newton, Author of "The Better Way," etc. With an Introduction by Alice B. Stockham, M. D., Author of "Tokology." Paper, pp. 73. Chicago: Published by Alice B. Stockham & Co., 277 Madison street.

The principles of this little book, so far as physical development and culture are concerned, have been for centuries applied to the brute creation with eminent success; and the result is seen in the improved and much valued breeds of horses and cattle which everywhere challenge admiration for their advancement over the animal in its natural, uncultured condition.

A certain student of nature, whose name has for the present escaped us, when asked at what age the education of the child should begin, replied: "A year before its birth." It is no exaggeration. Centuries of experience testify to its truth. So much depends upon the care and culture of the mother for months before her child is born, that her mistakes and misfit circumstances of life may change its destiny, no less than its character and natural ability, both of body and mind. The correct mental and physical training of the mother during the period of gestation is as necessary as is the care and nurture of the child after its birth. We may not fully agree with some of the details of this requisite training, as set forth in this book, but the principles upon which they are based are excellent. The case of Hannah and Samuel will be found an excellent precedent for this assertion. See 1 Samuel, chapter 1.

LODGE NOTES.

REVIVAL OF AN OLD MASONIC ORDER.

The revival of the McLeod Moore Conclave of the Knights of Rome and Red Cross of Constantine, with the appendant orders of the Holy Sepulchre and St. John the Evangelist, in this city, is an important event in the Masonic history of this country. The order itself is of very ancient date, and its authentic connection with Freemasonry is admitted by the most able critics in and out of the fraternity. Tradition dates its origin to A. D. 313, by Constantine the Great, after the battle of Saxa Rubra and the vision of the Cross, while both it and the Order of the Holy Sepulchre were revived among the Crusaders in A. D. 1099. Sobel's historical record traces it from A. D. 1190, under the Eastern Emperor Isaac Angelus Comnenus, and it remained in Comnenian rance until 1699, when the last scion of the race sold the dignity of Grand Master to the Duke of Parma. After that date Grand Crosses of the order continued to exercise the privilege of conferring the Red Cross on men of eminence and worth, and in the eighteenth century an English branch came under the control of the most distinguished Freemasons of Great Britain. The first English Grand Master of the united orders was Lord Ranelagh, elected in 1796, and the Imperial Grand Conclave was organized a few years later. In the early part of the present century H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex was made Grand Sovereign ad vitam, but after his death the orders were practically dormant until the revival of the Grand Conclave in 1855.

In 1866, Lord Kenlis, now Earl of Bective, became Grand Sovereign. Since then the Grand Sovereigns have been Sir Frederick M. Williams, Bart., Col. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., and Sir Henry James, Earl of Euston, who now occupies the chair, with Baron de Ferrieres as Viceroy. The Earl of Kintore and Marquis of Breadalbane are Past Grand Sovereigns of the order for Scotland, and the Earl of Saltoun is the present Grand Sovereign.

In 1869, through the efforts of Hon. Robert Marshall, 33°, the order was introduced into this country, Mr. Marshall being named Intendant General for New Brunswick. He subsequently conferred the degrees on Col. McLeod Moore, who became Intendant General for Canada, exclusive of New Brunswick. McLeod Moore conclave was inaugurated in St. John, April 24, 1869, as No. 13 on the registry of England, and was the first on the continent of America. Conclaves were subsequently established in the upper provinces and later in the United States, where there are about 150 at the present time.

The number of Jubilee Conclave, England, is 150 on the roll on which McLeod Moore Conclave, the Premier Conclave of America, is No. 13, for the latter number has been expressly named in the warrant of confirmation recently granted by the Earl of Euston to replace the original warrant lost in the St. John fire of 1847. The patent to Hon. Robert Marshall, 33°, as Intendant General has also been specially confirmed, and he has been named in it as Sovereign of McLeod Moore Conclave, with Robert W. Crookshank, 32°, as Viceroy. In addition to a number of old members, there has been of late an infusion of younger material, though it is understood to be a body in which an increase of numbers is not the object, so much as to secure the right quality of material.

The officers for the current year are: Hon. Robert Marshall, Sovereign; Robert William Crookshank, Viceroy; John Andrew Watson, First General; William Bedell Wallace, Second General; William Kilby Reynolds, High Prelate; Frank L. Tufts, Treasurer; William Alexander Ewing, Recorder; Arthur Isaac True-man, Perfect; Charles McLaughlan, Standard Bearer; George Black Hegan, Herald; Dingee Scribner, Sentinel.

R. Em. Sir Kt. R. W. Crookshank is Provincial Prior, and R. Em. Sir Kt. Hon. Robert Marshall, K. C. T., District Secretary of the Sovereign Great Priory of Canada, of the United Religious and Military Orders of the Temple, and of St.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1893.

INVESTIGATING GREEK LETTER SOCIETIES.

A dispatch from Wooster, Ohio, May 24, makes public the following circular letter, which was sent out by Rev. J. A. P. McGaw, D.D., of Toledo, the chairman of a special committee appointed by the board of trustees of Wooster University. Its appearance greatly excited the students:

DEAR SIR:—I have been appointed by the board of trustees of Wooster University chairman of a committee to consider and report on the subject of college Greek fraternities. It will greatly aid me in preparing my report to have your answer to the following questions:

1. Do you regard the existence of Greek fraternities in colleges as, on the whole, a good or an evil?
2. Reasons for your opinion?
3. If you regard them as, on the whole, an evil, would you consider it advisable to prohibit them?
4. In case the board of trustees and Faculty of Wooster University should conclude to prohibit them, what in your judgment would be the effect on their members now in college?
5. What would be the effect on their alumni members?
6. Do you consider it advisable and possible to bring these fraternities more closely under the oversight of the Faculty?

Copies of this letter are sent to 100 alumni, selected from the different classes and without knowing whether or not they are or were members of fraternities. An early answer will be a great favor, and will, I trust, aid in solving a somewhat perplexing problem. If you wish, your answer will be regarded as strictly confidential.

The members of the Faculty disclaim having anything to do with the matter. A number of them are members of these societies. About 150 of the students at Wooster belong to these Greek-letter fraternities, and are said to look upon their prohibition as a serious blow to the success of the university.

METHODISM AND THE LODGE.

The following is from a letter addressed to the editor of the Christian Standard in Philadelphia:

Can you tell me where I can get some book or tract that will define clearly the position of the Methodist Episcopal church on the subject of secret societies? I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and have three boys, men grown, and I would like to be able to furnish them with good teaching on all the important questions of the day. I lately got a catalogue of books published by a Methodist Episcopal Concern and I find nothing pro or con on secretism. I would like to ask the question for Bro. J. H. Smith to answer in the Standard, why the wonderful reticence of the Methodist Episcopal church on the subject of secret societies?

The reply of the editor of the Standard embodies the following statements:

The church, as a church, has no defined position upon the subject of secret societies. We could not, therefore, refer you to a tract or book which would carry with it the authority of the church upon the matter. Many ministers, and laymen, too, have pronounced convictions upon the subject, and some have written about it, but always, of course, from their individual standpoint. The "reticence" to which you allude may be due to two or three things: First, many Methodist ministers belong to secret orders. Of course this will explain their reticence. Second, many others believe that, like men's politics, it is a matter to be decided by the individual conscience and judgment. Third, some are deterred by observing that an inordinate agitation has split other churches on this very question. And fourth, some who avoid secret societies, believe they are harmful and worldly, and upon proper occasion so express themselves, feel, nevertheless, that it is a great mistake to place this in the forefront in seeking to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands.

Now here is a Christian paper, whose editor takes upon himself the responsibility of enlightening Christians concerning the evils that beset the spirituality of the church, the harmony of the family and the integrity of the government; yet he represents a powerful religious association that has not, as an organized body, a word in its libraries and journals denouncing the secret lodges which are so rapidly increasing in numbers and showing themselves inimical to Christianity, domesticity and the state. As he describes the situation of the church on this question, she sees less harm in fostering secret societies than in opposing them, and deems it "a great mistake to place it" (the lodge) "in the forefront" while she advocates "scriptural holiness!"

We have before us a sermon on Masonry, preached by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District, Northwest Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a seceding Master Mason, in the M. E. church at Elk Point, Dakota, August 11, 1875, a man abundantly able and willing to teach the authorities of his church the true character of the Masonic fraternity. This is his testimony against it.

We find in our midst a system despotism in its government, an Christianity in its character; binding its votaries by unlawful oaths, with death penalties annexed, "to forever hold, never reveal, and ever conceal" the secrets of the system and its adherents; crime not accepted. A system professing to be charitable in its aim, yet excluding all from its pale, except those who are perfect in body, sound in mind, young in years, and in comfortable circumstances for money. A system professing to take our Holy Scriptures as its rule of faith and practice, and yet carefully excluding him of whom "Moses in the law and the prophets did write"; him who is the "all in all," the "Alpha and Omega," the "beginning and the end" of the New Testament. A system professing to be ancient and honorable above all others, and yet for its defense forces its adherents to calumny, slander, and misrepresentation. Professing to interfere with no man's religious views, yet says to the Christian who prays within its sacred hall: You must not approach the throne of grace in the name of him who has said, "No man cometh to the Father but by me."

One would think that with this and other evidence of a like character, no one in the Methodist Episcopal church, if honest, need be ignorant of the un-Christian and (why not?) un-Methodistic tendency of this great secret abomination.

We incline to the belief that the Methodist Episcopal church, as a whole, is so corrupted by the evil influences of the lodge that it cannot consistently set up a banner against it, and that the lodge is slowly but surely sapping the vitality of the church which cherishes it.

"THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH."

Rev. F. J. Davidson, of New Orleans, La., has connected himself with the Mississippi Co-operative and Benefit Association, operated by colored men for the benefit of their race in the South. By it they propose to "demonstrate the business capacity of the Negro, to change his condition," and make him the owner of his home; and we are gratified to learn how much good the association has already accomplished among these people.

Rev. F. J. Davidson is a hearty opponent of all the secret societies that infest the South and are drawing so many of his people into the meshes of their oath-bound complicity. The other day he was approached by an individual who persuaded him to invest in some special enterprise. Mr. Davidson preferred to first investigate the schemes and found that it was neither more nor less than a secret oath-bound society. He has been so cruelly persecuted by the lodge element in the past that although he has not recently been engaged in fighting it in public, he no less unflinchingly opposes it when necessary. In this spirit he wrote to the proposer of the new enterprise, refusing to interest himself in it and the sort of "benevolence" that it claimed to possess. "Since a more thoughtful and prayerful consideration," he wrote, "I have to respectfully decline being in any way connected with the formation of any kind of oath-bound secret society whose pretext is to teach morality, etc. I am fully persuaded that any organic body to teach economy, race-pride and morality can best be operated in the light of Gospel truth. See John 17: 20."

THE WORLD'S FAIR SUNDAY OPENING.

Last week's record on the question of opening the World's Fair on Sunday left it closed on May 21st, by order of the local Directory, whose action in favor of Sunday opening was referred to the National Commission for modification—rejection or adoption.

Early last week the National Commission received from its committee on the judiciary two reports on the subject of opening the Fair on Sunday. That of the majority, presented by Commissioners Massey of Delaware, Garvin of Indiana, and Hundley of Alabama, took the position that the Commission was left without discretion except to see that the plain intent of Congress on this question is executed. The relation between the Commission and the Directory was discussed at length, it being shown that the Commission had the power of approval or modification of any of the rules made by the Directory. On the question of the breaking of a legislative contract by Congress, the report stated that this is a delicate legal question which it did not deem in its function to decide, but in case it is found that the later act of Congress is the impairment of a contract, the result will be, not that the Directory is freed from the obligations of the contract, but that the later act is void. The report therefore recommended that the Commission refuse to concur in the amendment opening the gates on Sunday. The minority report, presented by Commissioners St. Clair of West Virginia and Burton of Kansas, simply went over the position of the directors that Congress abrogated its contract when a part of the appropriation was diverted for the payment of awards.

A long discussion on both reports ensued in the Commissioners' meeting; at the close of which a vote was taken on the adoption, and by a vote of 31 to 27 the majority report was rejected and that of the minority adopted.

Commissioner Massey, chairman of the judiciary committee, who presented the rejected report in favor of closing the Exposition gates on Sunday, promptly resigned that office and his membership in the committee, on the ground that all his motions and reports in favor of his position on this question had been opposed by the Commission.

The decision of the Commission to open the Fair on Sundays created a great deal of rejoicing on the part of those who have strenuously labored in behalf of the measure, and equal indignation among those who believe that Sunday opening is an insult to God and an infraction of divine and national law.

Immediately after the decision of the National Commission had been made public, United States District Attorney Milchrist, of Chicago, hastened to Washington and consulted with Mr. Olney, the Attorney General, upon the course to be pursued by the government to prevent the opening of the Fair on Sundays. The Attorney General, in conclusion, informed Attorney Milchrist that the various laws relating to the World's Fair as construed by the Department of Justice require the gates to be closed on Sunday, and that the Attorney General will proceed by injunction through the United States courts to have them closed. Upon this point he was very clear. When asked what view he took of the claim that Congress had broken its contract in the matter of souvenir coins, so that the management of the World's Fair could consider itself relieved of any obligation which the law might have intended to impose relative to Sunday closing, the Attorney General treated the suggestion of the broken contract as one so untenable as to be hardly worth considering.

Mr. Milchrist returned to Chicago fully convinced, as the administration construes the law, that the gates of the Fair must remain closed on Sunday, and does not consider that either the local directors or the National Commission, or both bodies jointly, have, or had, the authority to order the gates open on that day.

This number of the Cynosure goes to press on Tuesday morning. On Wednesday it was decided that the injunction filed in the United States Court is to be argued before Judges Grosscup and Jenkin and, if possible, Chief Justice Fuller, of the U. S. Supreme Court, will sit in judgment with them.

The Chicago Record of last Monday morning more than intimates that Attorney Milchrist has been insincere in his efforts to have the World's Fair closed on Sunday. This opinion is formed on his neglect to take out a temporary injunction last week to restrain the management from opening the gates of the Exposition on Sunday last. But he did not.

It is estimated that about 100,000 persons were admitted to the grounds on Sunday. The number of paid admissions was 76,379. Of children's tickets 3,751 were issued.

These figures, in connection with the Sunday-opening advocates' estimates that at least 200,000 visitors would throng the grounds, indicate an important miscalculation as to the temper of the public at large on this question.

All along the Midway Plaisance the beer halls and resorts were largely patronized.

The United States Government headquarters and fifteen State exhibits were closed during the day, but eighteen of the latter opened their doors to visitors. Those which were closed were seven which are not yet completed for visitors, and the following: Indiana, Rhode Island, Maryland, New Hampshire, No. Dakota, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Virginia, So. Dakota, Missouri, New York. The old Liberty bell was not on exhibition.

The drinking water and electric-lighting machinery were running, but the rest was not.

Here we leave the subject until next week, when the question will probably have been permanently settled.

THE RESULT.

The great Columbian Exposition has disgraced itself, the city of Chicago, and the nation which gave it existence and fostered it with liberal gifts.

Despite the prayers and entreaties of hundreds of thousands of Sabbath-loving Christians in every State; despite the enactments of Congress; despite the express command of God, the spirit of greed in the hearts in the management of the Exposition led them to throw open its gates on Sunday last for the admission of the public, and its grounds were thronged by hosts of ungodly visitors throughout that holy day.

It is the old story of disobedience to divine law; the will-power of the creature arrayed against the Creator; the spirit of rebellion which in times past provoked him to plague and destroy those who despised his word. The history of those nations who forgot him, and made light of his commandments, is the record of his judgments against them.

What ought Christians to do, under these circumstances? Can they conscientiously partake of this iniquity by investing their money in it, by visiting it themselves, or by encouraging others to do so? Ought not they rather to pray that God, for Christ's sake, will take this matter into his own hands and manipulate it for his own glory, whether by its destruction, or by converting the hearts of those upon whom rests the responsibility of its management in opposition to his will? In either case the Christian may patiently wait and see the result. The city of Chicago, the World's Fair, and the United States, are now on trial. Let the will of God be done.

—We have received a letter from the southern portion of Chicago, in which the writer says: "I am God, and I have come as a thief." It is more easy to believe the last assertion than the first.

—In the Toronto (Ont.) Globe of May 13 appears the following curious paragraph—curious to us in this free country, where such taxation is unknown: "In the report of the annual meeting of the Jarvis Street Baptist church, published a short time since, an important item from the treasurer's report was omitted. It was the fact that during the past year the church had paid into the city treasury its full equitable share of taxes, amounting to $1,330.37. Jarvis Street church has done this for the past three years." We have Christian men and women in the United States who desire the general taxation of church property; but it is an open question whether such a law would be conducive to increased spirituality or Christian advancement.

—George Washington Murray, a Negro, whose career is worthy of a moment's attention, will be a member of the Fifty-third Congress, from the State of North Carolina, and the choice of her Republican citizens. He was born a slave in 1853; was eleven years old when emancipated; learned to read from the street waifs among whom he was thrown, and never saw the inside of a school-house until he began teaching colored children. He was admitted to the University of South Carolina as a student in 1874, but was denied the right to study there in 1876, when the Democrats again secured control of that State. He again became a teacher, and made his own way to the front. And we are told that his opponent in the contest for Congressman was one of the wealthiest white men in the State. Yet this man has to ride in a Negro "Jim Crow" railroad car at home!

think there must have been at least 300 present, and they were swaying right and left, under the influence of this brother, whose monotony and gesticulations were to me nauseous. He recognized me, and told the congregation that he had visited my church at Memphis. Through his influence an appointment was made for me for Wednesday, May 4, at 7:30 in the evening, which turned out to be 9 p. m.

I soon found out that, as far as possible, cold water had been poured over the people, and they had been prejudiced against me, by this same brother. Nevertheless, I spoke to nearly 200 people, and God blessed my effort. I got no money; neither was I invited to call again.

I had quite a lengthy conversation with one of the leading educators of the city to-day, on the subject of secret societies. He is an Odd-fellow, Mason, and Knight of Pythias. After an hour's talk he left me and gave me two dollars; and I think I have won him.

I am to dine to-morrow at the house of a brother who is one of the leading men of the city, and I am praying for God to give me victory at this man's house; for I am preaching "this Gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 24:14) everywhere I go, privately and publicly. Here is a large field for our anti-secret society brethren to work in.

Well, I did not get to speak in the church where the brother told me I would get hurt, for it rained all day and no one attended.

I left Houston after a ten-days' stay, out of which I realized a few dollars above my expenses, and I am now in Austin, the capital of the State. I have been here over one Sunday. I have spoken in two of the churches and two of the public schools. I am to speak three times to-morrow (Sunday), and I am glad to say that my work here, and in fact all along where I have been, is not devoid of effect. All of the churches in this State appear to be filled with societies. Some of the preachers have on from three to four different society badges. All is society-ism, and no real practical Christianity; so things look. I find, occasionally, some who have not bowed the knee to Baal. I said to a body of ministers, yesterday: "You all are doing a peculiar work in this country. The Methodists are making Methodists, the Baptist, Baptists, the Congregationalist, Congregationalists; and then you all combine to make societyists, and you are succeeding admirably along that line; but failing to do the work of an evangelist by not Christianizing the people. Christ and him crucified ought to be your theme on Monday, out of the pulpit as well as in it."

I am stopping with a lady who is Most Ancient Matron of the Ladies' Masonic Court of this place, who also has charge of the juvenile department of another society. She says: "I am so surprised, Bro. Countee, to hear you say a word against the Masons. I thought they were all of it." This lady is a fine Christian woman, but she has never had her eyes opened to this iniquity, and she sits silently and takes in every word I say concerning them. I shall be here only a few days longer, and shall try to get her to promise me to leave the lodge before I go away.

The Baptist minister here tells me he is tired of the whole business. He is a Mason and a Knight of Pythias.

I have not stopped with any preacher since I have been on this tour, for when we stop at their homes they want us to feel under some obligation to them, and we do, and as a result can never speak with the same freedom we can otherwise. I manage to find a good private boarding-house, and thus I am not burdensome to any man.

I shall go from here to Waco, Texas, thence to Fort Worth, and then wend my way homeward. I would be glad to spend a whole year in this State, but I cannot do so in justice to my family. I received a letter from my wife, yesterday, informing me that two lady friends had sent her five dollars, which came in very handy for flour, meat and other necessities, and for which we are very thankful.

I have tried to get some subscribers for the Cynosure, and have several names of parties who ought to have the paper, and promise me to take it, but they do not pay any money. I do earnestly pray God to send ministers of his truth into this vineyard, to save my people. I look up, like the prophet, and say: "Oh, that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." I feel, at times, like laying myself on the altar for the people; and, if I had no family, I should give myself entirely to this work, accepting the scorn and rebukes and hardships attending it, for it is by no means a pleasant work to be engaged in. You have no idea of the fearful temptation I have to endure, when I can see wherein I might get big collections, and have my pockets full of dollars, if I would only adhere to the lodge-side. It is the popular side with man; but I seek to be popular with God.

On my return home I shall endeavor to move to Kansas—Wichita, which place I have selected for my future home. I ask an interest in the prayers of the many readers of the Cynosure, and trust that God will, in his own way, send some one to work in this field. Yours for the Master's use,

R. N. COUNTEE.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.
2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.
3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

An estimate given in this column last week of one argument in the Sunday opening case seems to have been incorrect. The charge of violation of contract on the part of Congress was not abandoned. It is made the basis of the whole action of the Sunday openers. The opinion of Attorney General Olney and other eminent authorities, that there was nothing in the action of Congress reserving $570,000 for awards, which could vitiate the law against Sunday opening, seemed so well founded that for a time the claim seemed to have lost its force. This charge, raised by the Chicago Directory, was urged in the U. S. Commission, however, and last Thursday they voted, 31 to 27, to permit the directors to have their way and open the gates of the Fair on the Sabbath. The change of five votes would have thrown the decision to the other side. So close a vote decided the question for the time and it was enough to allow an order for Sunday opening to be issued. The Sunday papers of Chicago urged on the crime, calling on the masses to crowd the Fair by the hundred thousand and crush all opposition by the overwhelming force of numbers. How well they succeeded is told elsewhere in this number.

Christian people were not idle. The authorities at Washington received their protests from every part of the country. Telegrams followed letters, and deputations followed the dispatches. When it was known Saturday that injunction proceedings were delayed in Chicago until Wednesday, the 31st, President Cleveland was besought to exercise his high authority, and order the law of Congress to be obeyed. He did not see fit to do so, neither did his District Attorney in this city sue out a temporary injunction as he might have done.

As soon as the vote of the Commissioners, setting aside the law of Congress on a mere pretext, was known, and it appeared that no injunction would be issued in time to check the folly of the Directory, it was determined that the N. C. A. exhibit should bear its protest. "Closed on the Lord's Day," was the testimony on a large placard; while charts, books etc., were covered or turned to the wall. Other exhibits in the vicinity were ready in like manner for the Sunday visitors; and all joined in the hopes that the appeal to the courts would prevent the final dishonor and calamity of a World's Fair in Chicago opened on the Sabbath under sanction of law.

PRAY FOR THE JUNE 20TH CONFERENCE.

The time for this important meeting approaches. Of the delegations appointed by the churches some are well informed respecting the principles we shall discuss at that meeting. Others are not. The Spirit of God must help us by enforcing on these brethren the vital importance of these principles. We must reach this by prayer. The Congregational Pastor's Union on Monday selected two representatives who will help greatly in the consultations of the meeting.

THE HOME.

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

Long ago the hosts of Israel
 Marched beneath the fiery cloud;
 Long ago with tuneful voices,
 Hymns of praise they chanted loud.
 Onward, o'er the burning desert,
 Where the way was traced in blood,
 Following still the cloudy pillar,
 Swept the mighty Church of God!

Through the dark and damp morasses,
 Where no sunbeams ever shine,
 Where, through wild and tangled jungles,
 Trails the poison-freighted vine;
 On, past bright and sparkling fountains,
 Following Moses' lifted rod,
 Still led on through calm and tempest,
 Swept the mighty Church of God!

Where the Alpine heights, uprearing,
 With their foreheads white with snow,
 In the mountain caves, where torrents
 Dashed and thundred far below,
 Dwelt the sons of Israel's vanguard,
 While he sat with lifted rod,
 Guiding o'er the stormy mountains
 The majestic Church of God!

High upon the hill of Piedmont,
 Loud the Christian's triumph rang,
 And the Jura Alps resounded
 To the hymns that Luther sang;
 Then the Switzer told the story,
 Kneeling on the springing sod;
 Thus from glory unto glory,
 Swept the mighty Church of God!

Onward! where the golden ladder
 Rests against the fiery cloud;
 Onward! where the lips of angels
 Joyous hymns are chanting loud,
 Deathless rays his brows adorning,
 In the paths the saints once trod,
 Upward, towards an endless morning,
 Sweeps the mighty Church of God!

HOME TRAINING.

(From "The Commandment with Promise.")
(Concluded.)

If the law was given to the children of Israel, why do we, as Gentiles, take it to ourselves?

"Because," Charles answered, "we are children of Abraham by faith; we are grafted into the olive tree of the Jews, and partake of the fatness of the olive."

Author. It is so; and, moreover, when we believe, we are redeemed from out of the wicked world—out of the house of bondage; for Egypt, which was a literal place of bondage to the Jews, is a typical representation of the world, which is our place of bondage; Satan being the prince of this world, and he that puts hard yokes on the necks of those who dwell in it.

Do you remember how the children of Israel were delivered?

Georgesaid, "With a high hand, and a stretched-out arm, and with great power."

Author. Yes, George; and, moreover, with blood. The Lord redeemed them, saving them from the destroying angel. They were ordered to slay the lamb for the sacrifice of the passover—to sprinkle the blood on the houses, which was the token of the salvation by which they were sanctified to the Lord, and separated from the Egyptians. They were to eat of the lamb with their loins girt and their staff in their hand, ready to set out on their pilgrimage. They were then brought out, led through the Red Sea, and were in a state of peculiar and distinguishing privileges, by the blood of the covenant, when the commandments were given to them. They were under the promise which was given to Abraham, and under the same covenant; but the law was added—do you know why?

George. Yes, uncle; it was added because of transgressions, Gal. 3: 19.

Author. What is the use of the law?

George. By the law is the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3: 20.

Author. Has the law any other office?

George. Yes; as a schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ, Gal. 3: 24.

Author. True; when the Lord saith by the law, "Do this and live," we find out the sin which prevents our doing it, and hinders our living by it; then we are led to lament our sin, and say, "O wretched man that I am!" Feeling that there is an inward bondage, from which we need to be made free, we are led to inquire, Who shall deliver me from this body of death?—a death more fearful than that which was seen in Egypt, when the first-born in every house was slain, but from which the children of Israel were delivered. This is not a destroying angel, but the very body of death—the sin in ourselves. The Lord brings us to the knowledge of this, and also brings us to lament and inquire, as the apostle did, "Who shall deliver me?" Rom. 6: 24. Then comes the application of Jesus' grace, and we find our deliverance in him: "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord!" I do not know whether you understand my reason for introducing this argument. Can you tell me what you understand by it, Charles?

Charles seemed, by his countenance, which he steadfastly fixed on mine, as if he were endeavoring to gather up the thread; and all the others looked toward him, waiting his reply. At length he said, "Is it for the purpose of teaching us to look at the law without dread; seeing that, though by it is the knowledge of sin, yet it, as a schoolmaster, brings us to Christ Jesus, who delivers us from the curse of the law?"

Author. Yes, that is one purpose. What is the curse of the law?

Charles. Death for breaking it. "Thou shalt die."

Author. How did Jesus Christ deliver us from this curse?

Charles. By dying for us. He was made sin for us; he bore our sins in his own body on the tree.

Author. But Christ also delivers us from bondage of the law. What is the bondage of the law?

Charles. I do not think I can clearly tell you.

Author. The bondage of the law is the condition it proposes, "Do this and live." That is the bondage of the law. Does the Lord Jesus ever direct us to such conditions?

"No," said Louisa. "He once answered the Pharisee according to these words, Matt. 19: 16-22; but that was to convince him of sin, and to leave him without excuse, when he had asked, 'Good master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?'"

Author. In what way, then, does the Lord Jesus propose life to us?

Louisa. Oh, very differently, uncle. He says, "Whosoever believeth in me hath eternal life." And he says at the same time, why we shall die, in that Scripture, John 3: 36. And I have often thought how different it is from the conditions of life and death in the law. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Author. Thank you, my dear Louisa, for communicating your thoughts. We are now come to a clear point of understanding as to the proper use and application of the law; which is very important to us, as I desire so much to fix one of the commandments of the law at this time so particularly on your attention; namely, the fifth—"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Therefore you will all, I hope, my dear young friends, bear in mind, that I do not impress it on you as a condition of pardon, but as a proof of love to the Lord Jesus—"If you love me, keep my commandments." Indeed, it would be an absurdity so to do, for he that loveth the Lord is loved of God, and has already received the principle of eternal life from the gift of God himself.

Mary, who appeared to gather a little confidence from seeing the easy manner in which my sister's children answered my questions, in a very diffident tone of voice, said, "But is there not a condition of life belonging to the fifth commandment, when it says, 'that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee?'"

Delighted to find her mind engaged in discriminating the subject, I could not help showing my pleasure by an involuntary smile, which raised a blush for a moment, from consciousness of the encouragement.

Author. Your question will soon be answered, my dear Mary, by referring to the apostle's description: he calls it the first commandment with promise. Reflect now on the difference between a condition and a promise, and I will try to help you to distinguish them.

All the commandments had the condition, "Do this and live;" but it is peculiar to the fifth commandment to have a promise annexed to it, such as is not given to the others. It is written, God is not unrighteous to forget our work and labor of love. He has a reward of grace: he suffers our obedience to be regarded as a proof of love and grace, and grants that the works of the saved shall follow them, Rev. 14: 13. But they are no conditions by which we live, or for which we live; had it been so, it had been no more a promise. He in his own grace is pleased to hold out a promise, which is his own free offer and gift, to which we had no right nor claim of ourselves. Beside, it is not the life that is in Jesus, which is here promised upon our attention to the fifth commandment; that is secured to us on another foundation, even Jesus himself. We find the Lord frequently setting promises before us for fruits of grace and faith. The promises are the earnest of the inheritance which we possess in Christ Jesus, and the fruits of grace show to us the character of the people who are to be inheritors. Do you understand the distinction better?

Mary. I think I do.

Author. You must be always careful to distinguish a promise from a condition. If you seek to keep the law as a condition, you will either be an ignorant Pharisee, supposing yourself righteous in your own works, or you will be cast down in despair, in finding how far you come short of the righteousness of the law. If you remember the commandment as one of love and promise, you will be free in your obedience; and encouraged to perseverance, by a fear of disregarding a promise. There is much more to be said on this subject, but at present I will go no farther.

Then, after a little pause, I looked round on all my little company, for some of them seemed a little overpowered by this long reasoning. "Now tell me, my dear young people, do you not already feel drawn to love the fifth commandment? especially as you may consider it so closely connected with your daily, hourly duty to your own dear earthly parents; whom you ought to love and obey, and who love you so intensely that they always seek your benefit and happiness, according to their persuasion of what shall most contribute to them?"

There appeared a general assent to my appeal; some whispered a little "Yes," others raised their eyes to seek the countenances of their parents who were present, and others appeared to be reflecting on the application of the question.

Author. It will, however, be well to give your minds a little preparatory direction to the meaning of the duty enjoined by the word "honor." It is a term used to imply respect, deference, attention, obedience, gratitude—and these feelings can only be shown by actions. When, therefore, the Lord commands you to honor your father and your mother, you must bear in mind that it lays upon you these obligations:—that you take no undue liberties with them; that you submit to their commands, not opposing your own inclinations, but yielding them to their superior wisdom; that you pay constant attention to their wishes; that you obey their injunctions; and that you be grateful for the tender care and instructions you daily receive from them. Tell me now what you mean by the honor you are to pay to your parents.

Some of them answered separately—

"To respect them."

"To give up my wishes to theirs."

"To pay every attention to their desires."

"To obey all their injunctions."

"To be grateful for all their kind care."

Author. Very well; remember these simple rules as some explanation of honor, and when you fail in them, recollect you are not honoring them; and when you endeavor to honor them, may it be as the proof both of love to the Lord Jesus, and that you do not despise the promise of God.

Thinking this little instruction sufficient for a first interview, and calculated to induce some further thought on the subject during the week, I then proposed that we should conclude, saying, "As we are now directed to look to the Lord, whose name is love, we will not separate without commending ourselves to him in a short prayer. Remember, therefore, how near the throne of grace we are, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have access to the Father by the Holy Spirit. At the foot of that throne let us bend our knees, and implore from the heart that the Spirit of grace may be granted to us, to love the law of the Lord; and let us pray that that law may be written on the tables of our hearts, by the same Spirit, that we may keep it in the love of Jesus."

When we had concluded, there was a little bustle among the party, in preparing for their departure, and some of the parents expressed their sentiments to me on the subject of the evening in a way that gave me a hope I had obtained an interest.

I saw many little indications among the young people of the necessity of urging their attention to this duty; one resisting the care of the mother, wrapping her up for fear of cold; another, disrespectful in manners; a third, totally indifferent to the injunctions given to be steady and careful, while others were silently attentive and conforming to the wishes of their parents.

Louisa had received the charge of her mother to render all the little services in her power, and she was busily engaged in the courtesies and kindnesses the occasion demanded.

A CHILD'S INQUIRY.

The unsophisticated thought of a little child often comes very near to God's truth. The following story related by the Christian carries its own moral:

The little daughter of Rev. Oscar Michelsen, missionary to the New Hebrides, was looking at a copy of the Graphic, which had reached the far-off island which it was her parents' mission to evangelize. Many of the islanders had become Christians, and the child knew that their conversion had transformed them from warriors into men of peace. Seeing a picture of some Englishmen with a peculiar head dress, she asked why they wore feathers on their heads. Being told that they were soldiers, warriors, she asked how it was that they had become heathens again, after being Christians.

LITTLE BOB STOOD THE TEST.

The "blue line" stopped at the corner, says a writer in Youth's Companion, and an anxious-looking young woman put a small boy inside.

"Now Bob," she said as she hurried out to the platform again, "don't lose that note I gave you; don't take it out of your pocket at all."

"No'm," said the little man, looking wistfully after his mother as the conductor pulled the strap, the driver unscrewed the brake, and the horses, shaking their bells, trotted off with the car.

"What's your name, Bob?" asked a mischievous-looking young man sitting beside him.

"Robert Cullen Deems," he answered.

"Where are you going?"

"To my grandma's."

"Let me see that note in your pocket."

The look of innocent surprise in the round face ought to have shamed the baby's tormentor, but he only said again, "Let me see it."

"I can't," said Robert Cullen Deems.

"See here, if you don't, I'll scare the horses and make them run away."

The little boy cast an apprehensive look at the belled horses, but shook his head.

"Here, Bob, I'll give you this peach if you'll pull that note half way out of your pocket."

The boy did not reply, but some of the older people looked angry.

"I say, chum, I'll give you this whole bag of peaches if you will just show me the corner of your note," said the tempter. The child turned away, as if he did not wish to hear any more, but the young man opened the bag and held it just where he could see and smell the luscious fruit.

A look of distress came into the sweet little face; I believe Bob was afraid to trust himself; and when a man left his seat on the other end to get off the car, the little boy slid quickly down, left the temptation behind, and climbed into the vacant place.

A pair of prettily gloved hands began almost unconsciously to clap, and then everybody clapped and applauded until it might have alarmed Bob, if a young lady sitting by had not slipped her arm around him and said, with a sweet glow on her face:

"Tell your mamma that we all congratulate her upon having a little man strong enough to resist temptation and wise enough to run away from it."

I doubt if that long, hard message ever reached Bob's mother, but no matter, the note got to his grandmother without ever coming out of his pocket.

LEAD SOFTLY.

The children were very tender,
So the father's heart of love
Drove softly over the desert
As the tiny feet could move.
And the heart of the greater Father,
Our Father above the sky,
Is touched with the children's weakness
As he leads them softly by.

O, lead them softly, good teacher,
For the little minds are weak;
They cannot climb o'er the mountains
To the height that you may seek.
They cannot march like an army;
But if you will only stay,
To lend them a hand, they will follow,
As softly you lead the way.

Let them have little journeys,
Short steps that their feet can take;
If you drive them along too roughly,
Who knows but their hearts will break.
Remember they are but children,
And treat them in love as such;
Nor show them a giant's footprints,
And expect them to do as much.

Tender to-day, to-morrow,
In the steps of some holy saint,
They will run and not be weary,
They will walk and not be faint;
And by and by in the city,
The children of tender feet,
The children whom you lead softly,
Will play on the golden street.

TEMPERANCE.

WHO BROKE BEN'S BACK?

Have you heard the story of Ben? My lips have told it so often that I think it but fair that my pen should tell it once.

He was as crooked and straight a specimen of humanity as you could find anywhere. His body was crooked, but his soul was straight—an arrangement he much preferred to a crooked soul in a straight body. His back was broken, but his soul had been made whole. His body reminded you of a scrub oak, but his soul resembled a tall cedar in Lebanon; the one excited your pity, the other your admiration. His body made you ache with sympathy, but his soul made you long to be like him. His face—ah, his face! While his crooked body made you think of midnight and darkness, his face reminded you of noonday and sunshine. It was a beautiful face, with peace written all over it. The forehead was the frontal of good thoughts, and the curves of his lips were gentleness and good-will. The ever-present smile reminded you that "the peace that passeth all understanding" could evolve sunshine out of physical suffering, and prepared you to hear him frequently sing, "There is sunshine in my soul to-day". If the eyes be the windows of the soul, never did a soul have more beautiful windows to look out of. They were large and expressive, bright and blue, and they beamed with kindness and trust. The soul never uttered a word nor gave a look of complaint, but you could not help feeling it was greatly cramped for room. It made the best of the crooked house in which it lived; but that it sometimes longed to move out you could discover when you saw Ben reading from the Book of books, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." A peculiar longing would flash out from his eyes, and his face fairly glowed with delight, as he turned back the pages and read: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am ye may be also."

To those who do not know the wonderful power of grace, it was marvelous how the little fellow's soul grew in the next seven years; and to those who watched him closely it was plain he would soon be compelled to move out of that body, so distorted by that cruel kick. But his faith grew stronger as his limbs grew weaker, and the nearer he came to eternity the brighter became his face.

As time faded but one thing troubled him, and that was: who was to blame for his broken back? He reasoned it out in this wise: "If it was right for men to vote to license the sale of drink, it was right for men to sell it; if it was right for men to sell it, then it was right for men to drink it; and if it was right for men to drink it, then it was right for boys to have their backs broken by those who were under the influence of drink." So ran his logic, and it was terrible in its truth. Ben, with his broken back, lay under his father, and the father under the seller of the drink, and the seller under the license system, and the voters for the system were on the top of the heap. So, for awhile, it troubled him, until he remembered that eternity would reveal the mysteries of this life; then he contentedly dismissed the problem, with the remark, "It may be that God wanted my back to be broken; but if he didn't, then it will be found that papa was not to blame."

It was a bright spring day when Ben moved out of his crooked house into one of the Father's many mansions. The cheeks of the watchers were wet with tears, but the face of the little fellow was radiant with "the coming glory". He had ripened fast during the seven years in that crooked body, and the Father's call to move out and up found him ready. With a bright smile and the cry "Here!" he swept through the gates into the eternal city. Ben has gone to his rest, but the problem as to who was responsible for his broken back yet remains to be solved.—The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

TWO MAY REPORTS.

A GOOD YEAR OF TEMPERANCE WORK.

The twenty-eighth anniversary of the National Temperance Society was celebrated last evening in the Broadway Tabernacle. The annual report was presented by J. N. Stearns, corresponding secretary. Thirty-six new publications have been issued in the year, making a total of 2,056 now on the list; 25,695,721 pages of temperance literature have been printed, making 881,867,699 since the organization of this society. The total receipts for the year were $52,467.17, of which $35,288.40 were from publications, and $14,686.24 from gifts, and $2,492.53 from legacies. The total expenses were $52,355.07.

The following officers were elected: John Wanamaker, president; J. N. Stearns, secretary; and William D. Porter, treasurer. One hundred prominent clergymen, law-makers and prohibitionists were elected vice-presidents.

Resolutions were passed deploring the sale of intoxicating liquors on the World's Fair grounds. The Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley and the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Thompson made stirring temperance addresses. The Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor presided.

NEARLY 8,000 LICENSED DRINKING PLACES.

The annual report of the Board of Excise was submitted yesterday to the Mayor. It says that there are 7,783 licensed drinking places in the city. They are divided as follows: Hotel licenses, 231; liquor store licenses, all kinds of liquors, 6,644; restaurant licenses, 270; ale and beer licenses only, 638.

For a hotel license $250 is paid; for a liquor store license, $200; for a restaurant license, $100; and for an ale and beer license $50. The number of places licensed to sell liquors in quantities under five gallons and not to be drunk in the place is 1,408. During the year 13,117 applications were received, and of this number 9,487 licenses were issued. The amount paid to the city for licenses last year was $1,569,525, an increase of $65,995 over the previous year.—New York Tribune.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The duty of fearing God in youth—Vs. 1, 2. An idle, frivolous, or disappointed youth is sure to bring a bitter harvest, and no more fatal or dangerous idea can be inculcated in the minds of young people than the notion that they can be thoughtless with impunity simply because they are young. God's Word takes the opposite and only safe ground; that we are to remember our Creator in life's spring-tide instead of waiting for the evil days, which, however far we may put them from us, are sure to come. There is a "sweet reasonableness" in all God's commands, and in none more than this. If "the chief end of man is to glorify God and enjoy him forever," as the Catechism so beautifully defines it, then the sooner we begin our life-work the better. It is great enough to fill the longest life, and to put it off to old age is nearly tantamount to not doing it at all. It is like putting off the day's task until evening, when all the spring and freshness are gone, and neither mind nor body are fitted to perform it. The time to serve God acceptably is when our mental powers are in their full vigor, and not when the mind is darkened by the infirmities of age so that the will and judgment wander aimlessly, like a traveler with neither sun nor stars, nor even a torch to guide him. "Nor the clouds return after the rain."—It is a mistake to think that youth is a period free from storms. The difference between youth and old age is in the elasticity with which the former recovers itself. Sickness and sorrow may endure for a time; but with the young they are like summer thunder-showers, severe while they last, and followed by days of health and happiness without a cloud in the sky. In age "the clouds return after the rain;"—a figure drawn from the rainy season, the winter of Eastern countries.

2. A description of old age—Vs. 3-5. Old age is here represented under the similitude of a beautiful palace falling into decay. "In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble." This alludes to the arms and hands, which in old age grow palsied and trembling. The keepers of a princely mansion falling to decay would be likely to be old men, which carries out the imagery still further. "And the strong men shall bow themselves," referring to the limbs which carry us about, like the laborers that bring in the food which sustains the inmates. "And the grinders cease because they are few." The teeth are here likened to the women who grind the corn, and who would be much fewer in such a decayed mansion than in one filled with joyous guests, and where everything needed for the table was abundantly supplied. "And those that look out of the windows be darkened." The sight is usually among the first senses to fail in old age; it grows dim like the windows of an old house. In a lordly mansion, or castle, whose owners keep up their state and splendor, the doors stand open. People are continually coming, either servitors or guests; but in such a forsaken place as is here described, where all the pleasant activities of life are suspended, "the doors are shut in the streets." The senses fail by which we hold intercourse with the outside world, and which Bunyan describes in his "Holy War," under the figure of the five gates, Eye-gate, Ear-gate, etc., leading out of the city of Mansoul. "And he shall rise up at the voice of the bird," alluding to the sleeplessness of age, and perhaps, also, to the loudness with which even the chirp of a sparrow would resound through the deserted corridors. So he will lose his delight in singing men and singing women,—one of the chief amusements of wealthy Orientals. So the aged are "afraid of that which is high," just as the inmates of a dilapidated building would fear a slight thing which might cause the walls to collapse.

3. The end of all—Vs. 6, 7. Death is the last act in the great drama. The silver cord is severed which holds the hanging lamps that light up great mansions in the East. This is the thread of life, on which the lamps of memory, imagination, and all other faculties of the intellect are hung. The "golden bowl" itself is broken; that is, the body, which is the vessel containing the life-blood. The broken pitcher alludes to the cessation of the breath, through whose agency the blood is purified and carried to all parts of the human system. The "wheel broken at the cistern" alludes to the failure of the heart to act. Then the dust returns to the primal elements of which it was originally composed, and the spirit unto God who gave it;—a clear proof that soul and body are as different from each other as the jewel from the casket which contains it.

4. The conclusion of the whole matter—Vs. 13, 14. This is the sum of all which the preacher has said: "Fear God and keep his commandments." This takes in both faith and works, the practical and the meditative side of religion. "For this is the whole duty of man," the universal law, the only way to all happiness, and the true end of our being. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing," and good or evil, we must abide by the eternal consequences.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Endeavors of Southern Illinois are a helpful host, as in Mound City, taking the church service now and then in the absence of a pastor.

—Prof. W. S. Tyler, who has held the chair of Greek in Amherst College for fifty years, will retire at the coming commencement.

—The fifteenth annual meeting of the Illinois Association met in Canton May 15-17. The attendance was the smallest in years. The sessions were well-supported by those present, the interest beginning with the opening address Monday night, by Prof. Graham Taylor, and culminating in Prof. Scott's splendid paper on Wednesday evening at the close. The First Congregational church of Canton is one of the oldest churches in the State. It was organized as "The Presbyterian Church of Fulton County" in 1828. In 1838 it split into two factions, Old and New School, but with good feeling on the part of all. The New School wing became Congregational, under Rev. L. Spencer, Feb. 2, 1842. Its fiftieth anniversary was celebrated last year.

—The Secretary of the Michigan Association, at its recent annual meeting, reported the addition of more than two thousand members to the churches on confession during the year, and a net gain of 1,361 members, a number which has been equalled only twice before in the history of the association. The benevolences, $90,257, are the largest ever reported, the increase being chiefly in miscellaneous gifts included in the column of "other benevolences." The home expenditures of the churches, $344,284, are also the largest ever reported. The Christian Endeavor membership shows a gain of nearly two thousand, while the Sunday-school membership seems to have fallen off a little. The home missionary reports showed the organization of twenty-one churches during the year. The Association voted to undertake the raising of $22,000 the current year, and apportioned the amount among the several local associations.

FREE METHODIST.

—A State holiness convention will be held at Hartford, Michigan, commencing June 6, and continuing until June 13, 1893. Prominent holiness teachers from abroad are expected to be in attendance.

—The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Evansville Seminary will be held in the seminary building at Evansville, Wis., on Monday, June 5.

—A holiness convention will be held at Zion, Illinois, June 3, 4. Also a holiness convention will be held at Sorento, Illinois, June 24, 25. J. H. Maxey and S. D. Young are expected to be present.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The following from an exchange does not need comment: "The Ben Hur League of the New York Avenue Methodist church would like to hear from all church base-ball teams in Brooklyn who would like to join an inter-church league and play scheduled games for a pennant."

—Rev. C. B. Ward of India has received a grant of land containing 1,000 acres from the government at Bustar. It is among a half-million of aborigines in the territory of the Nizam, and is fertile but uncultivated.

—Dr. D. C. John of the Wisconsin conference has been elected president of Clark university, Atlanta, Ga. During the four-years' presidency of Dr. W. H. Hickman the college has prospered financially and in attendance.

—Bishop Andrews writes Secretary Hartzell: "My recent visits to Mississippi and Louisiana served to impress me most deeply with the importance of the work done by the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education society among our colored people. I have never so valued that work as I do to-day. The progress made in it, the wonderful improvement in the schools themselves, and the results of the schools, as seen in part in the kind of ministers they furnish to the conferences, leave no room, with me, for question that this part of our effort in the South is of great promise and of supreme importance."

—The Board of Missions of the M. E. Church South, at its recent session in Kansas City, made appropriations aggregating $261,598; of this sum $31,440 were for Brazil, $37,383 for China, $37,450 for Japan, $36,185 for central Mexico, $19,178 for the Mexican border, $17,730 for northwest Mexico, and $19,660 for the Indian work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The eighty-first class has gone out from Princeton Seminary to labor where the Master may call them. Fifty young men received their diplomas May 9, and were dismissed with the prayers and best wishes of the institution that has trained them for the work of the ministry.

—Reports to the General Assembly in Washington show that grants from the church erection fund amounting to $105,391 were made during the year. The board of aid for colleges has assisted forty institutions, the donations aggregating $63,630. The amount of $193,002 was expended last year for missions for freedmen. Under this board there are 152 ordained ministers and 258 churches, with a membership of 16,293 and 19,472 Sunday-school scholars. The total appropriation of the board of relief was $152,492. Seven hundred and twenty-two persons were assisted. The report of the board of foreign missions shows that forty-six new missionaries were sent out last year, there being now 623 missionaries connected with the board, and 1,647 active agents of all grades. The number of conversions reported by all missionaries last year was 3,452; the receipts from all sources were $1,014,504. The board of home missions last year organized 132 churches and placed fifty upon a self-supporting basis.

—"Revision is defeated," the Interior says, and it joins the Presbyterian in asking that the church may now have a rest.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Omaha Midland makes public the fact that the Cynosure's good friend, Rev. W. M. Howie, pastor of the Third church in this city, a young and growing congregation, receives a salary of only $1,200 per annum, and out of that pays the rent of a parsonage at $900 a year. To offset this expense, Mrs. Howie has fitted up rooms for the accommodation of World's Fair visitors, in her home at 3557 Prairie avenue, and has pledged herself to devote one-tenth of her income derived from this source to the church of which her husband is the pastor. Certainly she deserves a liberal patronage from a Christian public.

—The following is the approximate strength of the U. P. church in the United States: Ten synods, 62 presbyteries, pastors 804, of whom 238 are without charge; ministers, deceased 13, received 6, dismissed 6, suspended 1, ordained 32, installed 66, released 62, licentiates 81, licensures 50, students 66, ruling elders 3,702. Congregations, with pastors 638, vacant 297, total 935, pastoral charges 759, mission stations 207, churches erected 23, cost of churches $134,735, without house 61, parsonages 255, cost of parsonages $30,050. Church members 111,119, total baptisms 5,429, Sabbath-schools 1,116, teachers, etc. 11,156, scholars 96,908.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—May was a month of great assemblies. The U. B. General Conference at Dayton, Ohio, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church at Washington, D. C., Reformed Church General Synod at Reading, Pa., and the General Synod of the Lutheran church, at Canton, O. These are large bodies of Christian people.

—It is a well known fact now that there were intimate relations between Egypt and Canaan long before the time of Moses. The discoverers are beginning to find some of the correspondence which passed between the kings of those two countries. Only lately a very important discovery was made at Tell el Hesi, the ancient Lachish, by Mr. Bliss, who has been excavating at that place for several seasons. The discovery is a tablet covered with cuneiform characters which have been translated, and is found to be a letter from an officer in Palestine to one of the Pharaohs in time of a war before the Exodus from Egypt. An exchange says: "The Temple Tablet with its Greek inscription of the time of Christ, the Siloam inscription with its Hebrew record of the time of Hezekiah, and the Moabite Stone with its still more ancient epigraph from the days of Jehoshaphat—the first being 1,800 years old, the second 2,000, and the third 2,700—are all of great interest to the archaeologist and the Bible student. But the latest discovery in Palestine has brought to light a written record that was made before the days of Moses, and which, therefore, excels them all in antiquity, and from one point of view excels them all in interest. The gentleman who had the honor of making this remarkable discovery is an American, Mr. F. J. Bliss, son of President Bliss of the American Protestant College, at Beirut, Syria, and the discovery was not the result of accident, as in the three foregoing cases, but of systematic search."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Foreign exhibitors at the World's Fair who desire to sell and deliver goods which they brought here for the purpose, but which have already been entered as exhibits, can do so by having the acceptance of the goods by the Fair canceled. They will then be transferred to the government warehouse on the grounds and appraised, when the duty can be paid and the goods sold and delivered.

Dissatisfied with the system of awards adopted for the exposition, the following seventeen foreign countries have declined to assist in the work of awards, and have withdrawn their exhibits from competition: Austria, Belgium, Brazil, British Columbia, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Norway, Portugal, Russia, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

A New York paper has communicated with the cabinet ministers of the kings, queens, and emperors of Europe, and learns that very few of them have fully decided to come to Chicago this summer. The kings of Greece and Saxony cannot come. King Leopold, of Belgium, has not made up his mind, and Emperor William is not certain whether he can leave Germany.

Mayor Harrison, Chief McClaughry, Inspector Holt, and Corporation Counsel Kraus were in conference for several hours last week, discussing the duties of the chief of police in regard to stopping the sale of liquors at hotels in the World's Fair district. The result was the delivery of an opinion from the law department to the chief of police, to the effect that he need use no extraordinary effort to enforce the prohibition law of Hyde Park; in brief, holding that the city ought not to interfere with the appetites of its guests.

The heirs of Cyrus H. McCormick, founder of the McCormick Theological seminary, seek to recover $60,000 from the city by reason of damages said to have been done their property by the construction of the Jackson street bridge. The McCormick estate owns 100 feet square on the southwest corner of Jackson and Market streets. At the time Jackson street bridge was constructed the property had to be raised to grade, and the heirs claim that to do this cost $61,000.

The Literary Revolution.

The Literary Revolution has saved American book buyers millions of dollars in the cost of their books. Its methods: the coöperation of book buyers, securing cost of manufacture; direct sales, no agents, booksellers or other middlemen. Descriptive pamphlet, 32 pages, sent free on request. Mention this paper.

A Pretty Surprise.

Longfellow's Evangeline, in large type, 45 fine illustrations, on fine and heavy paper, richly bound in blue and white and silver and gold—for 19 cents, postage 6 cts.—usual price $1.00 to $1.50. Sold at about cost of manufacture by the 100,000, because pretty books in the hands of pleased customers are our best advertisements. Evangeline, without illustrations, paper covers, 4 cts.

More "Surprise" Bargains.

Sample books in the hands of pleased customers proving to be our best means of advertising, we offer, also, the following, which represent different styles in which we issue a large number of the world's best books; the prices cover only about the cost of manufacture by the 100,000 copies:

J. Fenimore Cooper's "The Pilot," cloth, 20c., postage, 8c.
Scott's "Ivanhoe," half morocco, gilt top, 35c., postage, 9c.
"Herodotus," in Ancient Classics for English Readers, cloth, 10c., post., 4c Great Handy Cyclopedias.

Alden's Cyclopedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price for the set, post-paid, 75c.

Alden's Cyclopedia of Natural History. Profusely illustrated. In 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price, post-paid, 75c.

10 Cents will secure by mail, post-paid, a specimen manilla volume, 160 pages, of either Cyclopedia, by which you can judge of the character of the remainder of the work.

Wonderful books in the amount of the most interesting and valuable knowledge given for a little money. Their equivalent cannot be had elsewhere under ten times the cost.

In The Cyclopedia of History you have ancient history back to B.C. 5004, and modern history down to 1892. Every nation of the earth, (except the United States which is to form an independent volume), is treated in its alphabetical order and described in its physical aspects as well as historically, so you have the equivalent of a book of travels round the world.

In the Natural History you have the most complete, popular, and at the same time thoroughly scientific, work ever compiled for general use. Nearly every beast, bird, or other creature, in earth, air or water, living or extinct, known to science, is described, and thousands of them are illustrated.

Uncle Tom's Cabin—5 cts.

Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" complete, in this type, cheap paper bound, for 5 cents, post-paid; the same in cloth, 10 cents, postage 7 cents.

A fine edition, in this type, excellent paper, printing and cloth binding, 25 cents, postage, 10 cents; or in half morocco, gilt top 40 cents, postage, 10c.

Oxford Teachers' Bibles.

With References, Concordance and Helps. Size, closed, 5 1/2 by 7 1/4 inches, by 1 1/2 inches thick. 1,336 pages, besides maps. We bind in two styles: Limp black silk cloth, red edges, 90c.; French Seal, Divinity Circuit, round corners, gilt edges, $1.80, postage, 18c.

Size of type shown by these lines. Beyond comparison the cheapest Bibles sold, and always found satisfactory. Circular describing finer and higher priced Bibles sent free.

Great Histories.

D'Aubigne, J. H. Merle, D.D. History of the Reformation, with numerous illustrations. Cloth, $1.10, postage, 40c.

Froude, James Anthony. Historical Essays. Cloth, 26c., postage, 9c.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SLEEP A PREVENTIVE OF NERVOUS DISEASES.

The average woman doesn't sleep enough, and that is why she finds herself growing fretful and irritable, a prey to nervous disorders. The increase of these troubles of the nerves is positively alarming, and it is a real trouble, and not an imaginary one, as some persons like to believe. The alleviation is in many cases in the sufferer's own hands, and the other women who as yet have not succumbed may prevent the disease by simply taking more sleep. A woman will plead that she hasn't time to lie down for a few minutes in the daytime, and she will infringe upon the hours of the night, which should be given to sound, healthy, needed sleep, in order to finish some piece of work which could as well be completed on the morrow. She will rush and hurry all day long, and then, when the household is all hushed in slumber at night, she will sit up to read the daily paper, thinking she will not have to pay for the time she is stealing from the health-giving sleep that comes before midnight. A physician, who is a specialist in nervous disorders, says that women should sleep at least nine hours at night and one hour in the daytime. Some women insist that they cannot sleep by daylight; but if they persist every day in closing the eyes at a regular time, slumber will come, and rest to the nerves will follow.

DIPHTHERIC POISON FROM APPLES.

Attention is called to the fact that apples stored in cellars or elsewhere are invariably covered with mould or mildew—often invisible, but just as real. This consists mostly of microscopic plants, including numerous species of fungi, all of which are more or less poisonous. Physicians say they have traced cases of diphtheria in children to the use of mouldy apples. Mothers are in the habit of giving little children apples to play with, and the babies try to eat them. In such cases the mould should be carefully removed from the apples.—Troy Times.

TO CLEANSE THE WELL.

Here is something that every man who owns a well ought to know:

I saw, says a writer in the Globe-Democrat, a curious method used the other day in Illinois to take the foul air out of a well. The well was to be cleaned, but the man that took the job was afraid to go down until he had ascertained the quality of the air at the bottom. He let down a lighted candle, and when it descended to within about six feet of the bottom, it went out as suddenly as though extinguished by a puff of air. That was all he wanted to know. He was then sure that the well had poisoned gas in it, and took a small umbrella, tied a string to the handle and lowered it open into the well. Having let it go nearly to the bottom, he drew it up, carried it a few feet from the well and upset it. He repeated this operation twenty or thirty times, with all the bystanders laughing at him, then again lowered the light, which burned clear and bright even at the bottom. He then condescended to explain that the gas in the well was carbonic acid gas, which is heavier than air, and therefore could be brought up in an umbrella just as though it was so much water. It was a simple trick, yet perfectly effective.

BEFORE THE DOCTOR COMES.

Many a woman has helplessly wrung her hands when disease has stepped over her threshold because she had no remedies with which to fight the enemy. Perhaps the doctor cannot come or she has no one to send for him, and the drug store is miles away. Every wife and mother should, in some degree at least, learn what to do in an emergency of this kind, and she should never be guilty of that crime against the well-being of her household—an empty medicine-chest. She should see to it that the hot-water bags or bottles are always ready for use, and that the jar is full of mustard. A bundle of cloths for bandages and plasters should be with these, so that no matter how great the panic into which

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Use a small, soft sponge to apply the blacking to a stove.

Tannin mixed with mutton tallow is good for chapped hands.

Put a teaspoonful of salt into a kerosene lamp once in a while.

A good-sized sponge is nice for cleaning paint and washing windows.

A paste made of equal parts of lard and powdered chalk will cure corns.

A large, soft sponge, either dry or slightly dampened, makes a good duster.

Throw a quantity of salt in the stove if the chimney is on fire and there is danger from sparks; if not, let it burn.

Nitre is excellent for a cold, especially a feverish one. Use ten drops to a teaspoonful, according to age, once in four hours.

A bottle of flexible collodion is very useful for cracks in the hands, scratches, cuts, etc. Care must be taken to keep it well protected from the air.

When the hair has fallen out, leaving the head bald, if the scalp is not shiny, there is a chance of regaining the hair by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry. As proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 18 and 14, 1851, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 50 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan," "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 800 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-masonry Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

FARM NOTES.

GAVE MILK FOR EIGHT YEARS.

For eight years I have owned a cow that has never been dry. The first year there was no period when we could dry her off, as she did not give less than three quarts at any time, so we kept on milking her. The period of least amount is about seven weeks before she is due to calve, and from then on she increases until at calving she gets back to a pailful again. At an institute three years ago she was a topic of discussion for a few minutes, and numerous farmers contended that I would ruin her by continuous milking, and that her progeny would be weak and valueless. She has had three calves since then, and two being heifers, we are raising them, and for growth, vigor and health they are the peers of any young cattle in town. Her oldest heifer calf is now a cow standing beside her mother, and has now given milk thirteen and one-half months, and is due to calve in about six weeks.

We have been watching her with considerable interest for the last few weeks, wondering whether she would follow her mother's example and be a continuous milker. All doubt on this point is now dissipated, as she has begun to gain, and her lowest yield has been one gallon per day. We had reason to believe that this would be the case, as we were obliged to milk her a week before calving. The cow we had previous to these would begin to fall in seven months, and was of little value after eight months. A difference of 33 per cent in length of milking period is considerable, yet I do not doubt there is near this wide range in every large dairy. To the objection that the milk is not fit for use I can only say, that it would take a skilled chemist to detect any difference in the milk up to within two days of calving. On one occasion it was the entire food of a thriving baby boy, and no deleterious effects could be detected.—L. B. Pierce in N. Y. Tribune.

BLOODY MILK.

Blood may appear from one or more of the teats at the time of milking from various causes. Among these we may mention congestion, inflammation or internal lesion of the udder, sudden transition to abundant and succulent food, eating of acrid vegetation, injury from rough milking, the presence of polypus tumors, etc. The milk is streaked with blood when it is drawn, and when allowed to stand in a vessel it falls to the bottom, where it may be seen as globules or clots. It will, of course, depend upon the cause what treatment to adopt. If due to the presence of injurious herbage, this should be avoided. If due to the presence of small polypus tumors within or above the teats, these tumors should be removed. If due to unknown causes internal treatment may be resorted to, and the following remedies may be used: Take three drachms of powdered camphor, three ounces each of powdered ginger and powdered oak bark, and two ounces of rye flour, divide into six parts and give one part morning and night well shaken together, with a pint of water in a bottle.—Prairie Farmer.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Said a young man to J. B. Terry the other day: "My father has 280 acres of land; I am the only son. I am 24 years old and have worked faithfully for father all my life. Sometime, thirty years from now, perhaps, I will doubtless have half of the land and sister the other half. But now I don't have anything. Father gives me a little money when I ask for it; but I don't have pay for my labor, not the half of what the hired man gets. Father won't hear to any move to start me for myself, unless I will get married and bring my wife into his house to save his keeping a hired girl, to state the plain truth. This I will never do (with flashing eyes). Father didn't do this way; I won't. But there is going to be a change before long. I haven't said much except to mother, but some day, before long, I will have a home of my own and be at work for myself." This is no fancy sketch. This young man's father is one of the leading men in a

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, better than any other Spring Medicine, fully prepares the system to resist the ailments and epidemics peculiar to March, April, May. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, quickens the appetite and imparts real and lasting benefit to every tissue and organ of the body. Positive proof of this statement may be had from anyone who has faithfully taken this wonderful medicine.

Read the statement of NATHAN S. CLEAVELAND, whose father was for 60 years Professor in Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.: "I believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal as a blood-purifier and Spring medicine. For Loss of Energy, That Tired Feeling, for Debility, Dizziness, Indigestion, or Dyspepsia, or for Loss of Appetite, this remedy has to me always been an unfailing specific. It gives tone to the stomach, aids digestion, overcomes restlessness, irritability, and nervousness, and exerts a beneficial and healthy action as a brain and nerve restorative. My father believed in the great medicinal value of this remedy, and never failed to recommend it, whenever opportunity offered. Some years ago, he urged my youngest sister to take it for debility, and a low state of the blood, and the result of her following his advice was very gratifying. She improved in health and strength from the first and was soon as well as ever. Whenever any one asks me, 'What do you consider the best blood-purifier?' my answer is, 'Ayer's Sarsaparilla.'" —NATHAN S. CLEAVELAND, 376 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, Mass.

The St. Louis Sermon.

Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?

An Address by Rev. B. Carradine D. D., Pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 4, 1891.

town I have lately visited, doing much for others, deeply interested in the institute, but forgetting his own son. Perhaps he doesn't realize how old the young man is getting. I promised this bright young friend to do what I could for him. Now to the father: My dear friend, you will make the worst mistake of your life if you let that young man go. He is your main dependence. But go he will, unless given a chance, as would any young man with any snap in him. You would have done the same yourself when of his age. "Then shall a man leave father and mother and cleave to his wife and his own home and individual interests," is a law you cannot change if you would.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 15th page).

Two mad dogs created a scene of great excitement in the neighborhood of Forty-eighth and West Lake streets one day last week, and before they were killed more than twenty persons had been bitten.

On Wednesday night, at the exhibition of Bedouin Arabs, in Garfield Park race course, fire destroyed a thousand feet of the low-roofed sheds and burned seven Arabian horses, and three Syrian camels, all valued at $42,000.

COUNTRY.

On Thursday the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company discharged 125 employes on the Sioux City and Mankato division and 400 working on the South Dakota lines. Superfluous men are being discharged on all the company's lines, to reduce expenses, and all improvement work is suspended.

The chief of the Cherokee Nation is on Wall street asking the loan of $6,000,000. He has the government's promises as collateral.

The spring storms along the Connecticut shores buried the oyster beds deep in sand. The State authorities sent out engineers to make an examination, and they estimate the damage at $2,000,000. The deep sea beds were those most injured.

Walter Olds, of Columbia City, chief justice of the Indiana Supreme court, it is reported, will tender his resignation to Gov. Matthews on June 1 as judge of the Supreme court for the Fourth district. He will leave the Supreme bench to move to Chicago, where he has arranged to form a law partnership.

The Michigan Legislature has passed a bill, to become a law in ninety days, conferring the right of women suffrage at school, city, village and municipal elections, and requiring voters to be able to read the State constitution.

At Sedalia, Mo., May 25, a cyclone caused considerable damage. The storm snapped the five poles supporting a circus in town like pipe-stems. The tent came down with a crash, burying 2,000 people beneath it. They were buried and struggled and several women fainted, but all were finally safely removed from beneath the canvas. Several received bruises, but no injury to life or limb resulted. It is due to the presence of mind of the employes of the circus that a panic did not result. At other towns within the sweep of this cyclone, in Missouri and Kansas, considerable property was destroyed.

Two children of Frank Managet, of St. Clair, Blue Earth county, Minn., were killed by the explosion of the tank of a gasoline stove. The children were aged 10 and 2 years, respectively. The house and its contents were entirely consumed.

For the first time since Memorial day was instituted all the graves of Union soldiers in Southern soil will be decorated with flowers this year. This tribute will be the result of a movement on the part of the Grand Army of the Republic. A fund has been called for and raised among Northern posts for use in assisting to decorate the graves of the comrades who sleep in the South. This fund has been expended in the purchase of flags, potted flowers, etc., and not a known grave, inside or outside the great National cemeteries in the South, will be overlooked on Memorial day this year.

Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias of Nebraska, has sued its ex-treasurer, Charles G. Alton, of Ainsworth, to recover $3,081. This amount is a shortage in his accounts caused by the failure of a bank with which Alton was connected.

From Minnesota, Iowa and South Dakota come accounts of terribly severe storms of wind, rain, lightning, which generally destroyed large amounts of property, and a few lives. In South Dakota the heavy winds have played havoc with late-sown wheat, which has been blown out of the ground in many cases.

A tornado, near Darlington, Wis., May 22, destroyed houses, barns and other buildings. One man and one woman were killed.

At Louisville, Ky., May 23, a wind-storm left in its wake ruined dwellings, uprooted trees and streets blocked with the wreckage of demolished buildings and telegraph and telephone wires.

At Beloit, Wis., the Third Regiment K. of P. Uniformed Rank has been organized.

No. 3 express on the Missouri Pacific was held up by unmasked robbers one mile and a half west of Pacific station. The express car was shattered with dynamite and the messenger was forced to open the safe and deliver the contents, thought to be about $4,000. Gov. Stone has offered a reward. The Governor and Treasurer of the State were on board.

Under the new State law of New York a man who takes part in a combine or trust is liable to a fine of $50,000 or imprisonment for one year or both.

The general synod of the Lutheran church, embracing all territory north of the Mason and Dixon line, convened at Canton, O., May 24. The session will last ten days. One thousand delegates were expected.

On Tuesday, at Corunna, Mich., William Sullivan, the farmer who brutally murdered his employer, Layton Leetch, and murderously assaulted the latter's wife, near Durand, last January, was taken from jail by an immense mob and lynched. More than 2,000 infuriated citizens participated in this despicable mob-murder.

FOREIGN.

May 24 the town of Thebes was shaken by an earthquake. Many houses collapsed and many others were made uninhabitable by the partial displacement of the foundations. One person was killed by a falling wall and several were injured.

Large districts in Roumania have been devastated by recent floods. Three large railway bridges and fifteen smaller ones have been destroyed.

The two months' drought in France is estimated to have destroyed 32,000,000 francs' worth of crops.

Throughout Piedmont rain has been falling in torrents. Rivers have overflowed their banks, several villages are under water, and bridges have been swept away. All railway traffic from Cuneo to Basha has been suspended.

President Richards, of the Iron and Steel Institute of Great Britain, addressing the annual meeting, said that the year 1892 had been one of the worst years ever known in the iron and steel industries. These industries were still greatly depressed and the outlook was gloomy.

The demonstration of the Irish National League of Great Britain in Hyde Park May 21 was a most enthusiastic affair. About 250,000 people were present and delegates attended from all branches of the league in the United Kingdom. Addresses were delivered by T. P. O'Connor, M. P., and other Irish leaders, and by Joseph Arch, M. P., the leader in the movement for the emancipation of the English agricultural laborers; D. Naoroji, M. P., formerly of India, and other well-known men. Resolutions were adopted approving Mr. Gladstone's home-rule plan and adopting it as a settlement for the Irish question.

In Ireland, while a train on the Tralee and Dingle railway was going down a steep grade, the engine driver lost control of the engine. The train ran at a high rate of speed half way across a viaduct on a curve, then jumped the track and fell fifty feet. Five passengers were killed instantly, and twelve more were wounded severely. The carriages and the engine were completely wrecked.

At Minneapolis, Minn., the proposed race by mounted cowboys from Chadron, Neb., to the World's Fair, will be vigorously opposed by the local Humane Society. Anything so brutal should be met by all legal means of prevention.

The Auxiliary Congress of the World's Fair is this week discussing the Temperance question. This is all right, if the discussion will tend to promote absolute prohibition of the traffic and not stop at high license and Good Templarism—both of which are relics of a false civilization. The age and the emergency demand a more effective remedy than either offers.

The last of the Homestead Carnegie labor riot suits is ended. All the charges of murder, etc., against H. C. Frick and others of the steel company officials, as well as against the Pinkerton detectives, were dropped last week by the courts. All the strikers who had been arrested, but not yet tried, were also released on their own recognizances. It has been a disgraceful and unprofitable affair from first to last.

"Masonry is a religious institution."—"Prayer at the making of a brother: . . . Endue him with a competency of thy divine wisdom, that he may, with the secrets of Freemasonry, be able to unfold the mysteries of godliness and Christianity."—Ahiman Rezon (Pennsylvania), p. 183. This hardly sounds consistent in connection with our present knowledge of the fraternity. But then Masonry is notoriously hypocritical.

Lodge despotism is characteristically exhibited in the recent action of the G. A. R., in revoking the charter of Farnham Post for adopting a series of very sensible resolutions about our pension system without "the approval of its department and national commanders." Military discipline in the most arduous campaign is mild, compared with the tyranny of the czars of the secret, oath-bound society.

Lawlessness and brutality made its appearance at Lafayette, Ind., last week, when a mob took a Negro criminal from the jail and put him violently to death. We have been accustomed to hear of these disgraceful affairs in the South and West for many years; but their frequent recurrence in the North, of late, is not a good testimony to our boasted civilization.

The Voice of Masonry casually refers to "the revised ritual" adopted by the Grand Lodge of Ohio. Those who understand the foundations of Masonry as a universal institution—the "Landmarks"—will be loth to believe that the Grand Lodge of Ohio, or any other State, has the power to change an essential portion of the established ritual in its subordinate lodges. A local adaptation or alteration in its verbiage, to meet the intellectual capacity of various Master Masons, is all that "revision" can accomplish.

The question of secret societies and their relations to the Christian church, we are glad to see, is still a "disturbing element" among the divided (Conservative and Liberal) United Brethren in Christ. We find the following in the last number of the Christian Conservator (Conservative) which indicates the estimation of the lodge system in each, respectively:

The I. O. O. F. of Gibson City, Illinois, celebrated their 74th anniversary in the United Brethren church (Liberal) on Sunday, May 14. Rev. Finley Reynolds, the Liberal pastor, preached the sermon. His subject was, "Shall I Join a Secret Society? Answered from Natural and Revealed Religion." Next we expect to hear of the Divine Institution of Liquor Traffic from some of the progressive (?) ministers.

Suicides of prominent and ostensibly wealthy business men, frequent failures of feeble bankers and brokers, and a remarkable falling off in clearing house returns, leads the Inter Ocean to remark that "we have entered upon a period of serious depression in values in all lines of trade and industry. Under a decided contraction of credits the country goes calmly on with its efforts toward better conditions in the mercantile and manufacturing field, cherishing the hope that the process of liquidation will benefit the many at the expense of the weak few. There are elements of hope in the growing crops, the decrease in imports and possible amendments to our financial legislation." It is very evident that the greed for money has led to reckless speculation and overproduction, two evils that are constantly leading "operators" into tight and depressing places. We believe, however, that those who employ only careful and legitimate business methods have little to fear, unless involved by unscrupulous speculators.

Strikes, riots and lock-outs, during the past week, have again demonstrated the precarious relations that continue to exist between labor and capital. At Lamont, in this county, stone miners and excavators on the drainage canal, mostly Poles and Swedes, struck last week, to the number of about 1,000, took possession of the saloons, filled up with what they found in them, and terrorized the peaceful residents of the village, and it required energetic efforts on the part of the authorities to preserve peace. Miners in Kansas struck, and the 30,000 in that State and Missouri and Indian Territory, it is anticipated, will have quit work by the first of July. The other 70,000 in the unions are expected to assist in maintaining the strike. Five thousand workmen were thrown out of employment at Cincinnati on Saturday, by the shutting down of about seventy furniture factories. Altogether the outlook for labor and capital is very discouraging, inasmuch as the trouble is likely to spread before harmony can be restored. "Organized labor," depending upon the tyranny of the secret unions, is a menace to the best interests of society.

In taking the liquor traffic out of the hands of the saloon-keepers and other private dealers, and vesting it solely in the State, as South Carolina proposes to do on the first of July, a new feature of the temperance agitation will be presented—one, too, that will be watched with undisguised interest. It is already attracting a great deal of attention; and while many favor the change, like all reforms, however good, it is ridiculed by some. It at once throws the responsibility of the traffic upon the State authorities. It establishes dispensaries, from which consumers must supply themselves, and these are to be closed at nightfall. All liquors kept for sale are to be examined chemically, to insure their purity. We do not understand the scale of discrimination to be adopted among purchasers of these liquors. There is, undoubtedly, such a scale—a distinction between adults and youth, between drunkards and other persons. The proceeds are to go into the county and municipal treasuries. The experiment is an attempt to make the liquor traffic respectable and contract its evils. It is on a par with high license—perhaps a little better; but we fear that it will prove very inefficient as a temperance reform. Total abstinence is the only safeguard, and total abstinence can only be maintained by absolute prohibition of the traffic.

THE LAW OF CHRIST AND IMMIGRATION.

[During the sessions of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at New Castle, Pa., the afternoon of June 4 was set apart for a 20-minute address by Rev. J. M. Foster in the Opera House on this subject. The following is a copy of his discourse on that occasion.]

The law of Christ is the solution of all national questions. He has been exalted to the throne of universal dominion. The wheels of providence, in their intricacy, mystery, sublimity and universality, are subject to his hand. He is head over all things to his church. The "principalities and powers" among the angels and the "thrones and dominions" among men are subject to his authority. He is Lawgiver and King and Judge. The legislative, judicial and executive departments of government are under law to Christ. He executes the judgments of God upon rebellious nations. He bestows the blessings of heaven upon obedient nations. All national questions are to be referred to him. Bengel said: "Apply thyself wholly to the word and apply the word wholly to thyself." "What saith the law? How readest thou?"

Paul said to the Athenians on Mars' Hill: God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." The course of civilization and the path traversed by nations are marked out by the King of kings. This earth is his field, and he has given the freedom of it to the human family. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." And to man he said: "Be fruitful and subdue the earth."

America is the immigrant's home. As Lowell said, in his "Commemoration Ode," our country has "room about her hearth for all mankind." Our Declaration of Independence says: "All men are created free and equal, and are endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This country was settled by immigrants. The Puritans came to Massachusetts; the Dutch to New York; the Scotch-Irish to North Carolina; the Spanish to Florida; the French to New Orleans. Our nation has grown great by immigration. In 1890 there were 20,000,000 people here of foreign birth and foreign parentage. By the end of this century there will be 43,000,000 of foreign birth or foreign parentage. They are coming to us from every kingdom under heaven, and we can no more hinder them than we can arrest the incoming tides. The hand of God is in it; and as long as we have unoccupied lands to be tilled, and undeveloped mines to be worked, and cities to be built, they will continue coming.

The fact is patent to the most casual observer, that these multitudes are not being assimilated by our American life; so that we find a little Irish nation here, a little German there, a little Italian yonder, a little Bohemian elsewhere. This state of things starts the inquiry: What is to be the future outcome of all this? I answer:

1. This is God's providential call to the 143 denominations of Reformed churches to bestir themselves. God has brought the heathen to our doors. Instead of demanding that they be sent back or kept out we should feed them and clothe them. And if we withhold from them the bread of life, and the fine linen clean and white, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us. "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these, ye did it not unto me." The Gospel will solve this question.

There are 7,000,000 colored people in the South. They did not come here of their own accord. Their fathers were kidnapped and brought here as slaves. They are free now. God had a purpose in bringing them. Joseph was sent into Egypt to prepare the way for his brethren. His brethren meant it for evil; God meant it for good. They are here to be educated and Christianized, and incorporated into this Christian nation. They will be the divine messengers to the dark continent, as the Chinese here, when Christianized, will be the natural heralds of the cross of Christ in the Flowery Kingdom. "Washington's monument" has granite blocks from different countries. But it is a lifeless shaft. This nation has representatives from every kingdom. By the Gospel they will be united as one colossal man, one great Christian nation.

2. The state must receive and apply both tables of the Decalogue. This nation should make a constitutional recognition of the authority and law of Christ and give its pledge to serve him, and that will bring down his Spirit and unite us one composite Christian nationality.

It should stipulate, in the compact, that the enemies of Christ be excluded from office and only his friends be made eligible. And the application of Christ's law to incoming foreigners would result in the requirement of these conditions: 1. All who are in sworn allegiance to the Pope, the Endowment House, or the secret oath-bound lodge, could not become citizens without renouncing this extra-American authority. 2. All idolaters, whether in papal cathedrals, Chinese Joss houses, Mormon Endowment House, or Masonic temple, are to renounce their idolatry or be prosecuted as criminals. 3. All who prostitute the divine ordinance of the oath by administering or receiving it without divine authority, and all guilty of blasphemy and profanity are to be judicially punished. 4. All must work six days in the week and rest the seventh. Vagrancy, loafing, idleness, are crimes. All must work that all may eat. And all must rest on Sabbath; Sunday trains, Sunday mails, Sunday newspapers, and Sunday excursions must cease, that the nation may have her Sabbath rest. 5. Authority in the divine institutions of the family, the church and the state must be respected. Obedience the just and legal authority is obedience to God. Rebellion against just and legal authority is resisting God. "And they that resist shall receive judgment." 6. Every saloon must be outlawed, and the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage made a capital offence. 7. Houses of ill-fame and the "social evil" must be prohibited, and speedy and easy divorce made impossible by a uniform national divorce law. Mormon polygamy must be wiped out. 8. Stock-gambling must be stopped; money-kings and grasping corporations and heartless trusts and syndicates must be subjected to the restrictions involved in the golden rule. 9. Falsehood and perjury must be punished with rigor. 10. Discontent, anarchy and lawlessness must be made afraid of the arm of the law which is held over them.

The application and enforcement of these principles will settle the immigration question.

In Ohio, when the tramps were very numerous, a certain man prepared a pile of cord-wood, a saw-buck and a saw; and when a tramp came begging for bread, he required him to saw wood two hours for a good warm meal. The tramps soon learned of that man and gave his home the go-by. When the worthless, shiftless pauper and criminal classes in other lands hear that coming to America means to become industrious, economical, temperate, Sabbath-observing, and intelligent, God-fearing citizens, none will come except those who wish in their hearts to do better. The wood-pile argument separates the good from the bad.

When David was at the cave of Adullam, every one that was in distress in Israel, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, resorted to him and he became a captain over them. By applying the law of God to them, he made them an invincible host. So let all who will come to America, and let our government become a captain over them, and apply the law of God. And when this nation recognizes the Lord Jesus Christ as the King of kings, and his Spirit is poured out upon all classes, then there will be no white or black, no Chinese or Irish, no German or Bohemian, but all will be Americans—citizens of one great Christian nation.

Now as to our relations and dealings with the Chinese. The first Chinaman came to America about fifty years ago. They were needed in California and were solicited. Owing to the traditional exclusiveness of the Chinese nation, not many came, however, until after the Burlingame treaty, in 1868, granting mutual rights and privileges to the inhabitants of the two countries.

Under its operation 100,000 Chinamen came to this country. The Chinese fell in love with Burlingame, and after his death deified him. He is worshiped to day as one of their gods. They reclaimed the swamps of the Pacific coast, built our railroads, and cultivated fruits. They continued coming at the rate of 3,000 in two months; but, as many returned and in many years there had been no material increase, there are not more than 110,000 here to-day. But some 20,000 Irish laborers were imported to California. They held the balance of power between the Republican and Democratic parties. They demanded the exclusion of the Chinese as their competitors. Both parties were desirous of securing the 20,000 Irish votes. The Chinese had no votes. It is admitted that they are honest, industrious and economical. They do not drink. They lay up their money instead of spending it for whisky. But it was said they take their money back to China, $45,000,000 annually. But what of that? They give us their labor. We receive from them much more. It is estimated that every immigrant adds, by his labor alone, $1,000 to the wealth of the nation. The Chinese add $100,000,000 to the resources of our country. But the spirit of race-prejudice, such as prevailed among the Jews against the Samaritans, the Greek against the barbarians, and the Russians against the Jews, arose against them, and they were subjected to all kinds of indignities. The cry of alarm was raised on the Pacific coast. Something must be done to protect the 20,000 Irish voters from these yellow, non-voting laborers. The sand-lot orators took up the hoodlum cry: "The Chinese must go." That cry came rolling over the mountains and struck the Capitol at Washington. In response, an act was forced through Congress, under the leadership of the representatives of the Pacific coast, excluding the Chinamen. But President Hayes vetoed it, because it violated the provisions of the Burlingame treaty. As a sop to the hoodlums, however, a commission was appointed, which went to China under the lead of James B. Angell, president of Ann Arbor University, and secured a supplementary treaty, providing for a restriction of the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country—a limited restriction, which should be reasonable. In 1880, the cry from California was so loud that the politicians were alarmed, and both political parties inserted anti-Chinese planks in their national platforms. In pursuance of this the Forty-seventh Congress passed a bill, which President Arthur vetoed, because it violated the supplementary treaty, in that it prohibited the importation of Chinese laborers into this country, absolutely, for a term of twenty years. This was deemed unreasonable. Still the cry for relief for the 20,000 Irish laborers in California came up, and the Forty-seventh Congress was literally "held by the throat" until they gave it. And on the 6th of May, 1882, that Congress passed a bill which went into effect Aug. 11 of the same year. That bill provides that "no Chinaman shall come to America to work for ten years." In 1886 the Forty-ninth Congress passed a bill that excluded them entirely as laborers. This was thought reasonable. But the truth is, it is most unreasonable. We do not hesitate to pronounce it infamous.

In the Fifty-second Congress, on May 5, 1892, the notorious Geary act was passed by both houses and speedily signed by President Harrison, which went into effect May 5, 1893, requiring every Chinaman to be registered and labeled; and, failing to do this, is to be exported to China. The great good sense of President Cleveland has kept him from enforcing such an iniquitous measure, and prompted him to order all the legal blood-hounds chained, and the Chinese to be left unmolested.

Herbert Spencer said: "You cannot, by any political alchemy, get golden conduct out of leaden instincts." And the instincts of both Republican and Democratic parties are leaden. Epictetus said: "Many have golden and silver vessels, while their principles and practices are the commonest sort of earthenware." The principles and practices of these parties are of the earth, earthy.

The government may extradite criminals. It may quarantine against contagious diseases. But to forbid an honest, industrious man the freedom of this country is to trample under foot the law of God. What right have the immigrants of 1620 to say to the immigrants of 1893, You cannot stay? It is un-American, anti-humane, anti-Christian.

INCREASE OF CRIME—THE REMEDY.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Results in the moral, not less than in the natural world, come from adequate causes; and moral, not less than material evils, must be carefully studied and remedied by appropriate means.

Crime, in all its manifestations, is the outgrowth of human instinct, when prompted by selfishness, and unrestrained by considerations of reason and justice. "Out of the heart of man," says our Divine Lord, "proceed evil thoughts, murders, fornications, adulteries, theft, false witness, blasphemies; these defile the man." (Matt. 15:19.) We may add that they corrupt the world and fill it with sorrow.

All plans for the reformation of society that do not propose a change in man's natural character will be vain. If we would reform the world, we must reform the individuals; and this reformation must be from the heart.

It follows that the great remedy for all moral and social evils is the Gospel of Christ. This alone is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This alone, in its final prevalence, will bring "peace on earth and good will to men."

The first and highest duty of all Christians, all philanthropists and all citizens, is to embrace and seek to promote the Gospel of Christ, and to insist, always and everywhere, on a practical application of its principles to all social and political relations. This, indeed, includes all other remedies. But among the specific applications of Christianity we notice:

1. A righteous civil government. While it is not in the power of civil law to make men obey God, yet it can do much towards making virtue pleasant and vice painful. Every incentive to a life of iniquity should be suppressed, and all possible inducements to a life of virtue held out. A righteous government implies righteous rulers. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." It is a primary duty of all people to choose righteous rulers, and insist that they shall rule in righteousness.

2. We need a higher respect for civil law, and a far more careful enforcement of its provisions. The want of this enforcement is one of the most prolific causes of crime. Of the 6,000 murders that are annually perpetrated in the United States, scarcely more than 100 are duly punished, while a much larger number of those charged with this and other crimes, suffer the death-penalty at the hand of the mob. The enforcement of mob law is among the worst of crimes, since it disregards all human enactments and teaches to all men a lesson of lawlessness. Doubtless some good men have sometimes countenanced this form of anarchy. They have consented to it because civil law had failed of its purpose, forgetting that by such consent they had contributed to its failure. There is a marked analogy between lynch law as a substitute for civil penalties, and secret societies for so-called moral and benevolent purposes, as a substitute for organized Christianity. The latter exist because of the alleged failure of the church. Their very existence is a standing disparagement to the church, and an assumption that a mere human contrivance is better than the divine plan. Mob law, while it professes to punish, actually fosters crime, by taking away the authority of civil law. Secret societies, in like manner, foster selfishness, by appealing to purely selfish considerations and impiety, by lessening all respect for organized Christianity.

3. Doubtless the most prolific of the immediate causes of crime in the use of, and traffic in, intoxicating drinks, and hence one of the most immediate remedies in the discountenancing of the use, and the suppression of the traffic in all intoxicants. Statistics abundantly show that a large per cent of all crimes, especially of crimes against life, come from the use of alcoholic drinks. It is also clearly shown that where this traffic has been prohibited, even though the law has been but imperfectly enforced, there has been a marked diminution in the number of arrests for crime; and that this has been, in its turn, followed by an increase when the traffic has been legalized. The cities of Atlanta, Georgia, and Worcester, Mass., are marked examples of this influence.

4. A more careful consideration of the quality of our immigrants.

While we have no right to exclude any virtuous, law-abiding people from our domain, we have a right to prevent our land from becoming the refuge of criminals from the Old World. It is safe to say that in all our large cities the proportion of crimes by persons of foreign birth largely exceeds that of the native Americans.

5. We need to give special attention to the Christian education of the colored people of the South. Statistics show that they furnish a large percentage of criminals. This is doubtless owing to poverty, ignorance, inadequate religious instruction and the oppression that grows out of the prevailing race-prejudice. The remedy is not in lynch law, or race hatred, but in the patient Christian instruction of a people whose misfortune it is to have been more than one thousand years behind us in the growth of a Christian civilization.

6. We ought to provide, by law, that all organized societies shall be open to public, or, at least, to governmental inspection. So long as men are bound together by secret oaths, under codes of law that are often in conflict with the laws of the land, there will be abundant occasions for partiality in the administration of justice, and of oppression of those who will not obey their behests. The many murders that have been committed, or inspired, by secret trades unions during the last year are indications of the dangerous nature of these organizations and are occasion of just alarm for the safety of our free institutions. There may be occasion for labor associations, but unless the element of oath-bound secrecy can be eliminated, they are, and will be, the constant sources of anarchy and crime. These are only a part of the many practical applications of Christianity to our social relations.

Oberlin, O.

THE WESLEYANS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

About fifty years ago, as a body of reformers, we came to the front to take issue against one of the greatest evils that ever cursed our land; namely, American slavery. Though the conflict was long and fierce, through God we came off victorious; and chattel slavery is numbered among the things of the past. There are other gigantic evils which we are called upon to meet. Among these are the many secret combinations that seem to be springing up in every village and hamlet in our land; and what makes this evil more alarming, is the power it exerts over the church and the political interests of our country.

We are forced to believe that these institutions of darkness are increasing in our land, and are organized for no other purpose than to secure undue advantage over the uninitiated. How ruinous and destructive these secret foes are to the churches, and consequently antagonistic to the religion of Christ! In view of this fact every child of God, and especially the watchmen on the walls of Zion, should cry aloud and spare not against this modern heathenism; especially would we urge the necessity of this in our own loved Zion. It is not enough for us to know that we have a rule in our discipline against secret societies. We have got this evil to fight. Men who have yoked themselves with unbelievers in these dark secret orders are creeping in among us, causing contentions and divisions, sowing seeds of discord, introducing a spirit of worldliness, robbing the church of her power to do good, and some have by secret scheming got control and management of our churches. God's Word forbids us forming any alliance with the ungodly in society. When the Christian binds himself by solemn obligation with the unbelieving world in those places where they meet inside of barred doors, at the midnight hour, to carry out selfish motives, they become partakers with them, and God will hold us responsible for the vast amount of property and lives that are being sacrificed in our cities, with the ruin and misery that follow in the trail of these riots and mobs, led on by the secret empire. May God help us to awake to these facts and watch more vigorously this dark foe. I sometimes think that we, as a denomination, are falling from grace on this question; especially is this true in regard to some of our churches. It seems to me that there never was a time when the cry, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord," was more needed than now.—M. Hill, in Wesleyan Methodist.

IMPURE FELLOWSHIPS.

"Hope to help some poor soul to look to Jesus before joining secret orders. I feel so sad when thinking of the way people are led away from God by joining them. Many of our best young men are ruined by them. Instead of prayer meetings, they have balls and other entertainments; and then pretend they are as good as a church. It is awful, awful to think of!"

The words of our correspondent are timely words. These things are pitfalls for the young. It is not to be wondered at that the careless and unregenerate, the worldly and the infidel, flock to them. They are well calculated to feed the sinful heart. They are of the world, worldly, and belong not to God. All should let them alone.

Are there no differences of degree in the evils of these orders? No doubt. But all of them are sufficiently out of the way to be let alone. Many of them are particularly Christless, and spiritually disastrous.

Why should a true child of the King mix up with these unspiritual institutions? He has high and pure fellowships; why should he seek the low and the impure?

You will notice that of those Christians who are not entirely free from them, when they become intensely spiritual, the relish for the lodge grows proportionally small and disappears. Christ weans us from anti-Christ, and holds us to himself. Praise his name!—Cleveland (O.) Harvester for June.

THE BISHOP OF DURHAM AND ARBITRATION.

It is rumored that there is some likelihood of a motion in favor of an Arbitral Treaty between Great Britain and the United States being brought forward in the House of Lords, some time this session, by the Bishop of Durham. If Bishop Westcott can find a suitable opportunity for so doing, he will render a further valuable service to the good cause which he has already so materially aided. It is of special importance that any such action in the Legislature should thus be taken by men actuated, like the late Henry Richard, by profound Christian sentiment, in addition to other influences. In the Bishop of Durham such requirements eminently exist.

The old and honorable watchword of the Liberal party, "Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform," seems now to be forgotten, at least in a great degree. For the present Liberal Government have, already this year, increased the previously enormous Army Estimates by £150,000, and the Civil Estimates by £500,000, whilst retaining the vast Naval expenditure of fourteen million pounds, with a mere reduction of £100,000.

Senor Mattee, Chilean Minister, in Paris, has been requested by his government, at Valparaiso, to proceed to Berne, to obtain the consent of the Swiss Government to the appointment of the President of the Federal Supreme Court of Justice, as arbitrator, in respect of the claims of the Peruvian bondholders.

The Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Arbitration is to be held this year at Christiana, in July. The government of Sweden and Norway has made a grant of £700 towards the expenses of the Conference.—English Herald of Peace.

MR. MOODY'S NORTHFIELD MEETINGS.

THE WORLD'S STUDENTS' CONVENTION will be held from July 1 to 12, inclusive.

The speakers already engaged for this gathering are: Prof. Henry Drummond, Glasgow, Scotland; Rev. Henry Van Dyke, New York City; Rev. H. P. Beach, School for Christian Workers, Springfield, Mass.; Prof. Geo. T. Purves, Princeton College; and Congressman W. C. P. Breckenridge of Kentucky, who will deliver the 4th of July oration. Also among those confidently expected are Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D., Brooklyn; Rev. W. H. P. Faunce, D.D., New York City; and Prof. M. W. Jacobus, Hartford Theological Seminary. Messrs. Robert E. Speer and Jas. McConaughy will lead the Bible Training Classes. The singing will be conducted by Prof. D. B. Towner.

Between this convention and the General Conference of Christian Workers, lectures or Bible readings will be given at least six times a week. In years past these continued services have proved a great blessing to all who enjoy the more quiet sessions.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS will be held from August 1 to 13, inclusive.

A large number of home workers, many foreign missionaries and preachers are expected to assemble.

Among those who have been invited to speak, some of whom have already accepted, are the following: Rev. A. C. Dixon, Brooklyn; Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., Boston; Rev. B. Fay Mills, Providence; Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Philadelphia; Merrill E. Gates, Ph. D., LL. D., President Amherst College; Prof. W. W. Moore, University of Virginia; Prof. Robert Thompson, Lake Forest University; Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence; Hon. R. Morton, Hamilton, Ontario; Rev. John McNeil, Scotland; Maj. D. W. Whittle, Northfield, Mass. We also confidently expect many of the workers, including several from foreign lands, who are now assisting Mr. Moody in his Chicago "World's Fair" campaign, to be present and take part at various times. The singing will be under the direction of Messrs. Ira D. Sankey and Geo. C. Stebbins.

Mr. D. L. Moody will be at home during the summer, and (D. V.) will personally conduct the services of these conventions, as well as addressing various meetings during the season.

Although this assembly will formally close on the 13th of August, prominent Bible students will have charge of special services at least six times each week until September.

Wednesday, September 6, Mt. Hermon School opens; Thursday, Sept. 14, Northfield Seminary opens; Friday, Sept. 29, Northfield Training School opens.

Those who are fortunate enough to remain until after these dates will be amply repaid for their stay in seeing the workings of these institutions. During the opening days of these schools eminent preachers or lecturers will address the students, and to these gatherings visitors are also invited.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins, Prof. and Mrs. D. B. Towner will be in Northfield during the summer, and besides having charge of the music for the conferences will sing at the various other meetings.

Visitors to Northfield may be accommodated with first-class board and rooms at "The Northfield" or in private boarding places. Prices range from $6.00 per week upwards.

For additional information as to trains, accommodations, etc., apply to A. G. Moody, E. Northfield, Mass.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Bizarre fashions.—The author of Uncle Tom's Cabin.—Divers matters.—The endowment orders and the daily press.

Dame Fashion has never been credited with a very level head, but this season she has certainly gone crazy. So many bizarre effects in arrangement and violent contrasts of color were never seen before, at least in our sober New England towns and cities, outside of a lunatic asylum. Think of a blue butterfly cape, trimmed in gold, with underskirt of rose color, and outside one, rose color slashed with brown; or a dress of red trimmed with the brightest pea-green; or a complete suit of canary yellow! It is no argument in favor of these "loud" styles that tints equally bright and varied can be found in any flower-garden, for the Lord knows how to combine scarlet and blue and purple better than we do; and until the popular taste is trained to a far higher pitch of perfection than it has yet attained, it is worse than folly for human beings to try to emulate in their dress the mixture of tints in the flowers of the field or on a bird's wing. A grave simplicity of attire is always safe, economical and becoming to the great majority of people. The Columbian episode may be responsible for the present "craze;" but whatever may be its origin, in the name of our outraged artistic sensibilities, heaven grant that it may soon have its run and be over with! Such startling effects in color and trimming are vulgar, and only show a poverty of mind and lack of true culture in the wearer. An artist once said to me that she almost wished a law might be passed forbidding the painting of houses in discordant colors, as in Italy street-musicians are forbidden to play on instruments out of tune. One is tempted to go farther and wish that the law might be extended so far as to prevent the introduction of barbaric combinations of color in dress that pain and afflict a cultivated taste.

The author of Uncle Tom's Cabin "is living her childhood over again". So says a newspaper item. She cuts out paper-dolls and sings the old-time hymns and nursery ballads which delighted her when a curly-haired little creature growing up among her big brothers and sisters in the Litchfield parsonage, where mental culture and rare genius struggled with lack of means to evolve a rare blossoming, a still rarer fruitage. She could have had no thought, as she crooned her baby songs, that her name would be famous all over the world as the wielder of the sharpest weapon ever yet forged against a giant wrong by the hand of woman; and now the remembrance of her literary triumphs, and the ovations which she received from all classes in England and Scotland, during that foreign tour embalmed in her "Sunny Memories," must seem to her, if she recollects them at all, as dim and dream-like as the receding horizon line of shores we shall never see again. People say it is very sad, and in one sense it is; but is there not something very beautiful about it, after all? To become a little child once more, to roam again among the charmed scenes of infancy, and then some day to grow weary of it all, and close her eyes as she closed them in her baby-slumbers, only for a longer sleep and a more blessed awaking, to realize, as she herself in other days so beautifully sang,

"How lovely and how sweet a pass
The hour of death may be!"

The prospects are for a cool summer, on the principle that hot summers are never to be expected after unusually hard winters. This may be favorable for keeping down the germs of the dreaded cholera. But what a scare a single case of cholera or small-pox will create, when we read unmoved that a hundred thousand persons die annually in this country from consumption, and 15,000 in New England alone! As a rule, our dread of a disease seems to be proportioned to our lack of familiarity with it, and the rapidity of its execution.

In the Connecticut Legislature a resolution was lately introduced, protesting against Sunday opening of the Columbian Exposition, and "ordering, if such action is taken by the board of managers, that the Connecticut headquarters shall remain closed on that day, and notice given that it is closed by direction of the General Assembly of Connecticut." But the resolution got tabled.

Edward Everett Hale draws an unfavorable comparison between Harvard College as it was in his under-graduate days, half a century ago, and now, when athletics absorb the major part of the students' time and attention. We, in our simplicity and ignorance, used to suppose that the chief end of a college was to turn out students. Now all this must be unlearned. The chief end, of at least our principal colleges, seems to be to turn out athletes. I am sorry to see that the trend in our girls' colleges is in the same direction. There is reason to wonder whether all this physical culture, this boating and tennis-playing, is not at the expense of the finer womanly traits, as well as of the highest scholarship.

Women may vote in the Episcopal Church of Massachusetts. Now the same question is to come before the Connecticut diocese. Even in this most conservative of churches, woman's cause is moving on.

A Connecticut paper reports the order of Good Templars as fast decreasing in that State. The Grand Lodge "is burdened with ring-rule and inefficient officers, and the order has followed its usual tendency everywhere to drop temperance work and become a mere matrimonial bureau."

Some of the certificate-holders in the Royal Ark will get back the munificent sum of 22 cents. Others will fare a little better and get three or four dollars; but the fortunate first members who, by grace of the Supremes, "went in on the ground floor," get a clear one hundred dollars. "The immoral is ultimately the unsuccessful," says a leading Rhode Island paper, in commenting on the downfall of the endowment orders. "Let the public learn that if a thing is not square with justice it is unsafe." This is excellent doctrine, but, though it may seem ungracious to say so, it comes too late to be of much practical benefit to the cheated and deluded victims. "He who does not help us at the needful moment never helps. He who does not counsel at the needful moment never counsels," says Goethe. If the daily papers had spoken out on this subject before the mischief was done, and warned the people of the folly of expecting something for nothing, not only would many who are now mourning their hard-earned money swept away have been saved from loss, but they would have fulfilled their chief end, which is to keep the people correctly informed regarding everything which affects the public interest or the public morals. But for the most part the press, dominated by Masonic influence, was silent as the grave, or advertised freely these lying swindles. Recently a prominent member of the Massachusetts Legislature dabbled in stocks on State street, and lost $16,000, the savings of an entire life-time. But he may possibly retrieve his fortunes and profit by the hard lesson; while the majority who have invested in the endowment orders cannot hope to make it up. There are dogs of untold bitterness in the counsel which comes just too late to profit.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 31, 1893.

The probable attitude of the Chinese government towards the United States is still a leading subject of conversation here. Early this week it was publicly stated by Mr. J. Hubley Ashton, a prominent Washington lawyer, who is in the employ of the Chinese government, that notice had been served upon the Department of State by China that the first move towards the enforcement of the Geary law would result in the severing of all existing relations between the two governments. Secretary Gresham states positively that no such notice has been given the Department of State, and now opinion is divided as to whether Mr. Ashton made a mistake, or whether he unintentionally divulged a state secret of the Chinese government, believing that it had already been communicated to Secretary Gresham. "There will be no rupture of our relations with China," said a Congressman who voted for the Geary law, "simply because there will be no occasion therefor. The deportation clause of the Geary law will not be enforced; it was never intended by Congress that it should be. It was inserted in the bill solely for the purpose of compelling the Chinese laborers already in the United States to register, so as to enable the officers of the government to more readily detect the Chinese laborers who would be hereafter smuggled into the country; and since it has failed in its purpose I am satisfied that it will be repealed and other steps taken to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. Congress, as a body, did not intend to enact a law to send away the Chinese already legally here, but to prevent other laborers coming from that country, although that may have been the intention of some of the supporters of the bill. Had such a statement been made when the bill was pending, it would have been overwhelmingly defeated, and it would have deserved defeat."

The Lucy Webb Hayes Bible and Training School held its commencement exercises in Hamline church, Monday night, and it was a very interesting event, showing that the school, which has been in existence only a year and a half, has already done good, and that its prospects point to much more. The essays read by the graduates were above the average of such papers, and the short talks by Bishop Hurst and other ministers were enjoyed by the large crowd in attendance, among which were ministers of several denominations. A room has been set apart in the building owned and occupied by the school as a library and named "The Katherine Hurst Library," in honor of the late Mrs. Hurst, wife of the bishop. It is the intention to gather in this room a collection of books of reference, dealing specially with matters included in the regular course of the school, and books of that nature will be thankfully received.

An interesting announcement was made at the conclusion of the commencement exercises of the Howard University Law School, held this week. It was that ex-Senator Everts and Mr. Collis P. Huntington, the railway president, had generously provided a permanent home for the law department of the University, something that has been badly needed for some time. The building, which has accommodations for 150 students, is to be known as "Everts Hall."

The Presbyterian General Assembly ends its second week to-day, and the end is not in sight, although the members say they hope to complete their work this week. If they do it will be surprising. The time of the Assembly has been entirely taken up this week with the unfortunate trial of Dr. Briggs, on the charge of heresy. I say unfortunate trial designedly, for it is unfortunate, not only to the Presbyterian church, but to every other church, no matter what may be the final result. If such trials must take place, they should, in my humble opinion, never be public. This one has convinced me of that. Two daily newspapers are printing full verbatim reports of the proceedings, and by reason of this wide publicity the hard things said by eminent ministers of the Gospel on both sides, in their arguments, are giving the ungodly a chance to cast aspersions upon the whole Christian church, of which they are taking full advantage. I, myself, have heard on the street cars and in other public places a score or more of slurs upon the Christian religion, on account of the language used at this trial, which would never have been uttered had not the proceedings been published; and I have been unable to find a single individual who could point out any possible benefit that the cause of Christianity can possibly derive from this or any similar trial. May it be the last time that any minister of the Gospel is ever publicly tried for such an offense, is the earnest wish of your correspondent. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, May 24, 1893.

Anniversary exercises have been the prominent feature in Boston for the past few days, and I have sought to make the most of these Christian gatherings for the promotion of the Gospel divorced from the secret lodge system. With a single exception, I have been tolerated, and in most instances welcomed in efforts to give information by quietly distributing literature to those willing to receive it. The Massachusetts Congregational State Association, meeting with the Union church, is the single exception. The pastor enjoined me from circulating anything of the kind, giving as a reason that the meeting was strictly religious, and therefore such documents would be out of place. I do not believe that a majority of the representatives from the churches would agree with the pastor, but it would not have been courteous in me to press the matter contrary to his wish. Before seeing the pastor, and by permission of a gentleman who assured me that he had authority, I placed a few of Rev. J. M. Foster's pamphlet, "Secret Societies in Church and State," along with the leaflet "Credible Witnesses," on a table in the vestry. After a half-hour's absence I returned and found the documents removed and Alonzo H. Quint seated at the table. I questioned whether this Scottish Rite "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret" had not been instrumental in suppressing the testimony of thirteen ministers and men well known in Boston against an iniquitous system in which he has taken thirty-two degrees.

It is surprising to hear ministers say, as I am sometimes told: "I do not belong to the Masons, Odd-fellows, or any other secret society, but I do not propose to injure my influence by preaching or taking any active measures against them. There are so many things that are a great deal worse than I prefer to expend my energies upon them," etc. My reply is: "The little foxes spoil the vines." The fact that a minister does not drink rum, or frequent houses of ill fame, is no valid excuse for withholding a testimony against drunkenness and social impurity. Because rudeness, or making disturbance in church or public assemblages, is not as criminal as house-breaking or murder, is no reason why such offences should pass without reproof, even though the minister may have been restrained from committing such indiscretions in youth. Even assuming that "lodgery" is a little sin, that is no reason why it should not be rebuked, but when its enormity as a system of false worship is considered, can silence be accounted anything less than a capital offence against Christ and his bride, the church?

A conference, on Monday last, in the "People's church," had as its objective purpose the launching of a new political party. The afternoon session was confidential, and as I had not the "pass" I remained among the "cowans," outside the inner door. I circulated "Credible Witnesses," and soon found myself in a minority of one, on the lodge question. After listening to the usual arraignments of the church and the par excellence of lodge benevolence, I ventured a few suggestions, which had the effect of bringing one man to my side, and ending the discussion. The evening session was for "whosoever will," and opened by a very able and scholarly address from the chairman, Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D. Rev. Mr. Stratton explained more fully the object of the meeting, and suggested the organization of a party to be called the "American," with five planks in its platform, viz:—1. Annihilation of rum. 2. Subordination of the Roman hierarchy to the principles and genius of American institutions. 3. Strict regulation of immigration. 4. Stringent naturalization laws; and, 5. Woman suffrage." This suggestion met with a hearty response from the audience and will doubtless become the basis of a secret political party, such as Daniel Webster, Ulysses S. Grant, and other sagacious statesmen have condemned, and which are as un-American as the order of Jesuits, against whom they hurl their fiercest anathemas.

Other speeches followed; but as the hour was late, I did not remain until final action was taken. It looks as if some of the good people were going into a political swindle as disastrous to true American institutions as the "Endowment orders" have been to the financial interests of certificate-holders in those benevolent associations, with "just a little secrecy" to escape imposition (?).

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts has been marshalling the Christian people in Boston for the last ten days in defense of the Sabbath. He possesses rare qualities as a field general, and seems to know just when, where and how to strike the adversary. The opening of the World's Fair on the Lord's day has been the objective point of attack, but the discussions have ranged along the entire line, from Genesis to Revelation, and furnished the people a vast amount of history, and constitutional and statutory law on the subject. No one can listen to his addresses without feeling that he is master of the situation.

At Park Street church, yesterday, I distributed tracts, without "let or hindrance," to those attending the annual meeting of the "Evangelistic Association of New England". Words of commendation from the pastor, from Evangelist C. G. Hammond, H. L. Hastings, and many others, were appreciated. Even Rev. L. B. Bates, D.D., had a hearty handshake and kind words for your New England agent. I sometimes wonder that these brethren don't get out of patience with my persistent urging of this subject upon their attention, for I know it is often as unpleasant for them as it is for me; but I explain their forbearance by assuming that they know I am on the right side and acting from convictions of duty.

One or two incidents must close this letter: A pastor's wife, who has not been an indifferent observer of our work, and who has felt the reaction of a testimony against the lodge, said to me: "Do you not get discouraged by the opposition you meet and the indifference of good people to your work?" I replied, "Not in the least; I have but one Master to serve, and when he approves I am satisfied." "I am glad to hear you say that," she replied. "I was afraid you would get discouraged." I went out from that good woman's presence feeling stronger in the Lord for knowing that somebody was interested and praying for the work.

Dropping into a class for Bible study, on Sabbath, I met with an unexpected encouragement. The leader, as I subsequently learned, was Judge Waleh, formerly of North Carolina, but now of this city. After a few preliminary remarks, the Judge spoke pointedly against Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and all secret societies, as detrimental to the cause of temperance and the work of the church. I had not spoken, and supposed myself "a stranger among strangers," and was not a little surprised when an elderly gentleman in the class remarked, "Your views will suit our friend, Mr. Stoddard, for he is the prince of Antimasons." It is sometimes gratifying to know that you are watched, and that your light is shining in places that you know not of.

There has been much prayer and anxious inquiry of late over the question of the "Boys' Brigade," as a department of Christian work. My impressions have not been favorable to it, but I have forbore saying much on the subject until better informed. I have conferred with a number of pastors and evangelists, and the president of the State movement kindly called and left documents with me to-day from which I hope to obtain explicit and official information for myself and the enlightenment of any who may care to read what I think of it, in the Christian Cynosure.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE

OUR NATIONAL CHARACTER AT STAKE.

[The announcement that the World's Fair Directory designed to open its gates on Sunday and return the $2,500,000 appropriation to Congress, after all its debts are paid, caused a ripple of indignation among the Christian churches. The pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church in Boston, strongly moved by the perfidy of this proposition, writes to us as follows:]

We addressed a letter to President Cleveland on behalf of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston, protesting against this action as an additional stain on our already polluted Christian civilization—an act unworthy of the descendants of the fathers who settled this country, and an open affront to the King of nations, whose blessing has made us great, but whose wrath will cause us "to perish from the way". If this iniquity be consummated after all the protests that have been made by the Christian citizens of our land, we cannot expect to escape the judgments of an offended God.

But this is only another illustration of the impossibility of maintaining our Christian laws, institutions and usages upon the basis of our irreligious national Constitution. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" A bad tree does not yield good fruit. A house built upon the sand cannot stand the pressure of the storm and flood. God is teaching our nation that we cannot go on without him. We have ignored him and he is leaving us to our own ways. "I will go and return unto my place until they acknowledge their offence and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early." "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded.

But ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would have none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity. I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me; for that they hated knowledge and did not choose the fear of the Lord; they would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof. Therefore shall they eat the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices."

It is time for us to put away our national sin by making a clear and explicit recognition of the authority and law of Jesus Christ in our national Constitution.

J. M. FOSTER.

A BLOOD-CURDLING OBLIGATION.

CHICAGO, June 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have come into possession of "Ritual No. 1, Consisting of the Forms, Ceremonies and Laws of Election for the Use of Chambers of Mosaic Templars of America, at Little Rock, Ark," properly "approved by the Committee of Management." This curious secret order, one of the many with which the South is afflicted, and which are sapping the integrity of the people, swallowing their hard-earned money, and crippling the finances and attendance of the churches, is a women's institution.

It has "Most Worthy Zipporahs," "Sister Wardens," "Worthy Scribes," "Outer" and "Inner Guardians," and is largely built on the foundations of Odd-fellowship and Freemasonry, as to its ritualism. Its object would seem to be the promotion of sociability, with a slender thread of benevolence running through it, like an old-fashioned "sewing circle," to make clothing for the poor and gossip for the neighborhood.

I more than suspect that it was written by a Freemason; at all events it deals plentifully with the phrases found in the rituals of the fraternity—"So mote it be," and "Moses and the burning bush," and "Aaron's rod," etc. But I can only call your attention now to the OATH which these "sisters" administer to the initiate. It runs thus:

"I, —, of my own free will and accord, in presence of Almighty God, these sisters here assembled and this Chamber, dedicated to God, the holy father of Moses, the beloved companion of Zipporah, hereon and hereby solemnly promise and swear that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the order of the Mosaic Templars to which we are allied, which I have received, am about to receive or may receive hereafter. Furthermore, I promise that I will come to the call of every sign of a Brother Templar or a Sister Zipporah. I further promise that I will contribute of my means to assist a Sister Zipporah in distress, want or need: I will also advise her and give her aid. I still further promise that I will aid and assist a Sister Zipporah, child or mother when in distress, with my money, by advice, and use all other honorable means to give aid. I further promise that I will never vilify a Sister Zipporah or Brother Templar in his or her presence or absence, that I will always defend his or her good name whenever assailed at any time or place in my presence. I will further promise that I will obey all the laws, regulations and rules that may be now in force, or hereafter in force, and will attend my chamber as regular as possible. All of which I do most earnestly affirm, binding myself to suffer the extreme penalty of death at the instant of a forfeit, so help me God."

What a horrible obligation, but Freemasonry can match it!

I may refer to this "work" again.

Yours truly, MAT. HAWTHORN.

UNITED BRETHREN AND REFORM.

THE CONSERVATIVE CONFERENCE AT HUDSON, INDIANA.

HUDSON, Indiana, May 24, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The General Conference, now in session at this place, has taken a decided and conscientious stand on the following questions of reform:

"To the Commissioners of the Columbian Exposition:—The United Brethren in Christ assembled in Hudson, Indiana, representing upward of 50,000 communicants, most earnestly protest against opening the gates of the Fair grounds upon the Christian Sabbath, and believe that in respecting the Sabbath-day you will promote the best interests of the institution which you represent, by bringing the best elements of this great Christian nation into closer sympathy with you; and that we will advise our people not to attend the Exposition if the gates are open on the Sabbath-day."

This is the position that all Christians should take—not to go at all if the gates are open in violation of the obligation made to Congress.

The law on secrecy remains unchanged. It may be of interest to the readers of this paper to know just where the church is on the secrecy question. We here insert a part of the law: "Any member or preacher who shall connect himself with a secret combination shall be regarded as having withdrawn from the church."

The Conference advised that the following be put in pamphlet form, as a memorial clearly setting forth the reason why the above position is taken by the church:

"1. Their meetings conflict with church meetings.

"2. They hinder the work of revival meetings.

"3. Their members leave the altar of God to attend the meetings of their orders.

"4. Their members give largely of their means to support the machinery of the orders. These means ought to be consecrated to the cause of God.

"5. It is wrong solemnly to promise to keep secret that which is unknown to us, and may be desperately wicked.

"6. It is not charity to confine our benefits to the brotherhood.

"7. It is not charity to give to those from whom more has been received than is returned.

"8. We believe them to be unscriptural, unwarranted, and condemned by the Word of God, as seen in the following Scriptures: 2 Cor. 6: 14, 15, 17 and 18."

Permit the correspondent to say that, in his opinion, if all churches, other things being equal, would adopt the above strong and practical position against this organized system of evil, it would be a wide stride towards the millennium, and the solution of the many perplexing problems now agitating the church and nation. May God hasten the day when the church will come out from among them (the orders and the world) and be "a separate people!"

Rev. Wm. Dillon, D.D., was elected bishop of the Pacific Coast district, in the place of Rev. H. J. Becker, D.D. Bishop Dillon will remove to the Coast and reside in Portland, Oregon.

Bishop Becker was elected secretary of the General Missionary Board of the United Brethren in Christ, and will reside in Dayton, Ohio.

Rev. C. H. Kiracofe, D.D., of Dayton, Ohio, was elected editor of the Christian Conservator; while Rev. F. M. Keiter, of Chambersburg, Pa., was elected to take charge of the finances of the office, and act as publishing agent.

The General Conference closed a very profitable session on Saturday, May 27, and on Monday of this week the delegates started for their homes in different parts of the United States and Canada, all feeling that the U. B. in Christ church is bound to live and continue its onward course of saving souls and assisting all true reformers to make this world better morally, and bring in a better day generally.

A COLORED PASTOR'S WORK IN THE SOUTH.

(Printed by Request.)

NEW ORLEANS, May 21, 1893.

To the St. Matthew's Baptist Church:

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—It affords me great pleasure to present to you this my fourth annual report as your humble pastor. I thank God, through Jesus Christ, that our work, though making a very slow progress, has not been altogether fruitless. God has abundantly blessed us in our time of sorrow and tribulation.

SPIRITUAL WORK.

I have preached seventy sermons, and delivered ten lectures since submitting my last report to you. The past year has been one of spiritual blessings, as well, also, as one of many sore trials. We have lost none of our members by death; we have added seven to the church by baptism, and fifteen by letter, by experience and by restoration. There is a grievous wolf who makes it his special duty to return to the church every time it gets in a good spiritual condition, and with a prolonged and tiresome dream declares that God has just showed him his error and sent him back to St. Matthew's Baptist church to build it up. For three years this wolf (an Odd-fellow) has been thus serving your church from two to three times each year; but just as soon as he is restored to fellowship in the church again, he commences to ply his Satanic tricks until he succeeds in creating a general confusion; then he slinks off for two or three months. I advise you to pray for him, that God, through Jesus Christ, will either convert and save this leper in sin, or keep him from disturbing the church.

Your membership, enrolled, is forty-nine; your active membership is thirty. Brethren English and Turley are still at their posts, helping to bear the church's burdens. Your other brethren are very little more than members in name.

Your church seems to be at peace; I advise you so to remain.

TEMPORAL WORK.

You have collected from all sources and for all purposes, since May 5, 1892, $389.80. You have paid out, for all purposes, $570.22. Thus you see your expenses have exceeded your receipts by $120.48. You have done much to beautify and make your church more comfortable by ceiling the lower part, adding two stairways, and by placing benches up-stairs; 1,500 feet of ceiling and 2,500 feet of weather-boards will finish your church inside and outside.

You have given me, as a salary, since the 15th of May, 1892, $121.95.

INDEBTEDNESS.

You owe the following persons and amounts:

C. W. Sterry, $195, on your lots, with interest at 8 per cent; myself, for money advanced on your church work, $56.25; John F. Popp & Co., for lumber, $8.00; J. A. Coutarde, $5.00, on lamps; Bro. Wm. English, $11.50; Sister L. Fortier, $12.50; Bro. Joseph Williams, $9.00; your sexton, Sister L. Mitchell, $4.50; your secretary, $3.25. Grand total of indebtedness, $307.00.

You have done well. Pray God to help you to do better.

I repeat my former advice to you, to continue opposing vice in all its popular forms, whether it be under the disguise of secret societies, excursions, picnics, the drink curse, or the lottery devil, and right, not might, will rule by and by. Yours in Christ,

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON, Pastor.

IS IT TRUE?

CHICAGO, May 31, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have before me a printed circular letter, signed J. E. Crowell, 145 Congress avenue, Chelsea, Mass., addressed to Gov. Russell of that State, in which the condition of local affairs is thus pointedly set forth:

"The greatest curse that ever happened to a civilized and Christian people was when the people of Massachusetts allowed the Masonic lodge to take control of all the courts and legislature of this Commonwealth, as it is well known that all murderers, thieves and robbers of all kinds who are members of that lodge go perfectly free in all Masonic courts. The fact is that they also hold nearly every office in this State, and boast that in a few years more they will control all the States."

This is a pretty serious allegation to make; yet there is, if concurrent evidence is correct, more of truth than exaggeration in it. I do not know Mr. Crowell or his personal reasons (if he has any) for the severity of his language; but it is a fact not hidden under a bushel that in our Western courts Masonic influence has often thwarted justice; and the inference is that Masonry, "always the same the world over," is in Massachusetts no better than in Illinois. ANTI-MASON.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Scribner's Magazine for June opens with the second article in the series on "Men's Occupations," which is to be a feature of the coming months, including among its contributors W. D. Howells, W. Clark Russell, Julian Ralph, and John Drew. The article in the present issue is "Life in a Logging Camp," by Arthur Hill, president of one of the great Michigan lumber companies. It is supplemented with abundant illustrations by Dan Beard, who visited the Michigan lumber camps in midwinter for the magazine and made these sketches from life. Among out-of-door papers, Ernest E. Thompson's contribution to this number, entitled "The Birds that We See," is noteworthy, and fully illustrated from his own drawings. In a similar line of natural history is a brief paper by Sidney Dickinson, entitled "The Haunt of the Platypus," which describes one of the strangest animals that is found in Australia. Robert Blum's third paper gives his impressions of Japan, with a very rich selection from his wonderful drawings. The fiction includes Robert Grant's "Opinions of a Philosopher," a sequel to his clever satire, "The Reflections of a Married Man," illustrated. There are short stories by T. R. Sullivan, and William Henry Bishop, and the concluding chapters of Mrs. Burnett's serial "The One I Knew the Best of All". The number includes poems by H. C. Bunner, Edith M. Thomas, E. S. Martin, and others. Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York.

Number one, volume one, of McClure's Magazine, bears date of June, 1893, and appeals to the interest of the public like an old and favorite monthly visitor. Tidy in appearance, rich in literature and illustration, and manifesting youthful vigor and enterprise of a high order, its claims to public favor are well founded. To enumerate: It contains ninety-five engravings, and fourteen articles: A real dialogue between W. D. Howells and H. H. Boyesen, illustrated; The Hymn of the Eddy, by Gilbert Parker, illustrated; Humane Documents—introducing 23 portraits, at different ages, of Gen. Lew Wallace, H. H. Boyesen, W. D. Howells and Alphonse Daudet; Wild Animals, fully illustrated; The Edge of the Future—Interviews with Thos. A. Edison and Prof. Alex. G. Bell; A Day with Gladstone, illustrated; Where Man Got His Ears, by Prof. Henry Drummond, with a full-page portrait of the author, and illustrations; Parton's Rules of Biography, by himself, with illustrations; Europe at the Present Moment; The Comedy of War, by Joel Chandler Harris, with eleven pictures; Count de Lesseps To-day, etc., etc. A number giving good promise of the future. New York: S. S. McClure, Ltd., 743 Broadway. Price, 15 cents.

The Arena for June contains the following social and economic papers: Condition of Women in Western States—one of the Wage-Earner series, by Helen Campbell; Save the American Home, by I. E. Deen; The Silver Question, by A. C. Fisk—the Problem of "Does the Country Demand the Free Coinage of Silver?" and Union for Practical Progress, by B. O. Flower. Pres. J. M. Coulter, Chas. J. O'Malley, Margaret Sydney, Ellen A. Richardson, Mary N. Adams, M. K. Craig, Will Allen Dromgoole and Eliza C. Hall unite in a symposium on the question of "Our National Flower," and advocate the maize, or Indian corn. Rev. Marion D. Shutter (with a portrait) treats of The Liberal Churches and Skepticism; Leathur McDonald, of Insanity and Genius; Dr. R. B. Leach, of Arden vs. Cholera—using that virulent poison as a preventive of cholera; Frances E. Russell, of Freedom in Dress; Prof. F. W. Sanders, of Islam Past and Present, and B. O. Flower, of Parisian Fashionable Folly, illustrated. This number begins a new volume. Although something too liberal in its ideas for orthodox Christians, the Arena takes advanced ground in the literature of social economy.

Worthington's Illustrated Magazine, with its June issue, closes its first six months' volume, and reports flattering success for this new literary enterprise. The leading article is the first of an entertaining series on Hawaiian Life, embellished with many engravings. The other illustrated papers are: London Church Choirs, and Sorosis, the Pioneer Woman's Club, with portraits. Other contributions are as follows: In "Ole Virginny" Fifty Years Ago (continued), by Mary A. Livermore; Schubert's Serenade, a story; Two of a Kind, a story; When the Sea Gives Up Its Dead, a story; Have Women Good Taste? and Poems, by several writers. A favorite feature of this magazine is found in its several social and household departments, which are of especial interest to well-regulated domestic circles. Hartford, Conn., A. D. Worthington & Co., publishers. $2.50 a year.

The June number of the Preacher's Magazine (reprinted from the English edition, edited by Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory, with additions by American editors) presents a great variety of Christian thought and suggestion, including: The Social Panacea, by Rev. Dr. T. Bowman Stephenson; Joy, Rest and Faith, by Dr. Henry Drummond; The Life of Moses and its Lessons, by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse (continued); Doctrine and Fellowship of the Apostolic Churches, by Rev. Dr. Rob't A. Watson; How to Begin the Study of New Testament Greek, by Rev. R. Martin Pope; The Gradual Growth of the Bible, by Rev. W. A. LaBrum; Nine Outlines of Sermons, by as many clergymen on that number of topics; Notes and Illustrations; The Current Sunday-school Lessons, etc., etc. Published by W. B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

The Journal of Hygiene for June is an excellent number, presenting a variety of topics of more than ordinary interest, as follows: The Greater Temperance, a paper read before the Brooklyn Ethical Association, by C. H. Shepard, M. D.; Notes on Caustion Health, by Dr. M. L. Holbrook (Nervous Exhaustion and Bad Air, Revival of Hydropathy, The Prevention of Diphtheria, etc.); Experiments with Mesmerism, a Personal Narrative, by Henry M. Hugwin; Hygienic Notes from China, by Prof. E. P. Thwing, M. D.; Crenation of Red Blood Corpuscles, by the editor; The Ventilation of Sleeping Rooms, by Jennie Chandler; Topics of the Month. (The Secret of Gladstone's Physical Endurance, etc.); and Book Notices. New York: edited and published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street.

IN BRIEF.

THE COW A UNIT OF VALUATION.

In the present publication of the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia is the surprising announcement that the Chewsures—a race of 7,000 people—in the Department of Troust, Government of Tiflis, know nothing of the use of money as a medium of exchange. The unit of valuation among the primitive people is the cow. A horse is valued at three cows and a stallion at six. If a Chewsure becomes enraged and cracks his neighbor's skull he is obliged to pay sixteen cows. If he breaks a bone of his neighbor's arm five cows will rehabilitate him in the eyes of society. A wound in the forehead calls for three calves. If one cuts another in the part of the face usually covered by the beard the punishment is comparatively severe. The "doctor" places as many grains of wheat along the cut as possible. For each grain of wheat so used the criminal must give up a cow. Wounds in the beardless part of the face call for one-third as many cows only. The man who injures a neighbor's hand surrenders sixteen cows. Thirty cows even will pay for the loss of an eye. The people are said to be happy and contented. No misers exist among them!—Chicago Tribune.

THE "VEGETABLE CATERPILLAR".

An interesting curiosity, peculiar to the North Island of New Zealand, is the vegetable caterpillar (Cordyceps Robertii). This is an ordinary caterpillar, into which, at a certain season, the almost invisible spores of a fungus enter through the breathing pores. These commence to germinate, when the grub buries itself and is soon killed by the growth of fungus inside it, which ultimately sprouts from one side of the creature's body, and grows to a height of six to nine inches or more. Nearly the entire body of the caterpillar has by that time been converted into vegetable tissue.

ELECTRICAL CURIOSITY.

It is related that a telegraph operator has noticed a curious sparkling of his instrument that kept time with the blasts of steam from a locomotive directly beneath the wire; while a lineman sent to investigate a similar disturbance in another locality received a series of shocks corresponding to the puffs of a locomotive under the wire a short distance away. The Electrical Review suggests that the locomotive thus supplies a beautiful example of the hydro-electric machine of Lord Armstrong. The steam escaping from pressure generates frictional electricity, which is collected by the wire.

A BIT OF HISTORY.

The first piece of money coined in the United States was the silver half-dime of 1793, minted on March 1 of that year. This is a memorable coin, first, because it was struck from the private plate of George Washington, and secondly, because the device which appeared upon it was the bust of Martha Washington. When Washington saw the coin he was provoked, and ordered the device changed. Accordingly, the features were changed, a cap was placed on the head, and a staff put into the hand, and the familiar figure, emblematic of liberty, seen upon many American coins, was produced.

THE "WON'T" POWER.

The little crown prince of Germany has a way of saying odd and quite amusing things. A funny story told of him is that one day when at Potsdam he was entertaining himself by trying to make a donkey draw a cart, but the animal was stubborn and would not go. "Your donkey has a great deal of will power," called out the Emperor, who was watching the struggle between his son and the obstinate animal. "Oh, no, papa!" replied the little prince quickly. "It isn't his 'will' power that troubles me. It is his 'won't' power. He won't go."

LINCOLN AND SLAVERY.

In 1831 Lincoln saw in New Orleans a colored girl sold at auction. The scene filled his soul with indignation and horror. Turning to his companions he said:

IT'S DANGEROUS GROUND that you stand on—with a cough or a cold, and your blood impure. Out of just these conditions comes Consumption.

You must do something. In the earlier stages of Consumption, and in all the conditions that lead to it, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a certain remedy. This scrofulous affection of the lungs, like every other form of Scrofula, can be cured by it. In severe, lingering Coughs, all Bronchial, Throat, and Lung Affections, and every disease that can be reached through the blood, it is the only medicine so effective that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back. Nervous prostration and debility are conquered by it.

Even with the worst cases of Catarrh, after you've tried everything else, the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will agree to pay you $500 if they can't cure you completely.

"Boys, if I ever get a chance to hit slavery, I'll hit it hard." The helpless girl, unconsciously, had planted in a great heart the seed of the emancipation proclamation.

Thirty-one years afterward the chance came, the oath was kept, and 4,000,000 slaves—men, women and children—were restored to liberty, the jewel of the soul. In the history, in the fiction of the world, there is nothing more intensely dramatic than this.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1893.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association will occur on Tuesday, June 20, 1893, at 10:30 A. M., in Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

M. A. GAULT, President.

OUR WORK IN THE SOUTH.

The letter from R. N. Countee, in last week's Cynosure, relating his experiences in Texas, while advocating the anti-secrecy cause in a lodge-ridden State, has probably been read with interest. Since that came to hand, we have received another from Rev. Francis J. Davidson, pastor of St. Matthew's (colored) Baptist church in New Orleans, who has also experienced a great deal of trouble in laboring faithfully against the lodge and giving honest and earnest testimony against the many evils that beset his charge.

"I am," he writes, "almost completely discouraged and disgusted with Southern oppression and barbarism. . . . Unless you were here and had a perfect knowledge of the existing circumstances, you can hardly be sufficiently impressed to believe the true nature of things. I hope to be able to extend my coming visit far out upon the Pacific coast. If you have any personal acquaintances in the North whose sympathy you think would be with me in the work of reformation, will you let them know that I would be glad to correspond with them? If I can secure work anywhere in the North as pastor, lecturer or colporteur, I will gladly accept it, even at a very moderate salary, believing that if God is pleased with my work he will give me success."

We should be very sorry to have our esteemed correspondent leave the South, where, even under the most trying circumstances, he has manfully fought the lodge evil, both in and out of his church. On page 6 of this paper we print the annual report of his pastoral work; and while there have been severe struggles and privations during the past year, there are also indications of much good accomplished among his colored brethren. Certainly, he has been indefatigable in his labors, and just as certainly he is needed there now and in the coming years. He cannot be spared from so fruitful a field. True, he sadly needs money to help him in his work; and here is an opportunity for some of our prosperous friends to make a profitable investment and carry encouragement to this worthy servant of our glorious Master.

HAZING THE CHINAMEN.

Now that the Geary Exclusion law has been suspended in its execution for the following reasons, it is a good time to give it the attention which it merits as a measure at once unjust and discreditable to our nation: (1.) The failure of Congress to appropriate the funds necessary to carry out its provisions, making it totally impracticable so far as the deportation of rebellious Chinamen is concerned. (2.) The possibility that the Chinese government might retaliate in kind, were it carried into effect.

The Political Dissenter, printed at Pittsburgh, relates the manner in which the law was obeyed in that city. There sixty-nine of the proscribed Chinese residents were members of the Pittsburgh Reformed Presbyterian Mission school, and the superintendent, Mr. Daniel Chesnut, in April, with no little personal effort and forethought, endeavored to make their registration under the law as easy as possible; but, says the editor, "it was enough to make one's blood boil to follow out the instruction, from the United States Treasury Department. Every Chinaman had to be weighed, measured, and described by color of eyes, complexion, and any peculiar mark on his person. All this was done privately at Mr. Chesnut's office. It brought to mind the days of slavery, with the revolting scenes at the auction block. It is not much wonder that Chinamen dislike, and in many cases absolutely refuse, to comply with the law. But as no Chinaman is required to do anything immoral, it seems wise in the circumstances for them to register."

If the law is not kept in suspense until Congress assembles, and it is not then repealed, it is difficult at present to determine the result. The meanness of the measure is too plainly visible to insure its cool consideration and approval. Rev. J. M. Foster, in this issue of the Cynosure, stamps it as a base political movement to preserve the influence of the Irish vote on the Pacific coast.

A PROTEST.

The Catholic Review proposes, in its last issue, that "all charges against the Catholic church which can be shown to be very old and to have been frequently and conclusively answered and disposed of shall be hereafter 'barred out,' and forbidden to all persons who may in future engage in religious controversy. If this proposal should ever be adopted it is certain that one of the very first of the old charges to be outlawed and forever thrown out of court would be the story of the 'Monita Secreta,' or 'Secret Instructions of the Jesuits.'"

The Review, however, tacitly admits that it was written by a member of the Society of Jesus after he had been "dismissed" from that society; but adds: "The so-called Instructions were simply a most extraordinary mass of lies."

The authors of this book of "Instructions," in the body of the volume, had provided for the contingency of its coming into possession of the enemies of the church, by incorporating among its teachings this injunction: "If this should fall into the hands of strangers, let it be positively denied." And so, ever since its publication, in 1614, or a little later, the Jesuits have been busily engaged in making such denial.

There is evidence, in other publications now extant of the Jesuits, printed in Spanish, Italian and French, that the "Instructions" are not only genuine, but much less objectionable, in degree, than the former works.

The Romanists have always consistently denied all other accusations against the Jesuits; but whatever objections they may make to the perpetuation of these charges, the charges still remain unrefuted.

THE BRIGGS HERESY CASE.

The case of Dr. Chas. A. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, which came before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in Washington, last week, on an appeal from the Presbytery of New York (which had acquitted him) was brought to a close on Wednesday evening, when the charge of heresy was sustained by a vote of 383 to 116.

On the following day, Dr. Briggs having declared that he adhered to all his positions taken before the Assembly, and that he had nothing further to say, the General Assembly proceeded to "absolutely suspend Charles A. Briggs from the office of a minister in the Presbyterian church in the United States of America until such time as he shall give satisfactory evidence of repentance to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America of the violation by him of his ordination vow."

In the matter of the revision of the Presbyterian "Confession of Faith," the General Assembly refused to consent to the proposed changes; and the present ecclesiastical belief is for the present retained.

The disposition of these two important questions having been promptly made, the General Assembly proceeded to other business. We forbear comment and await results.

COMMON SENSE ABOUT PENSIONS.

As an item of information, it was announced, not long since, that Farnham Post of the G. A. R. (in New York), we understand adopted a series of resolutions, in which it expressed its opinion of the present pension system in the United States as follows:

WHEREAS, The only veterans entitled to pensions are those who, by wounds or disabilities incurred in the service of their country, are prevented from earning a living in their respective callings, as they might have done had such wounds or disabilities not been incurred, and whose circumstances are such as to justify them in calling on the country for aid or support; and

WHEREAS, The Grand Army of the Republic is an association organized for the purpose of enabling old soldiers and sailors to take care of themselves and each other; and

WHEREAS, As much real patriotism may be shown by refraining in time of peace from inflicting unnecessary burdens on the country as by coming to her defense in time of war; therefore, be it

Resolved, That any old soldier or sailor who applies for or accepts a pension, except under the conditions above set forth, is, in the opinion of this post, guilty of conduct calculated to injure the good men who were and are willing to give their lives for their country without any reward save the approval of their own conscience and that honorable fame that is due to every patriot.

These opinions coming to the ears of the G. A. R. moguls, they at once revoked the charter of Farnham Post, because its action had not "the approval of the department and national commanders."

Yet the objective post seems to have taken a very sensible and conservative view of the subject.

THE WORLD'S FAIR SUNDAY OPENING.

Judge Stein, in one of the local courts, last week, granted an injunction against the World's Fair Directory requiring them to open the gates on Sunday. This suit was instituted by Mr. Clingman, a stockholder in the Fair.

In the United States court, before Judges Woods, Jenkin and Grosscup (Chief-Justice Fuller not being able to sit in the case), arguments by able counsel on both sides were heard in favor of and against a permanent injunction requiring the World's Fair management to close the gates on Sunday. Probably every argument, except the divine command, ever dreamed of since this Sabbath contest began was introduced and argued. The judges, however, reserved their decision until the 8th instant, and refused to grant a temporary injunction, so that the Fair was open again last Sunday, with large crowds in attendance.

The Cynosure goes to press this week before the decision of the court is rendered. What it will be is uncertain; but the advocates of Sunday closing should not be too sanguine of success.

We append the voice of various Christian churches upon this subject:

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Adopted a resolution directing that the exhibit of the Presbyterian church be removed from the Exposition if it be opened on Sunday; setting apart the second Sunday in June as a day for special prayer in all the churches under its jurisdiction for the better observance of the Sabbath, and recommending that on that day sermons be preached denouncing the directors of the World's Fair for violating their promises in respect to Sunday opening.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

At Monmouth, Ill., a resolution was unanimously adopted protesting against the action of the local directory, alleged to be indorsed by the managing commissioners of the Columbian Exposition, agreeing to open the gates of the World's Fair on the Sabbath.

METHODISTS IN NEW YORK.

The Methodist preachers of New York passed a resolution in favor of withdrawing the Methodist exhibit from the World's Fair if the Fair is opened on Sunday, and at the meeting on Monday they discussed an amendment instructing the bishops of the church to urge a boycott on the Fair.

BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES

By a rising vote of great unanimity declared that the World's Fair directors cannot without disloyalty open the gates on Sunday, and cannot without dishonesty use a dollar of the nation's money while disregarding the nation's mandate. The Chicago directors cannot escape the obligations to obey the nation's will by resolution to return at some future day a part of the nation's money. The national commission has no power to nullify the action of the Congress that created it, and it is an act of flagrant dishonesty and downright rebellion against the government for the directors to open the gates. The President is called upon to take measures to prevent the consummation of this outrage. The action of the Chicago Baptists in withdrawing from the Auxiliary Congress is indorsed. Dr. Henson, in an earnest speech, said it was iniquitous for the local board to denationalize the Fair. Dr. Lawrence at some length explained his action in withdrawing from the congress. He thought that any further attempts to carry the day for an open Sunday was little short of treason.

CONSERVATIVE UNITED BRETHREN.

The Conservative (or Radical) United Brethren in Christ, in General Conference at Hudson, Ind., representing upward of 40,000 communicants, earnestly protested against opening the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday, and advised members of that church to keep away from the Fair unless the Sabbath law of God shall be respected.

CURFEW REVIVED.

The revival of the old-time English "curfew" bell in Canada, by an act of Parliament, is an event worthy of notice, as an advance in social reform.

The custom of ringing curfew (or "cover-fire") bells every evening throughout England is ascribed to William the Conqueror. The object was to warn the people to cover up their fires and retire to rest—a safe and healthful provision. The time for ringing these bells was at sunset in summer, and about 8 o'clock in the winter, and certain penalties were imposed upon those who neglected this duty. The practice of ringing curfew, however, appears to have prevailed generally in Europe long before the Norman conquest, its object being the prevention of fires, which, as houses were chiefly built of wood, were then frequent and disastrous. Up to a recent period the custom, if it is not now, was continued in many parts of the kingdom, although diverted from its original significance.

Under its revival in Canada, the curfew bell is rung at 9 o'clock in the evening, and after that hour if any persons under seventeen years of age are found on the streets they are locked up by the police, and unless satisfactory explanation can be given the parents shall be made to suffer either by confinement in jail or fine, or the sending away of the children to some public institution, where they will be taken care of until the authorities see fit to let them out.

At first sight, this discipline appears unnecessarily stringent, but it will be found, in the end, a beneficial measure. The habit, even with the allowance of parents and guardians, of permitting boys and girls to roam unrestricted about towns and cities at night, often until 12 o'clock or later, either together or separately, is harmful anywhere, but in large cities positively dangerous to morals, health and personal safety.

EDUCATIONAL.

These are busy days in the various colleges, where preparations for Commencement and graduation occupy the attention of faculties and students. Especially are readers of the Cynosure especially interested in the movements of those institutions where the evils of Greek-letter and other secret societies are justly feared and hated.

Take, for instance, Berea College, Berea, Ky., whose name and existence are so closely connected with those of the venerable John G. Fee. There the type of Christianity upon which it was founded favors the promotion of missionary efforts and all wholesome reforms. To-day it continues its adherence to the principle of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors and the use of tobacco, and also to the avoidance of those secret societies which seem to offer a substitute for religion, to shield wrong-doers, and to limit to a chosen few that which should be extended to all mankind. This institution, true to its mission, while controlled by no denomination, designs to co-operate in good works with ALL Christians.

There are other colleges and universities, we are glad to know, whose managements are pledged to these or similar wholesome principles. Take Wheaton College, at Wheaton, Illinois, for another example. True, its reputation as a Christian school for men and women has been firmly established for many years, during which it has maintained its excellent character without a disappointing divergence from the principles upon which it was founded.

While it is not one of the rich or large colleges of the country, it is a pleasure to know that it is doing thoroughly good work in all departments. During the term now closing it has had enrolled 290 students, sixteen of whom are in the class about to be graduated. We are also enabled to announce that over $37,000 of the $100,000 fund for the college has already been subscribed.

We are assured that the Faculty will be pleased to entertain so many of the friends of the college, during the approaching Commencement week, as can arrange to be present at the exercises.

The following is the program:

Sabbath, June 25, 10:30 A. M.—Baccalaureate Sermon, Rev. Dr. S. Ives Curtis, Chicago, Illinois. Address to the Class, by the President. 7:30 P. M.—Missionary Address.

Monday and Tuesday, June 26-7.—Examinations.

Tuesday, June 27, 8:00 A. M.—Graduating Exercises of Musical Conservatory and Art School.

Wednesday, June 28, 10:00 A. M.—Meeting of Board of Trustees. 2:00 P. M.—Graduating Exercises of Preparatory School. Evening.—Banquet and Literary Program of Alumni Association.

Thursday, June 29, 10:00 A. M.—Commencement Day Exercises: Essays and Orations by the Class. 7:30 P. M.—Commencement Concert, by Lyon's Orchestra, Chicago. 9:30 P. M.—President's Levee in the College Parlors.

The annual anniversary of the Associated Alumni of Wheaton College occurs this year on Wednesday evening, June 28th.

The Alumni will be "at home" in the college parlor at 4:30 o'clock P. M. The banquet, literary exercises, and business meeting follow at the usual hours. The officers for 1892-93 are, president, Rev. John D. Nutting, '78; vice presidents, Charles D. Clark, Esq., '86, Mrs. Florence Johnson Hiatt, '85, and Prof. John B. Russell, '85; secretary, Mrs. Mary Bissell Phillips, '73; treasurer, W. B. Guild, '73; orator, Rev. E. R. Worrell, '85; essayist, Miss Frances S. Carothers, M. D., '80; welcome to the class of '93, E. W. Shaw, Esq., '89.

Will not all the Alumni who are planning to attend, write to the secretary, and if no place of entertainment has been secured, kindly state the fact. It will give the resident Alumni pleasure to welcome and entertain all who take this opportunity to visit their Alma-Mater. The secretary will also be pleased to hear from those who will not attend Commencement this year. Let some word be sent to be read at our social gathering.

A GOOD TESTIMONY.

At the Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ (Conservative), at New Dundee, Province of Ontario, Canada, Bishop Barnaby presiding, the following preamble and resolution on the evils of secret societies was adopted:

"Whereas, We find these associations multiplying rapidly, whose practices and obligations greatly hindered the spread of Gospel truth. Our Saviour when he came into this world taught openly, but not in secret. He distinctly said: 'I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.' 'Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold they know what I said.' St. John 18: 20, 21. The Lord Jesus has by his word, his providence and his Spirit, led us to feel and deplore the evils arising from secret societies. Therefore,

"Resolved, That we are in hearty sympathy with our constitutional law, page 86, section 3, of our Discipline."

The section referred to forbids the admittance of any member of a secret lodge to church fellowship.

—Please remember the N. C. A. exhibit at the World's Fair, the Conference of Churches, June 20, and our Reform Congress, Oct 5.

—For some years there has been an occasional cropping-out of a feeling in the churches that the International Series of Sunday-school Lessons—which had its origin in a desire to establish a universal uniformity—should give way to denominational discrimination, so that each should formulate its own series for the year, independently of all others. The most decisive step yet reported in this direction was taken at the recent Baptist anniversaries at Denver, when a committee of the Publication Society recommended an alternative graded course of Bible study on the "inductive" plan, instead of the International system, to begin with the study of the life of Christ, and the report was adopted. This action opens up a new era of Bible lessons.

—The two Sundays during which the Columbian Exposition has been open to visitors have been disappointing to the management, in point of attendance. Last Sunday, a warm, pleasant day, drew only about 50,000 persons to Jackson Park—less than on the previous Sunday, and far less than the usual week day admittances. Does Sunday opening pay?

—As a word of encouragement to reformers and teachers who at times feel, like Elijah, that their work is not prospering as they desire, Rev. A. J. Gordon offers this consolation: "The plaudit at the last is not 'Well done, thou good and successful servant,' but 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!'" So it is faithfulness—works done in faith—that wins the Divine approval. What a comforting thought!

—The Cynosure office was favored, last week, with pleasant calls from the following friends, while they were returning from the annual general meetings of their respective denominations: Rev. Messrs. Isaiah Faris, Vernon, Wis., and J. W. Dill, Oakland, Kan., both of the Reformed Presbyterians, and Rev. J. McBride, Oakdale, Cal., and Philip Beck, Grafton, Cal., both of the Conservative United Brethren. All who, with us, believe that the secret lodge system is a hindrance to Christianity and a source of evil in itself, find a welcome here.

—The golden wedding of T. S. Parvin and his wife occurred at their home in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, May 17, 1893. Mr. Parvin is a stalwart Freemason of high degree, and probably the only member of his fraternity in the West who fully understands its true valuation. Indeed, in point of Masonic wisdom, he may be said to rank among his lodge brethren as did Homer's Nestor, the great counselor, among the Grecian chiefs. The specious arguments so freely used to prove the antiquity of the order by many Masonic writers, have been strongly refuted in his official Masonic communications.

—We are indebted to the Voice of Masonry for June for the following gratuitous advertising: "The Cynosure continually condemns and denounces Freemasonry, and in the same breath professes to sell it for a dollar." We do; and numbers of Masons who have been led into the lodges and have paid high prices for initiations and degrees, are buying from us the correct work of the seven Blue Lodge and Chapter degrees for 75 cents, together with an exposition of the true character of the fraternity as a Christless institution, inimical to the best interests of the church, the home and the state.

—Of the death of the late General S. C. Armstrong, at Hampton, Va., quite recently, Mrs. Laura Haviland writes as follows to one of the Chicago dailies:

As I read of the death of that noble Christian philanthropist, and of the students playing and singing "How firm a foundation," etc." for a moment I could read no further, for the tear of sympathy with that school of 600 Negro and Indian students would flow. Yes, that "firm foundation" I saw in that gifted man when I was in Hampton, Va., doing mission work in August, 1865. . . . Of him there cannot be too much said in praise of his noble, self-sacrificing life work. He was a brilliant star in our spiritual horizon, that knew no fading until lost to our view in the more glorious light of eternal day, where there is no need of our sun that fades the bright morning star by his superior brilliancy and magnitude upon the ethereal blue and also brings life to the slumbering earth of winter. So General Armstrong was an inspiration to his students, and his death will, we trust, be an abiding consecration.

—To-morrow, June 9, is the Women's Christian Temperance Unions' day in the Temperance Congress of the World's Fair, and the local Union is exerting itself to make it a time of blessing to all who may attend. There is deep regret that Miss Willard cannot be with them, but this fact may serve to inspire her associates to a better performance of the work in which she so much delights. The gathering will be held in "Columbus" and "Washington" halls at the Memorial Art Palace. Excellent speakers, singers and poets will participate in the exercises. "Daughters of the King," from abroad and at home, with the "Mother of the Crusade," Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, Hillsboro, O., are to be present.

THE HOME.

HUMILITY.

The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest—
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor hath humility.

When Mary chose the better part,
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet;
And Lydia's gently-opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet—Fairest and best adorned is she Whose clothing is humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
The most, when most his soul ascends;
Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility.

TOUCHING CHRIST.

I preach a Christ so near you can touch him—touch him with your guilt and get pardon—touch him with your trouble and get comfort—touch him with your bondage and get manumission.
You have seen a man take hold of an electric chain. A man can with one hand take one end of the chain and with the other hand he may take hold of the other end of the chain. Then a hundred persons taking hold of that chain will altogether feel the electric power. You have seen that experiment. Well, Christ with one wounded hand takes hold of one end of the electric chain of love, and with the other wounded hand takes hold of the other end of the electric chain of love and all earthly and angelic beings may lay hold of that chain, and around and around in sublime and everlasting circuit runs the thrill of terrestrial and celestial and brotherly and saintly and cherubic and seraphic and archangelic and divine sympathy. So that if this morning Christ should sweep his hand over this audience and say, "Who touched me?" there would be hundreds and thousands of voices responding, "I! I! I!"—De Witt Talmage.

A REMARKABLE SOUVENIR.

We have received, through a friend, a very remarkable little pamphlet, published by the American Bible Society. It is a souvenir to be distributed at the World's Fair, and contains beautifully printed specimens of 242 languages and dialects in which the Society prints the Scriptures. As one looks through it and sees the strange characters on every page he is oppressed with the thought of the labor and toil represented in these translations. Just recently one of these translations for a rude and savage people was completed after fourteen years' hard work. Others of them cost as much. We laid down the little volume with a deeper sense of the great work of the Bible Society. It is the indispensable ally of the Foreign Mission Board of every denomination. This little volume is a genuine polyglot. It is written that on the day of Pentecost the multitude were confounded because that every man heard the disciples speaking to them in their own language. The wonder is repeated in this little volume.—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

THE GIFT OF SONG.

A touching story is told of a little girl sent by her parents from Spain, during a time of religious persecution there, to take refuge with some friends in England. The vessel was lost on a rock-bound coast during a severe storm, but the little girl was saved through the efforts of some heroic men. She was too young to tell her story, but, by a series of providential events, was brought at last to the house of a friend of her parents just as, released from imprisonment, they arrived in England to seek their long-lost darling. A familiar tune, that the mother had taught to her little girl in former days, became the clew that led to their joyful meeting.

A remarkable incident is that of a Scottish youth, who learned with a pious mother to sing the old psalms that were as household words to them in the kirk and by the fireside. When he grew up he wandered away from his native country, was taken captive by the Turks, and made a slave in one of the Barbary States. But he never forgot the songs of Zion, although he sung them in a strange land and to heathen ears. One night he was solacing himself in this manner, when the attention of some sailors on board of an English man-of-war was directed to the familiar tune of "Old Hundred," as it came floating over the moonlight waves. At once they surmised the truth, that one of their countrymen was languishing away his life as a captive. Quickly arming themselves, they manned a boat, and lost no time in effecting his release. What a joy to him, after eighteen long years passed in slavery!

CHRISTIANITY IN "FLATS."

Persons may make themselves disagreeable by asserting what they call "their rights" on every occasion, or they may make themselves beloved by their thoughtful consideration for others.

A gentleman living in a city "flat" was accustomed to arrange his fire for the night by putting on the coal, piece by piece, with the tongs.

"Why do you do that so noiselessly?" asked a visitor.

"The people down stairs retire very early, and I try not to disturb their dreams."

It was nothing to him that his neighbors chose to go to bed at nine, while he preferred eleven;
he had an undoubted right to rattle coal over their heads as long as he pleased; but he preferred to take such precautions as would leave their rest unbroken.—Youth's Companion.

THE SMALL AND THE GREAT.

One night a man took a little taper out of a drawer and lighted it, and began to ascend a long, winding stair.

"Where are you going?" said the taper.

"Away high up," said the man, "higher than the top of the house where we sleep."

"And what are you going to do there?" said the little taper.

"I am going to show the ships out at sea where the harbor is," said the man. "For we stand here at the entrance to a harbor and some ship far out on the stormy sea may be looking out for our light even now."

"Alas! no ship could ever see my light," said the little taper. "It is so very small."

"If your light is small," said the man, "keep it burning bright and leave the rest to me."

Well, when the man got up to the top of the lighthouse—for this was a lighthouse they were in—he took the little taper, and with it he lighted the great lamps that stood ready there with their polished reflectors behind them. And soon they were burning steady and clear, throwing a great, strong beam of light across the sea. By this time the lighthouse man had blown out the little taper, and laid it aside. But it had done its work. Though its own light had been so small, it had been the means of kindling the great lights in the top of the lighthouse, and these were now shining brightly over the sea, so that the ships far out knew by it where they were,
and were guided safely into the harbor.—*Rev. Dr.
Macrae.*

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

It was a dark, wintry night, such as only the slums of London can boast. The little flickering flame in the oil lamp, which at its best poorly lighted the narrow street, had been blown out by the wind, leaving that portion of the great city shrouded in darkness that was almost Plutonian.
Trees swayed in the wind, and the time-worn sign in front of the "Wayside Tavern" creaked with a sound that was anything but musical.
The loungers in the bar-room of the old tavern had been few that night, and the surly bar-tender had long since closed the doors and gone to bed.
Numerous town clocks all over the city chimed the hour of midnight, and to all appearances the tavern was quite dark throughout; but if one walked around the building to where the rickety outside staircase leads to the top story, there could be seen a faint light in the room next the landing.

In this room sits a woman diligently sewing by the glimmering light of a candle. Her hair is plentifully sprinkled with gray and her face is set with deep lines that betoken years of care and trouble. As she sews she seems to be thinking about something, and now and then a tear falls on the coarse cloth and her hand trembles so that she can scarcely thread the needle. With her it was

Work—work—work!
From weary chime to chime;
Work—work—work,
As prisoners work for crime!
Band and gusset and seam,
Seam and gusset and band,
Till the heart is sick, and the brain benumbed,
As well as the weary hand.

What a sad lot is hers, and the future seems to bring not even a glimmer of better things. She is thinking about her wayward son who has gone to seek his fortune in America. How much happier she used to feel when he was working in London, and they lived together in their little cottage before he fell in with evil companions and took to drinking. It has been two years since he left home, and how hard she has worked to earn enough money to cross the ocean and try to find him.

"Perhaps Larry is dead," she sometimes would say to herself, "but then the Lord takes care of his children, good and bad."

The town clocks are striking one, and the candle is nearly burnt out when she lays aside her work and looks about the barely-furnished room.
There on the table is her Bible, the light of her life. She must not neglect to read that, although the hour is late and the brain and hand are tired. So she reads a Psalm and then kneels down by the side of her rude cot to pray. She remains upon her knees a long time, pleading with the Father to restore her lost son, to touch his heart that night, to turn him from the error of his ways, and bring him back to her.

Meanwhile, outside the darkness has grown black and the wind stronger than before. Down the narrow street quietly walk two men, one carrying a dark lantern. They go around the old tavern and then cautiously ascend the old staircase. The noise made by the creaking of their heavy boots can not be distinguished from the noise made by the wind, and then, too, the sleepy policeman on this beat is three or four blocks away. So they reach the landing safely.

"I guess this is the place," said one; "I heard Jake, the bar-tender, say that the old woman keeps her money under her pillow, and we'll just relieve her of it."

"Hush," said the other, "she hasn't gone to bed yet. She's saying her prayers, I guess.
We'll wait till she gets through."

By this time the candle had gone completely out, and the room was in utter darkness, so one of the men put his ear to a hole in the window.
"Now I'll hear what the old lady is sayin'," said he.

The prayer was fervent, and she became so much in earnest that she raised her voice:

"Kind Father, to-night my boy is wandering I know not where. He has fallen into evil, and oh, Father, to-night convict him of sin, and let him know that his poor old mother is praying and weeping for him. He is weak, O Lord, but thou art mighty; rescue him and bring him back."

"What's the matter, Larry? You look as if you had seen a ghost."

"Oh, Jim," said he, "that's my mother prayin' for me. What a wretch I have been; but I can't go in and ask her forgiveness with the smell of liquor on my lips. Let's go down without making any noise."

Larry's companion could see that he was very much affected, and so he obeyed without a word.

"Just think," said Larry, "I almost robbed my own mother."

Silently those two men walked back to their wretched lodgings in another part of the great city. Much to his companion's surprise, Larry refused to drink with him when they reached their abode, but went at once to bed with a troubled conscience. The hand of the Lord had touched his heart and convicted him of sin. He thought of how he had taken his mother's hard-earned money and lied to her about going to America.
And oh, his life since then; what a record of sin and shame!

Not a moment did Larry sleep that night. The power of God was working in his heart, and he felt the most bitter remorse. It seemed an age to him till morning; but when at last it came, he dressed himself with more care than usual and started for the "Wayside Tavern," before any of his evil companions were out of bed.

When he reached his mother's door she was just putting on her bonnet, preparatory to setting out to deliver some coats which she had made for a large factory. He tapped lightly on the door, and in a moment she opened it and threw her arms around Larry's neck and wept for joy. It was a touching scene, that meeting of the godly mother and her unfaithful, wayward son.

"I knew the Lord would answer my prayer," said she.

"The Lord was not the only one who heard your prayer, mother," said he.

Then followed the story of the night before. It was a dreadful thing to think that he came so near robbing his own mother while she was praying for him; but she readily forgave him, and that day there was not a happier woman in London than Larry's mother.

The young man soon found work in a drygoods store, and by dint of great saving, the mother and son were able after a while to buy back the little cottage that had once been theirs. To say that Larry was never tempted to return to his old life of sin would be putting it too strongly, but he always thought of his praying mother and did not yield to the enticement of those who had once been his evil companions. "The way of the transgressor is hard;" "but the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Lutheran Evangelist.

THE SECRET OF FASCINATING.

Doubtless, thousands of young people, and not a small number of old ones, wish every day of their lives that they could learn the secret of fascinating others by means of their graceful, exquisite manners. The secret is an open one. It is so easy to learn that it lies all neglected by the wayside, while they who would give their dearest treasure to find it pass unknowing.

It is only this: Fill your heart with good will to everybody, and then practice at all times the best manners you know, particularly at home. If you begin at home, this charming manner will, so to speak, get settled on you and never leave you. Be just as polite to your sister as you would to your best girl. Strive to gain the good will of mother, father and brothers and sisters and children, exactly as you strive to gain good will abroad.

There is no place for practicing manners like the home circle; no place, permit me to say, where it will be so appreciated. It will be a cultivation of heart, mind and body, this endeavor to feel nothing but affection for the people at home, and treat them as though they were worthy of as much consideration at your hands as if they were the president and his family. So they are worthy. Then from the home will float out around you those sweet, magnetic influences which will draw the hearts of mankind toward you.—Jenness Miller Monthly.

A HOSPITAL INCIDENT.

It was a railroad accident which sent Johnny to the hospital (for he was a railroad boy), and his mother lived in Kansas. In coupling or uncoupling a car, or in some other way, he fell between the wheels, and had to lose both his legs, just below the hips.

He was a fine, healthy boy of sixteen or so, and bore bravely the "inevitable." I often talked to him, and carried him reading matter, which he devoured eagerly.

He was always cheerful and responsive; he wanted no pity, and took no "pooring." He grew better, fast, and seemed anxious to be out and about again, that he might "do something."

"I am so glad it was not my hands," said he, holding up two lusty, strong arms; "for, now I can get a pair of stumps for the legs, and with my hands I can support my mother in Kansas."

Bless the boy! heroes grow out of such boys, and make opportunities sublime.

In due time he left, and, doubtless, has gone to find his mother in Kansas.—Faith's Record.

THE HOME—HER ATTRactions.

She has no dazzling charms, no classic grace,
Nothing, you think, to win men's hearts about her;
Yet, looking at her sweet and gentle face,
I wonder what our lives would be without her.

She has no wish in the great world to shine;
For work outside a woman's sphere no yearning;
But on the altar of home's sacred shrine
She keeps the fire of pure affection burning.

We tell our griefs into her patient ear;
She whispers "Hope!" when ways are dark and dreary;

The little children like to have her near,
And run into her open arms when weary.

Her step falls lightly by the sufferer's bed;
Where poverty and care abound she lingers;
And many a weary heart and aching head
Find gifts of healing in her tender fingers.

She holds a helping hand to those who fall,
Which gently guides them back to paths of duty!
Her kindly eyes, with kindly looks for all,
See in uncomeliest souls some hidden beauty.

Her charity would every need embrace;
The shy and timid fear not to address her;
With loving tact she rightly fills her place,
While all who know her pray that heaven may bless her!

TEMPERANCE.

A CALL FOR SERVICE.

A captain at evening roll-call said to his company: "Soldiers, I am ordered to detail ten men for a very dangerous service, but of the greatest importance to the army in the coming battle. I have not the heart to pick the men, for the chances are against their ever coming back. But if there are ten men in the company who will volunteer for this service, they may step two paces to the front." As the captain ceased speaking that whole line stepped two paces forward and stood there with every man in his place, and ranks even as before. The captain's eyes were dim and his voice faltered as he said: "Soldiers, I thank you; I am proud to be captain of such a company." Fellow workers, just such a spirit should move the whole prohibition line. We wage a war fiercer than that of bullet and bayonet, and far more vital to human good. It is a struggle whose echoes reach the stars and enlist the hosts in heaven. Step to the front and give yourselves, your powers and your means to stay the enemy of God and man.—Frances E. Willard.

A CHALLENGE.

I hold that the following propositions are incontrovertible:

1. The liquor trade wars on babes and mothers, causes insanity and damns souls.
2. The law upholds the liquor trade.
3. License parties uphold this wicked law.
4. The bishop, elder, preacher, deacon or layman who votes the ticket of any license party, upholds the wicked law, upholds the liquor trade.
5. Therefore, those professed Christians are engaged in warring on babes and mothers, causing insanity and damning souls.

If the above propositions contain any falsehood or fallacy, show me wherein and I will forever after hold my peace. But if these propositions are true they are God's truth lying right at the very foundation of righteousness in both church and state.—D. Bond, in the N. Y. Voice.

FEEDING THE CROCODILE.

Two travelers from the western world, one an excellent Liberal, and the other an estimable Conservative, found themselves one day on the bank of the Ganges, in India. While they stood in friendly discourse, they observed a native woman approaching, carrying an infant. She seemed to have a deep affection for the child, for she lavished kisses and caresses upon it as she drew near the margin of the sacred stream. Arrived at the water's edge, she looked about eagerly, and at length a moving object in the river seemed to rivet her attention. The object drew near, and proved to be an enormous crocodile, with wicked eyes, and hungry, cavernous jaws. The horrified travelers suddenly divined the woman's purpose. She was about to throw her child to the voracious monster as an act of worship! At once they rushed forward and intercepted her. Then they expostulated with her, pointing out how wicked was the deed she was contemplating. "It may be as you say," replied the women, "but if so, why do you practice the same custom in your own land?" "We do nothing of the sort!" replied the travelers. Such a deed would be regarded as child-murder, and would be punished with death in any Christian country. Besides, we have no crocodiles in Canada!" "No; but I am informed that you have a monster far more terrible, called the licensed liquor traffic, and that you feed it with the bodies and souls of your children—and that for one child sacrificed here in the Ganges, you sacrifice a thousand to your crocodile. Is this true?" And the two travelers, who were conscious that they had always supported the license parties, bent their heads in shame, and were silent.

MORAL.—Comparisons between heathenism and civilization are odious.—Hamilton (Canada) Temperar.

A GOOD WAY TO TREAT.

Mr. Perry was a Southern gentleman, exceedingly polite, and also a very temperate man. One day he met an old acquaintance, who called out: "Hello, Perry! I was just going in to get a drink. Come in and take something."

"Thank you," said Perry, "I don't care for anything."

"But," persisted the other, "come in and take something just for sociability's sake."

"I want to be sociable," answered Perry; "I am anxious to be sociable, but I can't drink with you."

"All right," growled the friend. "If you don't want to be sociable, I'll go without drinking."

The two men walked silently along for a minute or two, the sociable man in a state of great irritation, until Perry suddenly halted in front of a drug store.

"I am not feeling well, to-day," said he, with a pleasant smile, "and I think I'll go in here and get a dose of castor oil. Will you join me?"

"What!" exclaimed the other, "in a dose of castor oil?"

"Yes, I'll pay for it."

"E hue!" cried the sociable man with a very wry face. "I hate the stuff."

"But I want you to take a glass of the oil with me just to be sociable, you know."

"I won't do it."

"Indeed, my friend," said Perry, gravely, "your sociable whisky is just as distasteful to me as my sociable oil is to you. Don't you think I have as much reason to be offended with you as you have with me?"

The sociable man saw the point; and it would be money, health and morals saved if the lesson could be firmly implanted in the mind of every young man in the land.—Anonymous.

UNION OF LIQUOR AND MONEY POWER.

This liquor power is to-day the strong right arm of the money power. It enjoys greater privileges than are accorded to any other combination of capital on the American continent. This may appear to be a broad assertion, in view of the privileges accorded to railroad and other combinations, but the Advocate has amply demonstrated it to be true. It is the most powerful, if it is not the most gigantic, of capitalistic combines of the day, and it is beyond question the most dangerous, because the most unscrupulous and determined. It is absolute nonsense to talk or think of making a successful contest against the capitalistic combines that have been and still are ruling this country, and not include among them the liquor combine—the most dangerous one among them all. Until our people are ready to grapple with this hydra-headed monster, they may as well save the effort they are directing against plutocracy and devote it to such faithful services of their masters as will secure the best indulgences it may be possible for them to obtain. Nothing but absolute blindness can prevent a recognition of this fact. The only question upon which there can be a rational difference of opinion relates to the plan of assault—the method by which we shall propose to throttle the monster and deprive him of his power.—The Advocate (People's Party).

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The coming of the Messiah. Vs. 1-3 "Behold, I will send my messenger"—John the Baptist, who prepared the way for Christ's earthly ministry by stirring up the people to repentance. So in the divine, as in the natural, order of things there must be a work of preparation, and the Lord has different messengers who go before him to prepare his way in the hearts of nations and of individuals. Pestilence and famine, and stormy winds, are stern-visaged John the Baptists, calling the people with a loud voice to repentance. Clearing a way through the wilderness is rough work. So the trials which break up our fallow ground and prepare us to bring forth the fruit of the Spirit are repellant to the flesh; but let us be careful how we receive these messengers of God. There are lowlands of spiritual sloth to be filled up with earnest work; there are mountains of unbelief to be leveled; crooked ways of sin to be made straight, and rough ways of selfishness and ill-temper to be made smooth, before he can come to our hearts as to his temple. "Whom ye seek . . . which ye delight in," refers to the general expectancy among the Jews of a coming Deliverer. But they made up their minds to have him come in a certain way, and rejected him because he came in another and very different one. So our Lord's second coming will be sudden, and it is not enough to simply expect it, or even to take delight in the hope. We must be prepared to receive him, whether he come at cock-crow or in the silent watches of the night. "Who may abide the day of his coming?" "He will thoroughly purge his floor," said John the Baptist; but, severe as was the testing time which accompanied the introduction of Christianity into the world, we have reason to believe that his second appearance will be even more of a sifting process. Are we willing that Christ should come, either personally or in a wider sense? Then we must be willing that he should search us, and not shrink from his refining fires of persecution and trial.

2. God's people purified. Vs. 3, 4. We can no more do the work of sanctification for ourselves than we can the work of salvation. Christ must do both. "He shall purify the sons of Levi." Every Christian becomes not only "a child of the King," but by virtue of his royal blood, a priest as well, the two offices being in ancient times generally united. The way into the holy of holies is always open to him to come and personally present his offerings. But as the Jewish priests were commanded to "be clean to bear the vessels of the Lord," so we as Christians must be "purged from all filthiness of the flesh" before our offering can be "pleasant" to the Lord. How can a tobacco-user expect that his body can be a temple for the Holy Spirit, when purity in all things is the first condition demanded?

3. The judgments of God against a back-slidden people. Vs. 5-9. The Israel of Malachi's time had grossly apostatized, and had given place to all the vices of heathenism. There were sorcerers among them,—men and women who used magical arts and consulted familiar spirits. There are many such to day; and people who call themselves Christians seek these mediums and fortune-tellers to gain information about the future or their dead relatives. Christ, at his second coming, will be a swift witness against all who practice these arts. It was an "adulterous generation." One of the heaviest indictments against them as a people was unfaithfulness to the marriage covenant. A man could treacherously put away the wife of his youth for the most unworthy reason. It is so now. Frequent and easy divorces, unregulated by any uniform, righteous law, is one of the most crying sins of our land. So is also false swearing, judicial and extra-judicial. The oaths of Masonry are false in many ways. If their barbarous penalties are a mere form of words which are never meant to be enforced, it is calling on God to witness a mockery and a farce. But the Lord's coming will be as the lightning's flash, lighting up the darkest recesses of the secret chambers. He will be a swift witness against the oppressor. Our land is full of oppression, under various forms, of the weak and helpless. The Negro, the Indian, the Chinese, are crying instances. "And fear not me," saith the Lord of hosts. A nation which fears God will have upright legislators, just laws, and a strong arm with which to enforce them. "Even from ancient days" Israel had wandered from God's ordinances. They had added the insolence of hypocrisy to their many other sins. They answered to all expostulation, "Wherein have we robbed thee?" while they withheld the tithes and offerings, and the temple worship languished in consequence. They offered worthless sacrifices, and called God's service a weariness, as many do now; and so the whole nation was cursed with blight and famine. Withholding from the Lord his just dues never pays.

4. A blessing promised. Vs. 10-12. National prosperity, to be real and enduring, must rest on a basis of national piety. It is always right and safe to trust the Lord. Every promise he makes to us will bear proving. "Bring in all the tithes into the storehouse," the unused talents, the neglected opportunities, as well as the gold and silver, and see if the Lord will not indeed pour us out such a blessing that our hearts will not have room to receive it.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.

—A chain of missions has been established across Central Africa from ocean to ocean, and all in eighteen years. The Church of England Mission took the country around Lake Victoria Nyanza, the London Missionary Society took Lake Tanganyika and the neighboring country, the Baptist missionaries established themselves on the Congo, two Presbyterian missions went to Lake Nyassa, and the Universities Mission took Zanzibar and the country inland as far as Nyassa, on which they have a good-sized steamer. The London Missionary Society has one on Tanganyika, and the Baptists and the Livingstone Inland Mission (an American society) have steamers on the Congo. And a railroad is certain to follow. Several new missions have been founded within a year, prominent among which is one by the Church of Scotland, known as the East African Scottish Mission, with a center at Kibwezi on the high road from Mobasa to Uganda.

BAPTIST.

—The anniversaries, at Denver, in May, were well attended and much interesting denominational intelligence was made public, through the official reports: The Women's Home Mission Society's report showed that by cash donations from the various States there were the following amounts in the various funds: For general work, $50,849 48; for training school, $9,863.61; for building, $6,148 14; for furnishing, $198 37; making a grand total of $67,059.60. The disbursements for the various work of the year amounted to $63,334 40. The balance on hand at the end of the fiscal year, March 31, was $3,724 20.

The publication society reported total receipts to the publishing, Bible and missionary departments of $683,083 49, of which sum $534,529.93 were for the book department. During the year 35,000,000 copies of books, tracts and periodicals have been published, 33,526 copies of the Scriptures circulated by the Bible department.

The report of the missionary work, and of the chapel car Evangel, was very cheering. The 124 missionaries and workers have traveled 524,769 miles, distributed 438,439 pages of tracts, visited 44,641 families, baptized 642 persons, constituted 49 churches, organized 330 Sunday-schools, besides much other evangelical effort.

The report of the Missionary Union—foreign department—shows that fifty-two, in all, have gone forth under the auspices of the Union to foreign lands. The annual review includes the fields of Burma, Assam, India (Telugu mission), China, Japan and Africa. The European missions referred to include those in France, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Norway, Russia and Spain. The "general summary" shows that the growth the past year has been thirty-seven missionaries, forty native preachers, seventy-two churches, 5,848 church members, 7,497 scholars in Sunday-schools, 2,404 pupils in boarding and day schools, and $60,910 in contributions from the mission churches. The "grand totals" show 2,070 preachers in foreign lands; 1,531 churches; 12,856 baptized in 1892; 169,729 church members; 85,684 Sunday-school scholars and $305,270 contributed by mission churches.

BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—General conference assembled in Whiteside Co., Ill., May 17, the church being pretty well represented. It was decided to establish a mission in Chicago, under charge of A. L. Myers of Freeport, Ill.; also to place evangelists in the field; also to organize home mission districts in States where the number of adherents will warrant it, and press the mission work in those districts. The place selected for the conference of 1894 is Abilene, Kans.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—The Christian Endeavor Convention committee at Montreal, Can., are beginning very actively to prepare for the reception of the great convention in July. Thirty States have already reported their railroad managers and are arranging excursions. No less than 16,200 delegates are booked, and an immense gathering is assured, including representatives from fifteen other States and Canada and from England and Europe, India, Australia, Japan, China and Africa. It may be of interest to know that from Pennsylvania are coming 2,000 delegates, 500 from Massachusetts, 700 from Illinois, 500 from Missouri, 500 from Indiana, 300 from Michigan, 2,000 from New York State, 250 from New Hampshire, 500 from Georgia, 350 from Vermont, 400 from Nebraska, 100 from Texas, 1,000 from Maine, 1,000 from Wisconsin, 400 from Connecticut, 600 from Iowa, 200 from West Virginia, and 150 from San Francisco. The convention will be in session from July 9 to 12, inclusive.

LUTHERAN.

—There is a tendency to union in the Lutheran church as nowhere else. Dr. Jacobs recently published an article in the Independent on the subject of "Denominational Union," in which he speaks of the divided state of the Lutheran church in Germany, from which we must conclude that things could hardly be expected to be better in this country than they are, seeing that our congregations are largely made up of those who come from across the waters. Things are, however, changing for the better. And if it were not for old prejudices which keep us from arranging and holding free conferences with those of other synods, the lines of distinctions would disappear more rapidly, i. e., un-Lutheran doctrines and practices would gradually disappear, and those who honestly accept the Augsburg Confession would gradually unite.—Lutheran Standard.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—A supplementary group of returns from districts throughout the church show some results of revival work during the past winter. The figures, which are from first sources, indicate that the total conversions throughout the church are about 300,000. The total membership of our church in all lands, including probationers, is about 2,500,000. Our revival figures do not include returns beyond the United States. The rate of numerical advance may therefore be estimated readily.

—The annual meeting of the Chicago and North Chicago District (Des Plaines) Camp-ground Association will be held on the grounds Thursday, June 8, to elect trustees and transact other business. Each church is entitled to representation by its pastor and one lay delegate. Pastors are requested to notify their lay delegates.

—Rev. J. W. Wright, of Independence, Kan., was orator for the Grand Lodge of Kansas at its recent session. His address has been published in pamphlet form.

—Rev. Dr. Fawcett, pastor of First church, Chicago, has been invited by the president of the Toronto conference, Rev. George J. Bishop, D.D., to deliver the ordination sermon before that conference, June 11.

—Rev. S. R. Beggs, of Rock River conference, is the oldest conference member in our church. He has been a regular member of a conference for seventy-one years. Bro. Beggs joined the Missouri conference in October, 1822.

—Young people from all parts of the country will attend the great international Epworth League convention at Cleveland. About 250 will go from Chicago in a special train.

REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA.

—Every lover of our church will rejoice at the prosperity of our theological schools, and especially at the fact that they are beginning to meet the demand for ministers. Our theological seminaries are better equipped and endowed, and more young men are enrolled as students than ever before. As evidence of this we need but say that the number of graduates from the various seminaries of our church this spring was forty-eight. Of these, twenty-three came from Lancaster, fifteen from Ursinus, five from Heidelberg, and five from the Mission House. Certainly this is cause for rejoicing and thankfulness.—Christian World.

—The recent General Synod was held at Reading, Pa. The Home Mission report for the past three years shows that the church is supporting 136 missions in various parts of the United States. Efforts are being made to introduce mission work among the Hungarians and Poles in the United States. Applications from colonies in New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Canada have been made to the board for missionaries capable of speaking the Hungarian tongue. The Home Mission Board has organized church building funds of $500 each. At the 1890 synod there were nine, while at present there are twenty-four, nearly all of which are loaned to missionaries. Efforts are being made to raise $15,000, to be used as special funds. In the mission churches there are 157 Sunday schools and 15,749 scholars, teachers and officers. The missions have raised $27,116 for benevolence, and $233,946 toward their own support. The church at large has contributed $124,921 for home missions.

SECRET SOCIETIES
Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican.—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati.—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the veil of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago.—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald.—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston.—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio.—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1868.—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine.—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb., 1877.—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonials, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald.—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York.—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

HOME AND HEALTH.

RENOVATING OLD FURNITURE.

Old furniture may often be renovated so as to look well by exercising a little ingenuity and spending a very small amount of money. For twenty-five cents a yard you may get choice designs of the pretty French cretonnes in artistic colorings. With this coverings may be made which will last until you can afford to have better. And these can be easily made at home. As they wash well allowance must be made for shrinkage. First pin the material on the chair or sofa just as the original covering is put on, and be sure to cut large enough. Pasted the binding over these seams and stitch firmly, and you have a neat, pretty covering which will take the place of the plain or striped linen cover, and will not soil so easily.—St. Louis Republic.

A NOVELTY FOR THE PIANO.

A novelty for the piano, which will probably prove very popular, has just been imported from across the water. It is a well-known fact that pianos are better for being kept open. The dust which falls into the piano is not as detrimental to the instrument as are the sudden changes in temperature induced by closing and opening. Who has not opened a piano or organ in a comparatively warm room, only to find the keys so cold as to strike a chill to the very center of one's being? All this is very bad; but then so are soiled or dusty piano keys. Some wise woman has devised a scheme by which she may keep her piano open, and at the same time protect her keys. A long ornamental strip of cloth, silk or satin, is made, which covers them up. This strip is lined and embroidered or painted, and is in itself a decoration to the room.

WATERING HOUSE PLANTS.

Much of the success and beauty in the care of home plants depends upon judicious watering. Some varieties of plants require more water than others to attain to their best estate. Although the operation of watering is seemingly simple, yet under some conditions it becomes quite a difficult one, and a correct understanding of the matter becomes of considerable importance. Take geraniums, for instance. When growing with full vigor, with the pots well filled with roots, there is but little danger of giving too much water. Every day will not be too often, if the weather is clear. Take the same plant under different conditions, with but a small number of leaves on it, and recently potted in fresh soil, with but few roots, and watering once a week may be enough for it.

All soft wooded plants growing vigorously require an abundance of water. Plants sparsely supplied with foliage and but few roots require sufficient water only to keep them in healthy condition; then care should be taken not to approach anything like a saturation of the soil.

There are varieties of plants that require but little water. Of this class are the cacti. When at rest, their succulent leaves serve for storing up water sufficient to keep them in healthy condition for a long time.

Deciduous plants, during the time they are without leaves, should not, however, be allowed to get too dry. As the stem and branches evaporate moisture, sufficient should be given at the roots to supply evaporation, else the roots, becoming too dry, will shrivel up and die.

The temperature of the water supplied to plants should be about the same degree as the temperature of the room in which the plants are growing: or, if a little higher, will be a benefit rather than otherwise. Strong, thrifty plants should be given water enough at once to thoroughly saturate the soil. This is better than to apply by dribbles.

During cold weather watering is better done in the morning, as the superfluous moisture gets a chance to evaporate before night.

On afternoons of warm days it is a benefit to growing plants to sprinkle the foliage. It helps to wash off the dust and promote a healthier condition; clean-

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DEGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to dis fellowship secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church, 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. I. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear arraignment of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

FARM NOTES.

TIMELY INFORMATION ABOUT FOWLS.

Many who are building new poultry houses are having wooden floors in them, raised several inches from the ground, to admit of a free circulation of air underneath to prevent dampness. A floor of this kind should be tight, with a covering of three or four inches of dry earth, to be replenished once a month.

Eight to ten females to one male is better than any more or less, as experience shows. This refers to stock that is confined within the limits of a run and carefully bred. Stock running at large on the farm may increase the number by six or eight, but this is not breeding with care for the finer points in view.

Poultry breeding without sufficient thought or adequate investigation has been more or less mongrelized, so to speak, in past years, but now it is coming down to a real science and study, the results of which are apparent to any intelligent farmer who has kept several of the finer breeds of poultry.

The Malay Game fowl resembles somewhat the Indian Game, yet is much smaller and inferior to the latter. The Indian Game male weighs from nine to eleven pounds at maturity; females from seven to eight and one-half pounds. They are a neater and more stylish fowl than the Malay and should not be classed with them.

The White Cochon is a pretty farm fowl. It is a clean, noble-looking bird, always attractive because of its massive proportions. Some people do not admire them because of their awkward, lazy movements, while their quaint appearance attracts many to them. They lay quite well and make excellent table poultry. On some farms they have the preference over any other breed.

If the many broken-down men of our large cities could be induced to retire to the country, and enjoy the pleasures and health of such a life, and raise fruits and poultry for the markets, even though much harder work than that of a clerkship or similar confining occupation, they would never return to the latter occupation after a year's experience.

Bronze turkeys still lead the procession in Turkeydom, and many farmers last season have demonstrated that they can raise them, and that the farm is the place to do so. Turkeys require great care, as every one who has kept them must admit, but they can be reared just as well as any poultry-yard fowl we have, if this one point is observed. Carelessness is at the bottom of most of our non-success.—American Agriculturist.

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

There is profit in raising good oats. There is very little, if any, in raising poor ones.

Hot new milk given four times a day is good for diarrhoea in calf. Give a pint at a time.

Horses will not drink more water than is good for them, if they are watered frequently.

If a colt has white, scurvy spots on the skin, apply carbolic acid mixed with six times its quantity of glycerine.

Never force a horse with colic to move around. It is cruel and does no good. The quieter the animal can be kept the better.

A biting horse is a dangerous nuisance, and yet the habit is generally contracted as the result of teasing the colt—a very bad, unprofitable business.

A good saddle horse on the farm is a convenience. Such an animal can often be used, with comfort, where now a carriage is brought into requisition.

Unless a running stream can be kept pure, the farm would be better off without it. The owner of many a dead animal can attribute his loss to a polluted running stream.

When a horse discharges a thin, watery substance from the nose the animal has a cold or catarrh. Syringe the nose with warm water in which there is enough carbolic acid to give it a slight odor; or with a strong, warm decoction of tobacco. Feed warm bran mash.—Farmers' Voice.

COW PEA CULTIVATION.

For cow peas the ground should be plowed after corn planting and made as fine as possible. At the experiment stations the planting is done in June. Use the harrow liberally. Plant about half as far apart as corn rows and about two and a half inches deep in this climate; use a bushel of seed to the acre. They are ripe enough to cut for feed in from fifty to seventy days—they are then about half ripe. Cut and cure like clover. All kinds of stock are fond of them, and they are rich in nutriment, but if fed unmixed with grass be sparing at first, till cattle become accustomed to them. They can be threshed like other grain, except if intended for seed. A machine breaks them too much.

MUTTON-GROWING IN AMERICA.

Each year this country is becoming more and more a mutton-growing country, and the sheep kept are of the English breeds, which have been reared for over a century on turnips and marigolds during the winter; and if we are to maintain the health of these sheep and keep up their breeding propensities we must, to some extent, follow the English method of feeding. England feeds but sixteen bushels of grain to her animals, while we in America feed forty-seven bushels. England has the reputation of producing the finest mutton in the world, and her flocks produce the largest yearly lamb crops of any nation in the world.

GROWTH OF THE USE OF THE SOUND DISCS FOR DEAFNESS.

No Question Raised or Doubts Entertained in Medical Circles as to Their Efficiency.

In a number of Medical Journals there have recently appeared several interesting articles, as to the value, and practicability of the Sound Discs invented by H. A. Wales, who has an office at 605 Ashland Block, Chicago. From data collected from men who may be looked upon, each as an expert in the treatment of diseases of the ear, it is learned that the Sound Discs are applicable only to cases of partial deafness, and do not in any way take the place of an ear trumpet, but that in those cases where the hearing is but partially defective they have been very successfully used. As there can be no harmful effects from their use, they are considered an important addition to the medical profession. Aurists have been the first to feel the beneficial results of this invention, and in view of such facts they consider it a part of wisdom to say nothing to discourage their use, as to do so would ultimately be a great impediment to the progress already made towards the relief of this most obstinate affliction. The public themselves are most profoundly interested in the progress and success that has already followed the use of this simple invention.

Tobacco Users Smile Sometimes when told how tobacco hurts them; sometimes they don't, because shattered nerves, weak eyes, chronic catarrh, lost manhood tell the story. If you are a tobacco user, want to quit, post yourself about NO-TOBACCO, the wonderful, harmless, guaranteed tobacco-habit cure, by sending for Book titled: "Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke your Life Away," mailed free. Druggists sell NO-TOBACCO.—Ad. THE STERLING REMEDY CO., Box 655, Indiana Mineral Springs, Ind.

Remember the Annual Meeting and Conference of Churches, June 20.

The fourteen banks which failed in Australia owed to their depositors as follows: Colonial, $283,490,000; in Great Britain, $134,745,000; total, $418,235,000. The panic has ended, but the object-lesson which it taught still remains.

"Father," asked a bright boy, "Where do we get our fashions from?" "From New York." "And where do the New Yorkers get them?" "From England." And where do the English get them?" "From Paris, which furnishes them for the whole world." "And where do the Parisians get them?" "From the devil, my dear, just where they get the boasted 'Continental Sunday' which they are striving to force upon us."

The Young Men's Christian Association of Sharpsburg, Pa., recently brought upon itself the maledictions of the secret, oath-bound fraternities in that vicinity, by permitting so good a minister of the Gospel as Rev. Dr. David McAllister to lecture in its audience room on a special occasion. The doctor's offense was a scathing review of the evils perpetrated by the lodges. He must have hit them pretty hard, judging from the denunciation poured upon him in the Sharpsburg Herald, which, like the Masons, has no argument in their favor but personal abuse.

The American Tyler (Detroit) boasts of the power of Freemasonry to settle all religious, political and social controversies by saying that they must cease. Yet it is evident that to-day Freemasonry is not "saying" these things; or, if it is, that it does not possess the power of which it boasts. If it has the force of character to make the world better than it is, it should exercise it. And a fearful responsibility rests upon it if it can perform this glorious work, and does it not! "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Notwithstanding the strength which Mr. Gladstone and his adherents have manifested in pushing the Irish Home Rule bill towards completion in the British Parliament, the opposition has latterly resorted to political tactics to obstruct final action upon it. This prolonged delay is due directly to numerous amendments to the bill, and, it is reported, the patience of the Irish members and a number of the Liberals is apparently exhausted. There is a strong demand for the passage of the bill at the present session, but the opposition in Parliament is supplemented by that of Orangemen and "Unionists," at Belfast and elsewhere, and, especially among the latter, the bill is bitterly denounced.

That City Marshal Mason of Decatur, Ill., should have been furiously assaulted, kicked and disabled by a lawless mob in the court house, while attempting to prevent the brutal murder of a Negro prisoner before his trial for an alleged serious crime, is another indication of increasing barbarity in communities which have hitherto borne a reputation for respectability and quietness. The mob, having placed the marshal in a helpless condition, forced open the doors of the jail, took out the Negro, and massacred him. Now there is a prospect that outraged justice may be again defeated because numerous prominent citizens, men of influence in the community, were participants in the lynching of the Negro; and it is stated that money for their defence will be raised, should any be indicted.

Tsui Kwo Yin, Chinese Ambassador to the United States, has addressed a letter to Col. Blanton Duncan, in which he says, referring to the Geary Chinese Exclusion law: "By the cablegram lately received from my government I am instructed to protest strongly against the enforcement of the act and adopt a firm attitude in the adjustment and settlement of pending difficulties. However, I am able to say that the present administration is not pushing matters to extremes but still has regard for the maintenance of mutual friendship and is endeavoring to observe the treaty stipulations of the two nations. There is now no alternative left to me but to wait for the final development of the pending question." Here the matter rests; but it is noticeable that while the spirit of the Ambassador's letter is mild, its firmness is that of an offended dignitary biding his time. The end is not yet.

The revival, quite recently, of the secret, oath-bound and pernicious KuKlux at Brookhaven, Mississippi, under its new name of White Caps, was suddenly squelched by the energy and bravery of Judge Chrisman and his adherents in that State. This pestiferous white organization had for its object the brutal persecution of the Negro—as if he had not already been sufficiently tormented under Southern domination!—and even went to the length of defying the courts of justice which were defending the Negro in his rights. Believing that they had the sentiment of the people of the South behind them for support in their diabolism, the White Caps had the audacity to defy judges, courts and governors. In this spirit they menaced Judge Chrisman, and endeavored to intimidate him, but his summary methods of dispensing justice to them proved a salutary lesson, and they retired, covered with defeat.

A ludicrous story is told of a country justice, who, in rendering his judgment in a case before him, actually overruled a prior decision of the United States Supreme Court, as not being "good law" in his jurisdiction! Quite as ridiculous was the action of a judge in a State court in Indianapolis, a few days ago, who refused to sanction an order of the Federal court, and defied its jurisdiction—virtually refusing to allow the case to be withdrawn from his own court. The remarks of the Federal Judge are to the point. Addressing the attorneys in the case, he said: "It is the duty of attorneys to obey the court. It was your place to obey and not to go ahead with the case in the State court. By a recent ruling I decided that this court had jurisdiction in the case, and I will not permit any attorney to practice in my court who thus disobeys its orders. When a court and an attorney get into a quarrel the court usually comes out ahead."

Shall we ever hear the last of brutal mob-murders? Here is one of recent occurrence, told by the Inter-Ocean, that cannot be equaled for barbarity outside of the Cannibal Islands or the South. At Columbia, S. C., a colored man named Denmark was suspected of having outraged a white girl; but when arrested and brought to her for identification, she declared that he was not the man who had assaulted her. That should have ended it, so far as he was concerned. He was clearly entitled to release. But the mob concluded to lynch him anyway, the Governor of the State upholding them in it. The poor fellow was strung up on the ground that some black man ought to be lynched for the crime, and in the absence of the guilty one the next best thing was to make a vicarious sacrifice of some other representative of the colored race. When it comes to vicarious lynching, to appease the thirst of a mob for blood, what Negro in the South is safe?

The increase of crime and the declension of vital Christianity are too obvious for denial, and too alarming to be overlooked with indifference. What does it indicate when in the State of New York the number of criminals under sentence now or quite recently for offences against the public welfare aggregated eighty-six women and 3,800 men? What does it indicate when two different churches, in a closely settled community in that State, as noted by the editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, had eleven men and about sixty women in the congregation on a certain Sabbath? Surely the fault is not in the Christian religion. Where does it rest? Has the following statement from the Index, a local Methodist paper, published at Sanborn, Iowa, any significance in this connection? "The United States pays annually, through all societies, $5,000,000 for the salvation of heathendom. The same country pays annually $6,000,000 for the support of its dogs." If this is true, no comment is necessary.

RELIGIOUS LEGISLATION.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Perhaps no clause of the Constitution has been subject to more misapprehension than the First Amendment, which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting a religious establishment, or prohibiting the free exercise of religion."

1. It is manifest that the men who framed it did not mean to disparage religion as one of the great moral forces that control society and influence legislation. They did not mean to have it implied that it was not the right and duty of all men, and, under all circumstances, to be guided by religious considerations. To have held such a theory would have been to discard all the teachings of history and to have done violence to the deepest convictions of mankind. Whatever may have been their personal opinions, they had too much respect for their fellow-men to array themselves against a well-nigh universal sentiment. Nor had they an idea of religion as mere sentiment, and as something dissociated from conduct; for whether we consider religion in the limited sense of Christianity, or in the more general sense of obligation to the Supreme Ruler, as taught by nature, it always has been, and doubtless always will be, the basis of morality and the foundation of all legitimate civil government.

That "the powers that be are ordained of God," in the sense that they are intended, in some limited degree, to represent his justice and enforce his law, has the endorsement of the wise and good in all lands and in all time. When Balaam, the son of Bosor, who taught Israel to sin, declared that "to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly before God" constituted the sum of man's obligations, he affirmed what necessarily commends itself to all men as a moral axiom. Thus our failure to obey the truth, did not invalidate its authority. All religions, in greater or less degree, recognize this same principle; and even such pronounced infidels as Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll insist on natural law and demand that it shall be made the basis of social and municipal legislation.

It is doubtless true that not until the time of Christ were the principles of divine law so fully understood, or so strictly enforced, as since then; yet it was no new truth, but rather a re-statement of the old, when our Saviour made the sum of human obligation to consist in supreme love to God and equal love to our fellow-men, and that this divine law is binding under all possible circumstances. It is also true that the world owes mainly to Christianity whatever it has of true civil liberty, of justice and philanthropy.

Were it now possible to eliminate from our legislative and social systems the pervading forces of Christianity, the result would be barbarism of an unspeakable monstrosity. It would give us the intelligence of the nineteenth century, prompted by the keenest instincts, and unrestrained by any considerations of moral obligation.

None knew these things better than the men who framed our organic law; and to suppose that they intended to form a government that should represent purely secular ideas, and in which the principle of expediency should be wholly dissociated from religious obligations, is to suppose that they intended to do violence to the moral sense of mankind. If, indeed, they did frame such a monstrosity, it is high time that it should be repudiated as something intrinsically impractical and void.

2. They did not mean that the religions of heathendom, such as the worship of Juggernaut, or the Fetichism of Africa, were to be regarded with equal consideration with Christianity. While they were justly tolerant of all error that did not manifest itself in outward immorality, they doubtless thought of Christianity as the ideal religion, and regarded its teachings as the standard by which all other religions were to be judged. They used the term "religion" in the conventional sense in which we use it to-day, and as meaning the Christian system.

3. They did not mean that Christianity should not have the amplest protection of the government. If they held (as they manifestly did hold), that it constituted the very basis of all morality and of the social compact, they could not have failed to consider its promotion a matter in which the government had an abiding interest. That our earlier national legislators, like their successors, were not always consistent, goes without saying. When they ratified a treaty with Tripoli, in which they affirmed that the United States government was in no sense founded on Christianity, they simply affirmed what was not absolutely true. This no more invalidated the actual facts than did the legalizing of the slave-trade for twenty years invalidate those great principles of human liberty that adorn the Declaration of Independence and the National Constitution. In each case there was the stress of circumstances that, while they did not justify, did much to palliate so grave a departure from consistent conduct.

What they did mean by this constitutional provision was,—

1. That there should not be in America any such great religious establishment as the Church of England, or any of the State churches of the continent. They must have had these distinctly in view and did not desire their reproduction. It seems not to have occurred to them that the States might claim the right that was denied to the national government. As a matter of history State religions still survived for a time and State laws, even to the present, have violated the rights of conscience.

2. They meant to deny to the national government the right to decide questions of religious opinion. They recognized honest differences of conviction as to doctrines and practice among Christians and proposed a free toleration of all such differences. In harmony with this principle of religious liberty, the government has exempted the Society of Friends from the obligation to take oaths in courts of justice or to perform military service. The same principle requires that similar concessions shall be made to all those, however few in numbers, whose interpretations of the Christian Scriptures leads to an honest dissent from the opinions and practice of the majority.

3. They did mean to establish religious liberty—the intrinsic right of all men to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, subject only to the authority of fundamental morality.

Such, then, being the manifest scope of this constitutional provision, it follows that the outcry against "religious legislation" is uncalled for and unjust. Religious legislation, in the sense of discriminating between different kinds of Christians, or of persecution for religious opinions, is indeed condemned by reason and the Constitution. But legislation that is inspired by religion and has for its object the carrying out of Christian principles, is not uncalled for. Such legislation, so far from being oppressive, would be the very antidote for all oppression, and would secure the highest civil and religious liberty. All legislation ought to be religious. To no class of rulers, more than to legislators, comes the admonition, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God."

When Daniel Webster made his famous speech of March 7, 1850, he said that we ought not to prohibit slavery in New Mexico, since it was already excluded by physical laws, and that we did not need to "re-enact the laws of God." This was in marked contrast with his former utterances. Manifestly we ought always, as far as practicable, to re-enact and enforce the laws of God. The fact that New Mexico did not seem adapted to slavery was no good reason why it should not be prohibited. Law cannot make men religious in any true sense, and must come very far short of securing all that God requires; but so far as it goes, it should be in harmony with God's law and have its inspiration in Christianity.

The secular theory of government is indefensible on any but purely atheistic principles. When we recognize the existence of Jehovah we must recognize his authority over nations and all civil rulers.

It is not religious, but irreligious, legislation that we have most to fear. It has been irreligious legislation that has involved us in the crimes of slavery, aggressive war and national complicity with the liquor traffic. It is not by choosing as rulers the men who have cast off all fear of God, and all restraints of religion, that we are to find peace and safety, but rather in the choice of those who reverently recognize his supreme authority, and who humbly obey him.

Oberlin, O.

LETTER TO A HIGHER CRITIC ON ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

DEAR SIR:—I directed your attention to Matt. 25: 46, as a proof of eternal punishment. You reply:

1. That "there must be error in the translation or transcription of those passages which teach eternal punishment." In like manner the Unitarians assume that those passages which teach the doctrine of the divinity of Christ must be erroneous—and they have as good a right to assume that those passages which teach the doctrine of the divinity of Christ are erroneous, as you have to assume that those passages which teach the doctrine of eternal punishment are erroneous. But neither you nor they have a right to assume or suppose error of translation or transcription, in the Scriptures, unless a reading can be produced in the Greek or Hebrew manuscripts different from that of the received text. If the Bible is a book of uncertainties—if this passage, and that, and the other, may be cashiered when they contradict a favorite doctrine, we are completely at sea.

2. That "the testimony of nearly all antiquity is, that Matthew's Gospel was originally written in Hebrew, and, therefore, our Greek version is only a translation." I think it is probable, though by no means certain, that Matthew's Gospel was originally written in Hebrew; but it does not follow that therefore our Greek version is only a translation. He might have written a copy in Hebrew for the Hebrews, and another in Greek for the Grecians or Hellenists, as many suppose he did.

3. That the Latin New Testament in common use in the second century has ad ignem eternum, "to everlasting fire" instead of "to everlasting punishment," in Matt. 25: 46, which (you think) better agrees with verse 41—everlasting fire, meaning the eternity—not of the punishment, but of the fire in which the wicked are consumed. But the Latin New Testament is only a translation, and possesses no more authority than any other translation; nor do I see any inconsistency between "fire" being used in verse 41 and "punishment" in verse 46. The one word denotes the cause, the other the effect.

4. That "supposing kolasis (punishment) to be the word originally employed, that word does not mean torment, but the extinction of life." Now, I contend that in the New Testament it always means torment—never the extinction of life. It is so rendered in 1 John 4: 18: "Fear hath torment." But to say, "Fear hath extinction of life" would be a flat contradiction. Fear implies life and consciousness, as well as mental suffering or torment; but when life is extinct there is no fear. The word, therefore, in this place, must mean suffering or torment; and if it must mean torment in 1 John 4: 18, it has the same meaning in Matt. 25: 46.

That kolasis means torment is confirmed by several synonymous Greek terms, applied in the New Testament to future punishment. The rich man, in hades, says: "I am tormented [odunomai] in this flame," and calls hell "this place of torment [basanos]." Luke 16: 23, 24. It is said of those who persevere in idolatry that "the smoke of their torment [basanismos] ascendeth up for ever and ever." Rev. 14: 11. These Greek words, kolasis, basanos, basanismos and odunomai, are used interchangeably, either as nouns or verbs, and imply torment, or punishment by torment; but no one of them implies annihilation or extinction of life.

5. That "even if it could be proved that kolasis was the word used by Matthew, and that its only meaning is torment, it would not be argument sufficient to overturn the other places," etc. But if it could be proved that kolasis was the word used by Matthew, and if it could be proved that its only meaning is torment, and if it could be proved that the wicked shall not suffer "everlasting torment," it would be "argument sufficient" to prove that Jesus Christ was a liar, and that Matthew has recorded the falsehood.

6. That, according to Dunnegan and Hamilton, apollumi, which is also employed to signify the doom of the wicked, means "to destroy, in the sense of annihilation, but never means torment." I admit that this word does not necessarily imply torment. It is a general term and means destruction of any kind, physical or moral, bodily or mental, temporal or eternal; and may, or may not, imply torment, according to circumstances. But I maintain, that when the word applies to the final condition of the lost it always means torment. In proof of this I produce the testimony of the devils themselves, who must have some experimental knowledge of the meaning of the Word. When Christ expelled the evil spirits out of the demoniacs, they cried out: "Art thou come to destroy us?"—(the same Greek word)—Mark 1: 24. What do the demons mean? Let the demons themselves answer. According to Matt. 8: 29 they say they mean torment; according to Mark 5: 7 they say they mean torment; according to Luke 8: 28 they say they mean torment. Thus, according to the testimony of Matthew, Mark and Luke, the demons declare that destruction in their case means torment; and I would depend more on the experience of the demons and the accuracy of Matthew, Mark and Luke than either Dunnegan or Hamilton.

You admit that the wicked shall suffer for a limited time in the middle state. "What the period of suffering may be," you say, "is not revealed; but when there is persistent rebellion, it must end in death;" and "death," you say, "is employed exclusively to signify insensibility to pain". I suppose it is implied that, if they do not persist in rebellion they will be admitted to heaven when their probation shall have been finished. But from the animus of your letter, I presume if you were appointed governor of hades you would give Jonathan Edwards a hearty scorching in the flames of purgatory before you would admit him to heaven, if, indeed, you would admit him at all.

It is scarcely necessary to notice what has been so often observed, that the word translated "everlasting," in the fifth clause of Matt. 25:46, is the same as that which is rendered "eternal" in the second—denoting that the punishment of the wicked and the happiness of the righteous are of equal duration, as you admit that the word is the same in both instances; but you say "eternal punishment means eternal annihilation—eternal non-existence." But if this be so, the word "eternal" is altogether redundant, as annihilation or non-existence must of necessity be eternal. Besides, punishment ends in the same moment in which annihilation begins. It would be as impossible to punish a nonentity, or being that does not exist, as it would be to punish an abstract idea. The worshipers of the beast and the followers of the false prophet shall not be punished with eternal annihilation; but they shall be TORMENTED FOR EVER AND EVER. Rev. 20:10.

Yours very truly,
Alexander, Iowa. JOHN BROWN.

AN UNEXPECTED TESTIMONY.

The press is rather shy of the subject of secret societies. This makes a word, when it does come, the more refreshing. Such a word dropped into a long editorial, on the need of reform in Connecticut politics, that was lately published in the Hartford Post. The Grange was pointed out as a political danger.

More surprising, if possible, was a paragraph in an article by a regular contributor of the Journalist, the official journal of the International League of Press Clubs.

His article relates to the New York Press Club, and it is in the midst of it that he brings Masonry in as an illustration.

In doing this he says:

"It was two months ago, at a monthly meeting of the Press Club, that I heard a prominent member and ex-officer say, among other things, 'this is not an exchange!' This member is a good, clubbable fellow, who never was much of a newspaper man, and, for years past, has held a very remunerative position under the city government. I have been turning over the remark in my mind ever since, and have not spoken of it until now, because I do not want to come to a wrong conclusion about anything so important as this. Now, when a man joins the order of F. and A. M. he declares that he does not join from any mercenary motive! That is a lie! Understand me, it is a lie, but I firmly believe, an involuntary lie on the part of many, while it is a deliberate lie on the part of many more. It is a law among Masons that a Mason must not persuade a man to join the order. What does the Mason care for the law? Why, he does all he can in the way of persuasion with men of his acquaintance to bring them into his lodge. He pictures the delights and advantages of the order—he tells of the innumerable benefits arising from being a Mason, the charities expended, the benefits in business and the charm it adds to social life. And then the candidate says he has no mercenary motive in joining? Yes, he must—it is no secret—and does he lie? I should say so. There are exceptions, and let every Mason look to it that he is an exception."

That was not written for the Cynosure, but for a higher-priced publication.

It sounds, too, as if it might have been written by a Mason. If so, it is all the more acceptable.

It goes on to apply this to the Press Club, and argue that the Press Club may, properly, and ought to be "an exchange." But that is matter of interest to the Journalist rather than the Cynosure. The illustration is the thing in point here, and that I have given. GRAPHITE.

VALUE OF RELIGIOUS EXAMPLE.

BY M. J. MIDDLETON.

Many years ago there was living in Belfast, Ireland, a large family of young people, who were rich but very trifling and careless. Nine sisters all lived in mere gaiety and folly, never thinking of their souls, or of the Word of God.

About that time, however, God sent a poor but pious girl to live with them as a dressing-maid. As she was much in their presence, the young ladies ridiculed her religion very often; still she did not resent their ridicule, but made it her constant study to be useful and helpful to them, and attentive to all their wants.

After they were in bed at night she would offer to read the Bible to them. At first they soon fell asleep; still she persevered, and was not discouraged. Before very long, though, she was taken sick and died. But the young ladies were not allowed to see her after she was taken sick, although they desired very much to do so, as they had become very fond of her. Soon after her death, the eldest two of the nine young ladies began to feel an interest in Christianity, and soon became followers of Christ and his religion.

In a short time afterwards God so blessed their influence that their sisters were all converted to the Saviour.

The eldest of all ascribed her conversion, by the blessing of God, entirely to the influence of the life and death of this humble, pious maid.

But the blessed effects of her example did not cease there. Another family in the neighborhood, who were their intimate friends, heard that these young ladies were all insane about religion; but when they came to see them about it, expressly to inquire the truth of it, the influence of the converted young ladies was so great that their example became also a blessing to their friends; and ere long both families united together to encourage each other in the service of the Lord, and to promote the interests of his kingdom.

Thus untold blessing and power came out of a single good example, and from a girl poor in this world's goods, but happy in the treasures of heaven, where neither moth nor rust can corrupt.

Who, then, should say of what consequence is my conduct and example? We all exert a greater or less influence, either for evil or for good.

Even a little child often leads whole families to seek the salvation of their souls, and love God above all else. Sometimes even the death of these little ones seems necessary to make the impression of God's love upon his creatures, forming a golden link between the friends on earth and these little lambs safe in the arms of Jesus, where, though dead to us here, they yet speak.

THE JESUITS AND INDIVIDUALISM.

[The following article, contributed by Paul von Hoensbruch to the Preussische Jahrbucher, of Berlin, was translated and condensed expressly for the Literary Digest, published weekly by Funk & Wagnalls, New York City. At the age of twenty-six its author became a member of a Jesuit order, and remained in it for thirteen years. The fact that he has formally withdrawn from the order has created a great sensation in Germany, where, at this time, an attempt is made to repeal the act excluding the Jesuits from the empire.]

Jesuitism undermines, in a certain degree even destroys, the character and individuality of its members. This is most clearly proved by the method used in educating the novices. The daily routine of the novitiate is a continual attack upon the development of individual energy. Not only from hour to hour, nay, for every quarter of an hour, distinct rules regulate his life. The free will, the inclination to any particular occupation, is blunted by such treatment. The novice thinks: what I do now is only for the time being, and the interruption may come at any moment. Thus he learns gradually to do what is commanded without the slightest emotion. Everything is regulated. The walk, the carriage of the head and hands, the look, the motion of the body—literally nothing is left to the free choice of the novice. If he wants a drink of water, he must ask permission to take it; the same if he would make use of paper and pen. Every novice is given a "guardian angel"—that is to say, two novices are bound by the rules to point out to each other their faults. This is aggravated by the so-called "stoning" (lapidatio), which occurs several times a year. The novices kneel down (each one by turns), and the others criticise them. Thus one will say: "N. N. walks too quickly;" another, "he walks too slowly, talks too loudly, or not loudly enough," and similar remarks. The quintessence of this system is the so-called rule of modesty, which contains the following regulations: "The forehead should not be wrinkled, still less the nose; the lips should not be compressed, nor should they be parted; in conversation never look another straight in the eyes, but rather look before you. The hands should always be at rest. Never laugh loudly, do not move your hands, and avoid all show of emotion in your face."

The religious exercises are in a like manner directed against all individuality. On the whole, a pious Catholic sees in the confessional a divine ordinance, and in confessing he submits to the will of the Almighty. Besides, the knowledge that the secret lies hidden under the seal of the holy sacrament takes away the reluctance to confess. With the Jesuit this is quite different. Not only has he no certainty that his confession will be kept secret; he knows that the contents of his confession will influence his future life, the work for which he will be used, the place to which he will be sent. God requires only that man should confess his greatest and worst sins; but the Jesuit Prior requires of the novice a written declaration and description of his whole past life. Not only must he reveal his sins; not only must he speak again of things which have been forgiven long ago in the holy confessional, nay—even his innermost thoughts must be made known! Nor is this all. When the novice has thus once "balanced the accounts of his conscience," he continues this kind of work by a written confession once a week and a resume at the end of each month. When the novitiate is past, and the lay-brother becomes a "scholasticus," this confession is no longer obligatory, but still very advisable. The Jesuit General, Claudius Aquaria, goes so far as to say that secrets told in the sacramental confession must be revealed to the Prior, and may be used by him "for the good of the order." Thus the divine seal of secrecy is broken for the sake of a human institution.

Nor is the scientific education of the Jesuits adapted to foster individual character. In Philological and mathematical studies, greater freedom is allowed than in other studies because the subjects treated of are not very inductive to individualism. This is, perhaps, the reason that the Jesuits have numbered so many great mathematicians and astronomers in their ranks. But doubly strict is the supervision in philosophy, theology, and literature. Thus it happens that, after seven years of study, the young Jesuit has his mind stuffed with the systems and works of men who in reality wield no influence. But his teachers have left him in entire ignorance of the modern giants of thought, whose works he is not allowed to examine, and whose names he never hears. If the Jesuit wishes to extend his knowledge, he cannot, like others, make use of a library at his discretion. If he wishes to read any book, he must first ask permission of his superiors, and they will determine whether his desire is harmful to the order or not.

The thing which dissatisfied me most is the destruction of all patriotism. The Jesuit is educated to look upon all countries and climes alike. Europe or Asia, German or French, republic or monarchy, it is all the same to him! Such an international community, formed out of so many heterogeneous national elements, cannot but destroy the national preference of its members, whether republican or monarchical. I felt this more than others, perhaps, as a German, a Prussian, and a member of an old family which has always been true to the institutions of the country.

WHO MADE IT?

Sir Isaac Newton, a very wise and godly man, was once examining a new and fine globe, when a gentleman came into his study who did not believe in a God and declared the world we live in came by chance. He was much pleased with the handsome globe, and asked:

"Who made it?"

"Nobody," answered Sir Isaac. "It happened here."

The gentleman looked up in amazement at the answer, but he soon understood what it meant.

The Bible says, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Must not that man be a fool indeed who can say this beautiful and wonderful world came by chance, when he knows that not a house or ship or picture, or any other thing in it, but has had a maker?

D. L. MOODY ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Dwight L. Moody is now doing excellent evangelical service in Chicago, preaching the Gospel wherever an opening is made and a crowd can be collected. During the past week his audience-rooms have been in churches, theaters, circus tents and mission-rooms, and wherever he speaks there is sure to be a throng at hand to listen to him.

Mr. Moody is no stranger to Cynosure readers, and his testimony against the lodges is not new; but this seems to be a favorable time for reprinting it, for the benefit of those patrons who have never read it. It is as follows:

IN PHILADELPHIA.

The following extract is from the United Presbyterian Worker, Philadelphia, for April, 1876:
